—Dr. Teal, candidate for joint representative is taking a temporary rest among the friends at Dansville, N. Y., before taking up the active work of the campaign. We hope his vacation will do him good.

—It is laughable to see the way a republican editor can get up an argument. The Butler Record has a correspondent who uses the years 1891, 1892 to show how the McKinley law worked. Then the editor, who differs from him, takes the years 1894, 1895 to disprove it. For Simon pure childishness commend us to the ordinary republican editor.

—The Garrett Herald says:—Lafe Miser, of Waterloo, called at this office last Sunday and made us a very pleasant visit. He said that the republicans of that section are coming over to Bryan and reform at a surprising rate; that the Nodine family of eleven voters, who have all been dyed-in-the-wool republicans have all announced their intention to vote for Bryan. "I never witnessed such a scene before or since," says Joseph Medill, editor of the Chicago "Tribune," who was a member of the convention, and writes an introduction to the report of the speech, describing the occasion.

Such a Game.

The game of base ball at Waterloo Saturday between Auburn and Waterloo, was no one sided affair. The fact the game played a few weeks ago resulted in a score of 16 to 2 in favor of Auburn, led many to believe and in fact, many had conceded that our neighbors would win Saturday's game. But soon after the arrival of the band from Auburn the grand stand filled up and the game was on with Auburn at the bat. Well, the base ball cranks were actually surprised. Three innings were played without a score. Auburn had several good players. Waterloo had an especially good lot of fellows in the field.

The score:

INNINGS	1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9— R
Waterloo	0 0 0 1 0 0 0 0 1— 2

Ben Heist acted as umpire and made a very good man for the place though about four rotten decisions are down against him. There were two passed balls and two wild throws.

NOTES

Allie Treesh made two of the three scores won by the Auburn nine.

John Aunspaugh of Albion was the star player in the Auburn nine.

Elmer Baxter thought he put out the other fellow on third, but it happened to be one of his own men.

The total receipts were only about $27 and it was a surprise to some how so large a crowd could only raise so small amont of money.

The COURIER representative is indebted to Henry McIntyre for conveyance home. He had driven up to the game in his new trap accompanied by S. C. Snyder, Chas. McClellan and Will Schaab.

The Waterloo "rooters" resorted to all kinds of tricks in order to win the game. Especially was this true in the last inning. Men even went so wild that they would entirely surround the first baseman and would frequently get inside of the diamond. Old gray haired men who were sitting on the fence had looking glasses and would throw the reflection of the sun in the eyes of the batter. A boy ought to be ashamed to be guilty of that trick.

School Begins

The public schools of Auburn, will begin on Monday, August 31. This is an important notice to the children of school age, in Auburn, and they and their parent, should be taking steps to get ready. It will also interest people in the country, as there are always a number of bright pupils who desire to attend in town. It is not necessary to emphasize what we have so often said, and what is now so well known, that Auburn has one of the best equipped and thorough working schools in the state.

Wm. Oiler.

Wm. Oiler, an old resident of Wilmington township died Saturday evening rather suddenly. He had been in his usually good health and was among the ex-soldiers who attended the Battalion meeting at St. Joe. We did not learn the partictulars of his disease. He was one of the best known ex-soldiers in this section as he had not only been in the recent rebellion, but served in the Mexican war as well. We shall probably have a more extended notice of him soon. The funeral is to-day.

Mysterious Find.

At the Lake Shore depot last evening Fred Yesbera happened to look down in a small box which is sunk in the cinders at the outlet of the water spouts and discovered a pair of linen cuffs. They had been newly laundered and had never been worn, as was shown by the button holes. The name of W. H. McIntyre appeared on the cuffs in indelible ink, as used when laundrymen mark their goods. We telephoned Mr. McIntyre at the factory and he had not missed the cuffs. Later he informed us from the residence that his wife had a few days ago given a tramp a couple of shirts, cuffs, collars, etc. The tramp evidently had no use for the cuffs and so hid them in that secure place.

BURGLARIZED.

Sunday while Moses Stomm and family, of Hudson, were away at church, their residence was broken into and $22 and a good watch chain were stolen. The burglars evidently knew that Mr. Stomm had money as they searched the house from top to bottom, and finally found the money in an old stove upstairs. Sheriff Stroh was sent for and up to the time of going to press, he has not succeeded in capturing the fellows.

The following letter from Mrs. Mary Ehlers will show the kind of lectures the Teachers' Institute is offering you this year:

AUGUST 10, 1896.

MR. MERICA—I am glad you have secured Dr. Lamar as one of the lecturers for the coming institute. It has been my good fortune to hear him, and I regard him as among the best. He has the happy faculty of presenting "Dixie" from the standpoint of one who knows its customs, dialect and people. He is at once delineator and instructor, a southern gentleman and American patriot. Yours truly,

MARY A. EHLERS.

BRYAN TO THE NATION.

Speech of the Democratic Candidate at Madison Square Garden, New York.

MR. CHAIRMAN, gentlemen of the committee and fellow citizens: I shall, at a future day and in a formal letter, accept the nomination which is now tendered by the Notification Committee, and I shall at that time touch upon the issues presented by the platform. It is fitting, however, that at this time, in the presence of those here assembled, I speak at some length in regard to the campaign upon which we are now entering. We do not underestimate the forces arrayed against us, neither are we unmindful of the importance of the struggle in which we are engaged; but, relying for success upon the righteousness of our cause, we shall defend with all possible vigor the positions taken by our party. We are not surprised that some of our opponents, in the absence of better argument, resort to abusive epithets, but they may rest assured that no language, however violent, no invectives, however vehement, will lead us to depart a single hair's breadth from the course marked out by the National Convention. The citizen, either public or private, who assails the character and questions the patriotism of the delegates assembled in the Chicago convention, assails the character and questions the patriotism of the millions who have arrayed themselves under the banners there raised.

It has been charged by men standing high in business and political circles that our platform is a menace to private security and public safety; and it has been asserted that those whom I have the honor, for the time being, to represent, not only meditate an attack upon the rights of property, but are the foes of social order and national honor. Those who stand upon the Chicago platform are prepared to make known and to defend every motion which influences them, every purpose which animates them and every hope which inspires them. They understand the genius of our institutions; they are stanch supporters of the form of government under which we live, and they build their faith upon foundations laid by the fathers. Andrew Jackson has stated with admirable clearness and with an emphasis which cannot be surpassed both the duty and the sphere of government. He said: "Distinctions in society will always exist under every just government. Equality of talents, of education or of wealth cannot be produced by human institutions. In the full enjoyment of the gifts of heaven and the fruits of superior industry, economy and virtue, every man is equally entitled to protection by law." We yield to none in our devotion to the doctrine just enunciated.

Object of the Campaign.

Our campaign has not for its object the reconstruction of society. We do not propose to transfer the rewards of industry to the lap of indolence. Property is and will remain the stimulus to endeavor and the compensation for toil. We believe, as asserted in the declaration of independence, that all men are created equal; but that does not mean that all men are or can be equal in possessions, in ability or in merit. It simply means that all shall stand equal before the law, and that Government officials shall not, in making, construing or enforcing the law, discriminate between citizens. I assert that property rights, as well as the rights of persons, are safe in the hands of the common people. Let them beware of surrendering a political power which they already possess, and which power, if surrendered, will surely be used to close the doors of advancement against such as they, and to fix new disabilities and burdens upon them, till all of liberty shall be lost.

We are not surprised to find arrayed against us those who are the beneficiaries of Government favoritism—they have read our platform. Nor are we surprised to learn that we must in this campaign face the hostility of those who find pecuniary advantage in advocating the doctrine of non-interference when great aggregations of wealth are trespassing upon the rights of individuals. We welcome such opposition—it is the highest indorsement which could be bestowed upon us. We are content to have the co-operation of those who desire to have the government administered without fear or favor. It is not the wish of the general public that trusts should spring into existence and override the weaker members of society; it is not the wish of the general public that these trusts should destroy competition and then collect such tax as they will from those who are at their mercy; nor is it the fault of the general public that the instrumentalities of government have been so often prostituted to purposes of private gain. Those who stand upon the Chicago platform believe that the Government should not only avoid wrong-doing, but that it should also prevent wrong-doing; and they believe that the law should be enforced alike against all enemies of the public weal. It follows as a necessary conclusion that vicious legislation must be remedied by the people who suffer from the effects of such legislation and not by those who enjoy its benefits.

The Income Tax Law.

The Chicago platform has been condemned by some because it dissents from an opinion given by the Supreme Court declaring the income-tax law unconstitutional. Our critics even go so far as to apply the name "anarchist" to those who stand upon that plank of the platform. It must be remembered that we expressly recognize the binding force of that decision so long as it stands as a part of the law of the land. There is in the platform no suggestion of an attempt to dispute the authority of the Supreme Court. The party is simply pledged to use "all the constitutional power which remains after that decision, or which may come from its reversal by the court as it may hereafter be constituted." Is there any disloyalty in that pledge? For a hundred years the Supreme Court of the United States has sustained the principle which underlies the income tax. I shall offer no apology for the income-tax plank of the Chicago platform. The last income-tax law sought to apportion the burdens of government more equitably among those who enjoy the protection of the government. At present the expenses of the Federal Government, collected through internal revenue taxes and import duties, are especially burdensome upon the poor classes of society. A law which collects from some citizens more than their share of the taxes and collects from other citizens less than their share is simply an indirect means of transferring one man's property to another man's pocket, and while the process may be quite satisfactory to the men who escape just taxation it can never be satisfactory to those who are overburdened. Not only shall I refuse to apologize for the advocacy of an income tax law by the National Convention, but I shall also refuse to apologize for the exercise by it of the right to dissent from a decision of the Supreme Court. In a government like ours every public official is a public servant, whether he holds office by election or by appointment, whether he serves for a term of years or during good behavior, and the people have a right to criticise his official acts.

The Money Problem.

The paramount issue in this campaign is the money question. It is scarcely necessary to defend the principle of bimetallism. No national party during the entire history of the United States has ever declared against it, and no party in this campaign has had the temerity to oppose it. Three parties—the Democratic, Populist, and Silver, have not only declared for bimetallism, but have outlined the specific legislation necessary to restore silver to its ancient position by the side of gold. The Republican platform expressly declares that bimetallism is desirable when it pledges the Republican party to aid in securing it as soon as the assistance of certain foreign nations can be obtained. When they asserted that the efforts of the Government should be steadily directed toward the establishment of international bimetallism they condemned monometallism. There can be no sympathy or co-operation between the advocates of a universal gold standard and the advocates of bimetallism. Between bimetallism—whether independent or international—and the gold standard there is an impassable gulf. In this quadrennial agitation in favor of international bimetallism conducted in good faith, or do our opponents really desire to maintain the gold standard permanently? If they are bending their energies toward the permanent establishment of a gold standard, under cover of a declaration in favor of international bimetallism, I am justified in suggesting that honest money cannot be expected at the hands of those who deal dishonestly with the American people.

What is the test of honesty in money? It must certainly be found in the purchasing power of the dollar. An absolutely honest dollar would not vary in its general purchasing power; it would be absolutely stable when measured by average prices. A dollar which increases in purchasing power is just as dishonest as a dollar which decreases in purchasing power. It cannot be successfully claimed that monometallism or bimetallism, or any other system, gives an absolutely just standard of value. Under both monometallism and bimetallism the Government fixes the weight and fineness of the dollar, invests it with legal tender qualities, and then opens the mints to its unrestricted coinage, leaving the purchasing power of the dollar to be determined by the number of dollars. Bimetallism is better than monometallism, not because it gives us a perfect dollar—that is, a dollar absolutely unvarying in its general purchasing power—but because it makes a nearer approach to stability, to honesty, to justice, than a gold standard possibly can. Any legislation which lessens the world's stock of standard money increases the exchangeable value of the dollar; therefore the crusade against silver must inevitably raise the purchasing power of money and lower the money value of all other forms of property.

Farmers Opposed to Gold.

Our opponents sometimes admit that it was a mistake to demonetize silver, but insist that we should submit to present conditions rather than return to the bimetallic system. They err in supposing that we have reached the end of the evil results of a gold standard; we have not reached the end. So long as the scramble for gold continues prices must fall, and a general fall in prices is but another definition of hard times. The farmers are opposed to the gold standard because they have felt its effects. Since they sell at wholesale and buy at retail they have lost more than they have gained by falling prices, and, besides this, they have found that certain fixed charges have not fallen at all. Taxes have not been perceptibly decreased, although it requires more of farm products now than formerly to secure the money with which to pay taxes. Debts have not fallen. The farmer who owed $1,000 is still compelled to pay $1,000, although it may be twice as difficult as formerly to obtain the dollar with which to pay the debt. The wage-earners have been injured by a gold standard, and have expressed themselves upon the subject with great emphasis. In February, 1895, a petition asking for the immediate restoration of the free and unlimited coinage of gold and silver at 16 to 1 was signed by the representatives of all, or nearly all, the leading labor organizations and presented to Congress. The farmers and wage-earners together constitute a considerable majority of the people of the country. Why should their interests be ignored in considering financial legislation?

Our opponents have made a special appeal to those who hold fire and life insurance policies, but these policy-holders know that since the total premiums received exceed the total losses paid a rising standard must be of more benefit to the companies than to the policy-holders. Much solicitude has been expressed by our opponents for the depositors in savings banks, but these appeals will be in vain, because savings banks depositors know that under a gold standard there is increasing danger that they will lose their deposits because of the inability of the banks to collect their assets, and they still further know that if the gold standard is to continue indefinitely they may be compelled to withdraw their deposits in order to pay living expenses.

It is only necessary to note the increasing number of failures in order to know that a gold standard is ruinous to merchants and manufacturers. These business men do not make their profits from the people from whom they borrow money, but from the people to whom they sell their goods. If the people cannot buy, retailers cannot sell, and, if the retailers cannot sell, wholesale merchants and manufacturers must go into bankruptcy. Salaries in business occupations depend upon business conditions, and the gold standard both lessens the amount and threatens the permanency of such salaries. The professional classes, in the main, receive their support from the producing classes, and can only enjoy prosperity when there is prosperity among those who create wealth.

Its Effect Upon All Classes.

I have not attempted to describe the effect of the gold standard upon all classes—in fact, I have only had time to mention a few—but each person will be able to apply the principles according to his own occupation. It must also be remembered that it is the desire of people generally to convert their earnings into real or personal property. This being true, in considering any temporary advantage which may come from a system under which the dollar rises in its purchasing power, it must not be forgotten that the dollar cannot buy more than formerly unless property sells for less than formerly. Hence, it will be seen that a large portion of those who may find some pecuniary advantage in a gold standard will discover that their losses exceed their gains. Jefferson has said that one of the main duties of government is to prevent men from injuring one another, and never was that duty more important than it is to-day. It is not strange that those who have made a profit by furnishing gold to the Government in the hour of its extremity favor a financial policy which will keep the Government dependent upon them.

Is it strange that the "holders of investments which yield a fixed return in money" can regard the destruction of silver with complacency? We may not expect the holders of other forms of property to protest against giving to money a "disproportionate and unfair advantage over every other species of property." If the relatively few whose wealth consists largely in fixed investments have a right to use the ballot to enhance the value of their investments, have not the rest of the people the right to use the ballot to protect themselves from the disastrous consequences of a rising standard? The people who must purchase money with the products of toil stand in a position entirely different from the position of those who own money or receive a fixed income. The well-being of the nation—ay, of civilization itself—depends upon the prosperity of the masses. What shall it profit us to have a dollar which grows more valuable every day if such a dollar lowers the standard of civilization and brings distress to the people? What shall it profit us if trying to raise our credit by increasing the purchasing power of our dollar we destroy our ability to pay the debts already contracted by lowering the purchasing power of the products with which those debts must be paid? If it is asserted, as it constantly is asserted, that the gold standard will enable us to borrow more money from abroad, I reply that the restoration of bimetallism will restore the parity between money and property, and thus permit an era of prosperity which will enable the American people to become loaners of money instead of perpetual borrowers. Even if we desire to borrow, how long can we continue borrowing under a system which, by lowering the value of property, weakens the foundation upon which credit rests. If the holders of fixed investments will not listen to arguments based upon justice and equity I appeal to them to consider the interests of posterity.

Not a New Experiment.

As against the maintenance of a gold standard, either permanently or until other nations can be united for its overthrow, the Chicago platform presents a clear and emphatic demand for the immediate restoration of free and unlimited coinage of silver and gold at the present legal ratio of 16 to 1 without waiting for the aid or consent of any other nation. We are not asking that a new experiment be tried; we are insisting upon a return to a financial policy approved by the experience of history and supported by all the prominent statesmen of our nation from the days of the first President down to 1873. When we ask that our mints be opened to the free and unlimited coinage of silver into full legal tender money, we are simply asking that the same mint privileges be accorded to silver that are now accorded to gold. When we ask that this coinage be at the ratio of 16 to 1, we simply ask that our gold coins and the standard silver dollar—which, be it remembered, contains the same amount of pure silver as the first silver dollar coined at our mints—retain their present weight and fineness.

The theoretical advantage of the bimetallic system is best stated by a European writer on political economy, who suggests the following illustration: A river fed from two sources is more uniform in volume than a river fed from one source, the reason being that when one of the feeders is swollen the other may be low; whereas, a river which has but one feeder must rise or fall with that feeder. So, in the case of bimetallism; the volume of metallic money receives contributions from both the gold mines and the silver mines, and, therefore, varies less, and the dollar resting upon the two metals is less changeable in its purchasing power than the dollar which rests on one metal only. If there are two kinds of money the option must rest either with the debtor or with the creditor. Assuming that their rights are equal, we must look at the interests of society in general in order to determine to which side the option should be given. Society is interested in having the option exercised by the debtor. Indeed, there can be no such thing as real bimetallism unless the option is exercised by the debtor. The exercise of the option by the debtor compels the creditor classes, whether domestic or foreign, to exert themselves to maintain the parity between gold and silver at the legal ratio, whereas they might find a profit in driving one of the metals to a premium if they could then demand the dearer metal.

Rights of the Debtor.

The right of the debtor to choose the coin in which payment shall be made extends to obligations due from the Government, as well as to contracts between individuals. A Government obligation is simply a debt due from all the people to one of the people, and it is impossible to justify a policy which makes the interests of the one person who holds the obligation superior to the rights of the many who must be taxed to pay it. When, prior to 1873, silver was at a premium, it was never contended that national honor required the payment of Government obligations in silver, and the Matthews resolution, adopted by Congress in 1878, expressly asserted the right of the United States to redeem coin obligations in standard silver dollars, as well as in gold coin. Upon this subject the Chicago platform reads:

"We are opposed to the policy and practice of surrendering to the holders of the obligations of the United States the option reserved by law to the Government of redeeming such obligations in either silver or gold coin."

We are told that any attempt upon the part of the Government to redeem its obligations in silver would put a premium upon gold, but why should it? The Bank of France exercises the right to redeem all bank paper in either gold or silver, and yet France maintains the parity between gold and silver at the ratio of 15½ to 1, and retains in circulation more silver per capita than we do in the United States. It may be further answered that our opponents have suggested no feasible plan for avoiding the dangers which they fear. The retirement of the greenbacks and treasury notes would not protect the treasury, because the same policy which now leads the Secretary of the Treasury to redeem all Government paper in gold, when gold is demanded, will require the redemption of all silver dollars and silver certificates in gold, if the greenbacks and treasury notes are withdrawn from circulation. More than this, if the Government should retire its paper and throw upon the banks the necessity of furnishing coin redemption, the banks would exercise the right to furnish either gold or silver. In other words, they would exercise the option, just as the Government ought to exercise it now. The Government must either exercise the right to redeem its obligations in silver when silver is more convenient or it must retire all the silver and silver certificates from circulation and leave nothing but gold as legal tender money. Are our opponents willing to outline a financial system which will carry out their policy to its legitimate conclusion, or will they continue to cloak their designs in ambiguous phrases?

Necessity for Bimetallism.

There is an actual necessity for bimetallism. During the last twenty-three years legislation has been creating an additional demand for gold, and this law-created demand has resulted in increasing the purchasing power of each ounce of gold. The restoration of bimetallism in the United States will take away from gold just so much of its purchasing power as was added to it by the demonetization of silver by the United States. The silver dollar is now held up to the gold dollar by legal tender laws and not by redemption in gold. We contend that free and unlimited coinage by the United States alone will raise the bullion value of silver to its coinage value, and thus make silver bullion worth $1.29 per ounce in gold throughout the world. The best-known law of commerce is the law of supply and demand. A reduction in the volume of money will raise the purchasing power of the dollar; a new demand for silver created by law will raise the price of silver bullion. International bimetallists must rest their opposition upon one ground only—namely: That the supply of silver available for coinage is too large to be utilized by the United States.

Will Be No Fifty-Cent Dollars.

Perhaps the most persistent misrepresentation that we have to meet is the charge that we are advocating the payment of debts in 50-cent dollars. Under present laws, a silver dollar, when melted, loses nearly half its value, but that will not be true when we establish a mint price for silver and leave no surplus silver to drag down the price of bullion. Under bimetallism silver bullion will be worth as much as silver coin, just as gold bullion is now worth as much as gold coin, and we believe that a silver dollar will be worth as much as a gold dollar.

The charge of repudiation comes with poor grace from those who are seeking to add to the weight of existing debts by legislation which makes money dearer, and who conceal their designs against the general welfare under the euphonious pretense that they are upholding public credit and national honor. In answer to the charge that gold will go abroad, it must be remembered that no gold can leave this country until the owner of the gold receives something in return for it, which we would rather have. In other words, when gold leaves the country those who formerly owned it will be benefited. There is no process by which we can be compelled to part with our gold against our will, nor is there any process by which silver can be forced upon us without our consent. The one thing necessary in order to maintain the parity is to furnish a demand great enough to utilize all the silver which will come to the mints. That Mexico has failed to do this is no proof that the United States would also fail.

It is often objected that the prices of gold and silver cannot be fixed in relation to each other because of the variation in the relative production of the metals. This argument also overlooks the fact that if the demand for both metals at a fixed price is greater than the supply of both, relative production becomes immaterial. If, as is asserted by our opponents, the free coinage of silver is intended only for the benefit of the mine-owners it must be remembered that free coinage cannot restore to the mine-owners any more than demonetization took away. The restoration of silver will bring to the people generally many times as much advantage as the mine-owners can obtain from it. While it is not the purpose of free coinage to especially aid any particular class, yet those who believe that the restoration of silver is needed by the whole people should not be deterred because an incidental benefit will come to the mine-owner.

Projects for Change of Ratio.

The argument that a silver dollar is heavier than a gold dollar, and that, therefore, silver is less convenient to carry in large quantities, is completely answered by the silver certificate, which is as easily carried as the gold certificate. There are some who, while admitting the benefits of bimetallism, object to coinage at the present ratio. Those who have advised a change in the ratio have usually suggested that the silver dollar be doubled. If this change were made it would necessitate the recoinage of 4,000,000,000 of silver into 2,000,000,000 of dollars. There would be an immediate loss of $2,000,000,000, but this would be the least of the injury. A shrinkage of one-half in the silver money of the world would mean a shrinkage of one-fourth in the total volume of metallic money. The people of the United States would be injured by a change in the ratio, not because they produce silver, but because they own property and owe debts and they cannot afford to thus decrease the value of their property or increase the burden of their debts. In 1878 Mr. Carlisle said: "Mankind will be fortunate indeed if the annual production of gold and silver coin shall keep pace with the annual increase of population and industry." A change in the ratio is not necessary. Hostile legislation has decreased the demand for silver and lowered its price, and, by increasing the demand for gold, has raised the value of gold when measured by other forms of property.

We are told that the restoration of bimetallism would be a hardship upon those who have entered into contracts payable in gold coin, but this is a mistake. It will be easier to obtain the gold with which to meet a gold contract, when most of the people can use silver, than it is now when every one is trying to secure gold. The money which is by law made a legal tender must in the course of ordinary business be accepted by ninety-nine out of every 100 persons. Why should the one hundredth man be permitted to exempt himself from the general rule? Special contracts have a tendency to increase the demand for a particular kind of money and thus force it to a premium. Have not the people a right to say that a comparatively few individuals shall not be permitted to derange the financial system of the nation in order to collect a premium in case they succeed in forcing one kind of money to a premium?

Wait for No Other Nation.

In conclusion permit me to say a word in regard to international bimetallism. We are not opposed to an international agreement looking to the restoration of bimetallism throughout the world. The advocates of free coinage have on all occasions shown their willingness to co-operate with other nations in the reinstatement of silver, but they are not willing to await the pleasure of other governments when immediate relief is needed by the people of the United States. We shall not offend other nations when we declare the right of the American people to govern themselves and, without let or hindrance from without, decide upon every question presented for their consideration. In taking this position we simply maintain the dignity of 70,000,000 citizens who are second to none in their capacity for self-government. The gold standard has compelled the American people to pay an ever increasing tribute to the creditor nations of the world—a tribute which no one dares to defend. I assert that national honor requires the United States to secure justice for all its citizens as well as do justice to all its creditors. Honest differences of opinion have always existed and ever will exist as to the legislation best calculated to promote the public weal; but when it is seriously asserted that this nation must bow to the will of other nations and accept the policies which they insist upon, the right of self-government is assailed, and until that question is settled all other questions are insignificant.

Citizens of New York: I have traveled from the center of the continent to the seaboard that I might, in the very beginning of the campaign, bring you greeting from the people out West and South and assure you that their desire is not to destroy but to build up. I ask, I expect, your co-operation. It is true that a few of your financiers would fashion a new figure—a figure representing Columbia, her hands bound fast with fetters of gold and her face turned toward the East, appealing for assistance to those who live beyond the sea—but this figure can never express your idea of this nation. With a government which derives its powers from the consent of the governed, secures to the people freedom of conscience, freedom of thought, and freedom of speech; guarantees equal rights to all, and promises special privileges to none, the United States should be an example in all that is good, and the leading nation in every movement which has for its object the uplifting of the human race.

MARVEL OF THE AGE.

THE LINOTYPE ECLIPSES ALL MODERN INVENTIONS.

How It Has Revolutionized the Old Art of Printing—Notes a New Era in the Newspaper World—Description of the Machine.

Useful and Popular.

The art of printing has been a wonderful instrumentality in the dissemination of knowledge, the progress of good government, the defense of civil rights and as a general aid to liberal progress, but it has always been at the cost of a slow and painful process, the selection and placing by hand of each letter and character and space of the words and language. An ordinary column of reading matter uses about 8,000 pieces of type. Each piece must be chosen from its classified box, or flat pigeon hole, and after being used in print must be returned to its place again. The tedious work which attends this art employs the most intelligent large body of skilled men in the world, and their daily labor is performed at an enormous draft on their nervous and mental energy. In this painful way the handicraft has been conducted from the days of Faust and Gutenberg. For four centuries and a half there has been little advance in this respect till now. The attempts to set type by machinery have been many, and generally unsuccessful. The London Times was fitted up a few years ago with apparatus that would set type, but the losses by breakage of type and the expense of its operations were too great. It was not till four or five years ago that the confidence of publishers in the success of machinery to take the place of ordinary hand composition was won. The improvements steadily in progress since the inception of the most successful machine were finally victorious over all obstacles. They completely changed the old trade of printing, and gave, especially to the work of the daily paper, facilities which till lately were only a dream. The machine which brought this revolution to pass is the Linotype, and the story of its invention and that of its capabilities read like a romance.

Twenty years' companionship with one idea, the expenditure of over a million dollars, and the successful survival of many bitter disappointments is the brief story of Ottmar Mergenthaler, the German watchmaker, in bringing his invention up to its present standard of perfection. During this time it kept Mr. Mergenthaler a poor man, and, as failure after failure was made, it nearly broke the inventor's heart. He is still alive, however, and is a young-looking, almost boyish, man. He lives in New York and spends his summers in the Adirondack Mountains, for his health is not good.

When he started to carry out his idea, Mr. Mergenthaler built a workshop in the loft of his stable, and for years he and his invention were the objects of as much curiosity as the famed "Darius Green and his flying machine." He first tried to create a machine that would make a matrix from which a column or page might be cast. Then he produced one which would punch the letters into sheet lead or paper from which a column or page might be cast. These failed to meet approval and several more machines were invented in which the papier mache matrix played the prominent part, but they were also declared impracticable. It was while working along these lines that the idea of the "linotype" was hit upon. The idea of setting up lines of metal was adopted as the basis of operation, and upon this idea the present linotype has been worked out. The development after that was very rapid. The casting of the line of type by the machine and the operation of the whole by a keyboard like that of a typewriter were added, and finally the distribution of the pieces to their proper compartments was made automatic and the linotype was complete.

In the composing rooms of big newspapers, a minute's time after sunset is worth as much as an hour in the day. Speed is everything. Within five hours the history of a day must be intelligently compiled and set in type. The rapidity with which the linotype is worked made it a necessity. It can cast four lines of type while a compositor is setting one, and as there is no distribution of type, there are relatively few mistakes to be corrected, and consequently little or no delay in getting the matter into the forms. The men who have stood at the case for years are now seated at a keyboard, and all that the "typo" had to do was to learn the keyboard of the machine just as any stenographer learns the keyboard of a typewriter. The machine is automatic and does the rest.

THE LINOTYPE MACHINE.

A true description of the linotype would necessarily be a technical one, for many of the most complex automatic movements known to the mechanic are involved in its operation. To describe what it does, can be done in a sentence. In answer to the operator's touch on the lettered keys, it assembles lettered brass matrices into line, and then in response to a touch of the lever it carries the line of matrices to a mold where the line of type is cast from molten metal, after which it distributes the matrices in their proper places in the magazine from which they were taken. The cast line is ready for printing without further labor.

The almost human action of the machine may be understood, when it is said that the brass matrices, from which the linotype slug is cast, are handled automatically by the machine, seven times after they leave the magazine before they find their way into the magazine again. This is done month after month, thousands of times a day, with never a deviation or error in the assembling or replacing of the ninety characters that are at the command of the operator. All the parts of the machinery are adjusted in their turn, to meet the matrices in their travels, and to perform their duty in setting them in line, casting the slug from them and returning them to the magazine. There are three distinct operations gone through by the linotype—setting the matrices, casting the line of type and distributing the matrices. All three go on at once, and one does not interfere with the other. While one line is being distributed, another is being cast and a third set. The lines of type once cast are handled in exactly the same manner as regular type, only they are much more easily shifted about. These lines of type can be either printed from directly or can be stereotyped for use on big newspaper perfecting presses. Once used, the lines of type are returned to the melting pot and are remelted, to be cast over again.

A comparison of what can be done on the linotype and what can be done by hand will show the difference. One man can set by hand from 1,000 ems of matter per hour to 1,500. On a machine it is a poor operator that cannot set 4,000 ems of matter per hour, and records of nearly 8,000 ems per hour have been made on regular newspaper work. A perfect proof from a linotype is very common. The linotype is guaranteed to produce over 7,500 ems per hour and good operators constantly set from 4,000 to 5,000 ems per hour. Records of 8,700, 10,000 and 13,000 have already been made. All the large dailies in the country, over 300 small dailies, and a large number of book and job printing offices now have the machines in use. Over 3,000 have been sold in the United States within the past six years.

Since perfecting the machine the inventor has devoted his time to improvements, in making it meet the needs of every branch of the printing trade. It is now possible to change the face of the type on a machine in ten minutes and substitute any of the smaller or reading type, such as "agate," "nonpareil," "minion," "brevier," "long primer," "small pica," and italics. Every machine can be fitted with two molds, a "solid" and a "leaded" body, which can be interchanged in a moment, and with a supply of molds and magazines on hand, one machine can be made to turn out any of the faces above mentioned on any length of mold.

It will be a surprise to learn that the machine occupies a space of only five feet square, weighs less than 2,000 pounds, and requires only one-fourth horse-power—steam or electricity—to operate it. The gas jets used to keep the type metal in a molten state consume less than fifteen feet an hour, and after an operator has become acquainted with his machine, the services of a machinist are not required. In large offices, of course, where speed and time are the great consideration, machinists are required to care for the machines. Though twenty years were spent in creating the linotype, it was only a few years ago considered perfect. It is, therefore, in its infancy. The inventor has but begun to produce a radical change in the printing world which the superiority of his invention will complete in a few years.

HOUSES IN THE TREE-TOPS.

The Indians of Guiana Build Beyond the Reach of Floods.

Interest in the Guiana country naturally centers about the most fertile region, that which commands the mouth of its great waterway. As you approach the Orinoco from the gulf of Para you will see that picturesque sight to which Humboldt refers in his travels, "innumerable fires in the tall palm trees"—the dwelling-places of the peaceful Guaranos.

The legend that this strange tribe of Indians, once the masters of the Orinoco, live in trees the entire year, results from the great annual rise of the Orinoco. At Ciudad Bolivar, three hundred miles up, this amounts sometimes, in a contracted place, to ninety feet. On the broader delta it is always sufficient to cover islands and low ground; therefore the inhabitants very wisely build their houses well above the ground. For this purpose four tall palm trees are selected, and the crosspieces which form the foundation for the houses are lashed to the main support by pieces of a tough vine indigenous to the delta. Upon these is laid the flooring, and then the sides and roof are thatched with large palm leaves, to which the Indians have given the poetic name of "feather-of-the-sun."

There are many advantages which this particular palm leaf possesses over others of the same family, the principal one being its similarity to asbestos in the quality of resisting fire. In the location of his house the Guarauno takes another wise precaution in building, and it is one that carries with it a lesson for the government under whose sovereignty he lives.—Century.

The Exhaustion of the Coal Supply.

The exhaustion of the supply of anthracite coal veins is a subject that is now receiving much attention. William Griffith, of Scranton, Pa., who has been studying the matter, gives it as his opinion in the Bond Record that the supply of coal still available does not amount to more than 5,073,786,750 tons. The largest estimate made is that of the Pennsylvania coal waste commission, which places the supply at 6,808,000,000 tons. It is estimated that at the present annual rate of consumption the coal will be exhausted in from eighty-four to 109 years.

WOMEN WANT TO KNOW.

TO WHOM CAN THEY TELL THEIR TROUBLES?

A Woman Answers "To Me"—Anxious Inquirers Intelligently Answered—Thousands of Grateful Letters.

Women regard it as a blessing that they can talk to a woman who fully understands their every ailment, and thus avoid the examinations, experiments and theories of incompetent physicians, whose sex deprives them of knowing by experience. The endless confidence placed in Mrs. Pinkham by American women, prompts them to seek her advice constantly. Female diseases yield to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once. Inflammation, ulceration, falling and displacement of the womb, ovarian troubles, spinal weakness and kidney complaints, all have their symptoms, and should be "nipped in the bud." Bearing-down pains, backache, headache, nervousness, pains in groins, lassitude, whites, irregularities, dread of impending evil, blues, sleeplessness, faintness, etc.

Here is testimony right to the point:

"The doctors told me that unless I went to the hospital and had an operation performed, I could not live. I had falling, enlargement and ulceration of the womb.

"I was in constant misery all the time; my back ached; I was always tired. It was impossible for me to walk far or stand long at a time. I was surely a wreck. I decided that I would give your Compound and Sanative Wash a trial.

"I took three bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and used two packages of Sanative Wash, and I am now almost well. I am stouter and healthier than I have ever been in my life. My friends and neighbors and the doctors are surprised at my rapid improvement. I have told them all what I have been taking." —MRS. ANNETTA BICKMEIER, Bellaire, Belmont Co., O.

"Our Seven Homes" is the title under which Mrs. Rundle Charles' autobiographical reminiscences will appear. The book was commenced by the author of "The Schomberg-Cotta Family" more than ten years ago, "at the instigation of a great prince," and deals with her early life, home and parentage.

It is gratifying to note that the excellent Dent-Macmillan "Temple Shakspeare" has been accorded a welcome commensurate with its deserts. No less than 500,000 of the little volumes have already been sold. The same publishers are preparing to issue a similar series of the old English dramatists, and also "The Temple Classics," beginning with Goethe's "Faust," Bacon's Essays, Moore's "Utopia," and De Quincey's "Opium Eater."

Success in Literature.

"Oh, yes, I've been quite successful of late," said the writer in answer to a suggestion that he was looking more prosperous than when last seen. "It's all in knowing the business. You see, when I started in I didn't know anything about it and tried to work alone."

"And now you collaborate with some one, I suppose?"

"Collaborate nothing. I've simply formed a partnership that is of advantage to both me and my partner. You see, my stories and articles were always all right, but no one knew me, and no editor or publisher wanted anything by a man who wasn't known. Consequently I set out to find a man who was known. I had some trouble, but I finally located a desperado who was known from one end of the country to the other."

"But he couldn't write, could he?"

"Of course he couldn't, but the publishers and magazine editors didn't know that, and I gave him a percentage of what I got for the use of his name. I just put that on some of my old stories that I had been trying to sell for the last five years and disposed of them inside of thirty days. Then I got hold of a woman who had just got out of the divorce court, put her name on a couple of essays and sold them for about twice what I had ever expected to get for them. Just now I am using the name of a man who has become notorious through his connection with ward politics. He couldn't write a grammatical sentence, but the magazines are ready to pay high for his views on the political system of France, and I am giving them an old college essay of mine with his name on it. Oh, it's easy to sell stuff when you know how. Now, next week I expect to close a deal with a publishing house for a book of poems."

"You are dealing with them personally in this case, then?"

"Yes, I'm conducting the negotiations, but I'm posing as the private secretary of a man who couldn't make a rhyme in seven years, but his sister married a nobleman and he got himself talked about by trying to get into a duel over a ballet girl. Besides, he had a famous father, which makes the outlook doubly promising."—Chicago Post.

Water as Costly as Champagne.

The Papazo Indians inhabit a country of broad plains, with mountain ranges between. The mountains are remarkably rugged, and rise sharply from the lowlands. All over the plains live the Indians. The country is one of the most arid regions on the face of the globe, a whole year passing sometimes without a drop of rain. The streams rise in the mountains, but never reach the sea, and the debris carried by the rivers, instead of finding its way to the ocean, is spread out upon the plains, the rivers drying up before they reach the sea. Seriland, in the state of Sonora, was never seen by a white man until about two years ago, when the bureau of ethnology sent an expedition to explore that region. The natives are constantly vigilant every moment, from day to day, week to week, month to month, year to year, expecting and dreading the approach of the enemy. They are always prepared for an emergency. The dearth of water was the greatest obstacle to the exploration. Every drop we used was carried from twelve to fifteen miles by men under heavy guard. Water there is more valuable than gold, and often we measured it out in spoonfuls. In counting the dangers and labor of securing water we estimated its worth at from $3 to $4 a quart.—Baltimore American.

"Dolly" Madison.

Mr. James G. Blaine, that keen observer of men and things, familiar with all the traditions of Washington, comparing the influence of the different ladies of the White House, unhesitatingly awards the palm to Mrs. Madison. Yet she never mingled in political affairs. It was solely by the influence of a gentle, womanly nature that it was said of her, "Mrs. Madison saved the administration of her husband." The following episodes, trifling though they seem, are significant. We quote from Mrs. Maud Wilder Goodwin's pleasant "Life of Dolly Madison:"

William C. Preston, in his unpublished journal, describes his going, as a youth, to the White House, to pay his respects to the President and Mrs. Madison.

She advanced straight toward me and extending her left hand, said, "Are you William Campbell Preston, the son of my old friend and most beloved kinswoman, Sally Campbell? Sit down, my son, for you are my son, and I am the first person who ever saw you in this world."

Turning then with a graciousness that charmed the young man, she introduced him to the circle of young girls about her, giving some special clew to each, and ending with, "Your kinswoman, Sally Coles."

At another of her levees, her attention was drawn to a rustic visitor, a youth who was evidently suffering all the torments of embarrassment. He had at last ventured to help himself to a cup of coffee, when Mrs. Madison walked up and addressed him. In the surprise of the moment, the lad dropped the saucer, and strove to crowd the cup into his pocket.

His tactful hostess took no notice of the accident, except to observe that in such a crowd no one could avoid being jostled, and straightway turned the conversation to the boy's family, and ended by sending her regards to his excellent mother, and bidding the servant bring another cup of coffee.

Two old ladies from the country once arrived at the White House while the family were still at breakfast. To the surprise of the rural visitors, the woman they had come to see appeared in a stuff dress of dark gray, protected by a large housewifely white apron, and with a linen kerchief pinned about her neck. Her simplicity of manner and attire completely swept away their awe, and before departing one of them found courage to ask:

"Perhaps you wouldn't mind if I kissed you—just to tell the folks about."

Sosimo.

Among Mrs. Strong's recollections of Stevenson, in Scribner's Magazine, are certain stories of Sosimo, the native who took such good care of him and ruled his affairs with so firm a hand. Stevenson had a topaz stud that was somewhat difficult to put into his shirt, so he gave it to Mrs. Strong, who laid it away in her trinket box. When first she wanted to wear it she was dismayed to find it gone. Sosimo had missed the stud, discovered it in her box, and carried it back to Louis' room.

"I kept up the fight," she says, "for some time, trying to secrete it from Sosimo by putting it in out-of-the-way places, but it was invariably found in Louis' room, wherever I had hidden it. When Sosimo came up from the ship by which he and his master had taken a trip to a neighboring island, he put Louis' valise down on the veranda, and carefully abstracted from his mouth the precious stud he had carried there for safety. I gave up then, and the stud became Louis' own.

"One day I went into Louis' room and found him and Sosimo very busy cleaning up and sorting papers.

"'Did you tell Sosimo to do this?' I asked.

"'No,' said Louis, with his arms full of books. 'He told me!'"

Another day the cook was away, and Louis, who was busy writing, took his meals in his room. Knowing that there was no one to cook his lunch, he told Sosimo to bring him some bread and cheese. To his surprise, he was served with an excellent meal—an omelette, a good salad and perfect coffee.

"Who cooked this?" asked Louis, in Samoan.

"I did," said Sosimo.

"Well," said Louis, "great is your wisdom."

Sosimo bowed and corrected him:

"Great is my love!"

Unlucky Proverb.

Temple, the body-coachman of Ernest, King of Hanover, is the hero of a number of anecdotes which are told by his Majesty's chaplain in a volume of "Reminiscences." One of the most amusing relates to a transaction between Temple and the chaplain.

Temple lost his wife. Of course I, as chaplain, had to perform the funeral ceremony. A few days afterward old Temple, in deep mourning, called upon me. He was very much upset, and evidently had something on his mind which he found difficulty in expressing. For he stood a few moments in silence and then turned his hat round and round, looked mournfully into it, brushed it with his hand, and at last got out through stammering:

"Ive called, sir—I've called, sir—as I wish to ask—and don't like to put it off—what I've got to pay you for that 'ere job?"

"Oh," I said, "nothing, of course. I have no fees, Temple; but I remember now I am in your debt, and I must ask you what I am to pay for the two pots of ointment you made for my horse's cracked feet?"

"Bless you, sir, don't mention it!" said Temple. "Nothing, sir, nothing. 'one good turn deserves another' all the world over!"

Drawn Through Diamonds.

The finest wire in the country is made at Taunton, Mass. This metal cobweb of minute diameter is exactly the 1-500th part of an inch in thickness—much finer than human hair. Ordinary wire, even though of small diameter, is drawn through holes in steel plates but, on account of the wear, such plates cannot be used in making the hair wire. The Taunton factory mentioned uses drilled diamonds for that purpose.

THE BRITISH EMPIRE.

Capt. J. B. White of Fort Wayne, Ind., in a communication which appears in the "Western British American" of August 1st, controverts an article in the "North American Review."

Editor Western British American:

In a recent issue of the North American Review I note an article on "England's Colonial Empire," by Mr. Hannis Taylor, United States Minister to Spain. It is somewhat amusing to see, or read, the extent of his "jingoism." From the tone of his communication certainly no reader would conclude there was such a place as Scotland. This "Teutonic" business is getting of late years by our distinguished writers much overdone. Will Mr. Taylor kindly inform us what became of these heroic "Teutons" who in 1060 ingloriously surrendered their country to an invading foe, and were subjected to the most humiliating condition of servitude? Wouldn't he have thought this period a most fitting one for an exhibition of the wonderful glory he claims for them now? For 200 long years they dared not claim their heritage. They were reduced to the most abject misery and contempt; relegated to the position of swineherds for their royal conquerors; dared not even speak their own language, and had no more standing in court than a negro of the South previous to the war. And now at this late day we are informed by such distinguished writers as Mr. Taylor that we are indebted to these high-minded, chivalrous people for the great "British Empire." He terms it "English Empire," and says "British" is occasionally used for convenience. He goes back to 449 to trace its beginning—a good way back, it is true; just the time when their other conquerors, the Romans, had left them. He does not refer to that, of course; it is a trifle, as afterwards is their being conquered by the Danes in the eighth century, and paying for over two centuries their "Dane-gelt" to their oppressors. And now we are to be informed that all greatness and glory is traceable to this spirited, heroic race of people. Some may be overjoyed at such a revelation; for one, I am not.

Why do writers not leave history as it is, and not attempt to paint it as it is not. Mr. Taylor, if he does not know, ought to know—and if he reads up in history, will know—that England and Scotland, at the beginning of the 17th century, had enough to do at home, looking after each other; that neither of them had a foot of land outside of their own little domain, and not until the union of the crowns had there been the slightest advancement towards an empire. It was only after the brutal wars that these two were engaged in among themselves had been going on for over three hundred long years, that their hands were joined against the whole world. From that period, and that alone, dates the rise and greatness of the "British Empire"—not "English" Empire, as the Hon. Mr. Taylor would have it.

James I. of England and VI. of Scotland gave the first charter, which was the beginning of the British Empire. From that period till now the empire has kept on growing and increasing in power; but it is not a little distasteful for writers to fawn upon and flatter the English people, or mislead other people by such nonsense as "England's" Colonial Empire. After the union of the crowns, which continued for one hundred years, then the union of the two kingdoms took place. The foundation upon which that union rests is the very first article of the treaty, which reads as follows:

Article I.—That the two kingdoms of Scotland and England shall upon the first day of May next ensuing the date hereof (and for ever after) be united into one kindom by the name of "Great Britain," and that the ensign armorial of the said United Kingdom be such as Her Majesty shall appoint, and that the crosses of St. Andrew and St. George be conjoined in such manner as Her Majesty shall think fit, and used in all flags, banners, standards and ensigns, both on sea and land.

Article II.—That the succession to the monarchy of the United Kingdom of Great Britain, etc., etc.

Article III.—That the United Kingdom of Great Britain be represented by one and the same Parliament to be styled the Parliament of Great Britain.

There are 21 other articles in relation to this union, which took place in 1707, but enough is quoted to set aside all this "jingo Englishism," that our friend Taylor and some others rest upon. Why could they not write of "Scotland's Colonial Empire?" It would be quite as proper, as just and as truthful. In that case, do you think England would stand it? Then why should Scotland sit still and permit her history and character to be trifled with in any such manner. Her history is just as glorious as that of England; she has nothing to lose by comparisons. Therefore, is it not a great wrong, not to say a piece of injustice, for writers at this late day to be, either through ignorance or malice, setting Scotland aside. Let them use the only and proper term—Great Britain. Let them, for instance, visit Mount Vernon, Washington's tomb, and read the colonial papers, dated 1776, and they will see that all public affairs therein printed are of Great Britain, not of England. Likewise, visit Bunker Hill, Lexington, Concord or Saratoga, where Burgoyne surrendered, and the tablets there placed to commemorate events speak of Great Britain, or the British. It was not, as the tablet says, an "English" army but a "British army" that surrendered at Saratoga. Another tablet says: "The British army that encamped here the night before the battle." Somehow I feel as if it is fortunate that these tablets were put up, as, if left to some of our modern writers, the whole thing would be "English."

In conclusion, let me say to Mr. Taylor and all other such writers, that I do not claim that all the good has been done in the world by the British Empire, or Great Britain; but whatever there is good or bad in this mighty empire, the blood of Scotland has done her full share in bringing it about, and all Scotland asks is her rights to the Union and not to be classed as English. She fought three hundred long years to ward that off, and she does not want to be placed there by the pen. Give us "Great Britain."

Wanted to See the Dispatches.

Sir Robert Low, telling of the difficulties he had with the field telegraph in the Chitral campaign, says the native chiefs were at first very distrustful of the wire, as they thought it was a mark for parceling out the country among the soldiers; but on being told that it was to send messages to the seat of government in India they agreed to guard it. After several days' close watching they saw no signs of any dispatches passing along, so they cut off a couple of miles of wire and took it away to watch the messages more at their ease. Their investigations were interrupted by the return of the engineers to see what had happened to cut off communication.

The National Holiday.

The only holiday that exists in the United States by statutory enactment is Labor Day, which, during the second session of the Fifty-third Congress, was made a holiday in the District of Columbia. Congress has frequently recognized the existence of others, but with this exception, has made no statutory enactment on the subject. On Washington's birthday and on Decoration Day Congress invariably adjourns, "out of respect for the illustrious dead," but not even the Fourth of July is recognized on our National statutes as a holiday. Nearly all the States, however, have, through their legislative bodies, recognized the various common holidays as legal.

A Perfect Fit Needed.

A well-known club woman the other day went to her dress-maker to order a gown. The woman asked at once: "Shall you wear it at club meetings?" The answer was in the affirmative. "And to make speeches in?" was the next question. Again she said yes. "Then I must have it trimmed accordingly," said the dressmaker. "It will be eyed closely and for long periods of time at once by women at leisure to observe. Such a gown must be absolutely perfect."

Queer Things Used in Paper-Making.

Paper is made out of almost anything which can be pounded into a pulp. It is said that at present five kinds of bark are being used. Leaves make strong paper, and almost every kind of moss can be utilized. There are patents for making paper from shavings and sawdust, from thistles and tan bark.

From Persia

By the kindness of Miss Olive Nelson we give our readers to-day a very interesiing letter from Persia. It is written by her friend and former fellow teacher at Huntington, Miss May Wallace. who is now a missionary and located at Tabriz in Persia. When Miss Wallace received her commission as missionary about two years ago, she at once resigned her place as teacher and sailed for the old world. This letter gives one of her experiences. It is dated at Tabriz, July 8, and reached here Aug. 7, having been one month on the way. Lovers of foreign stamps would be pleased to see the stamps on this envelope. We presume they were made in this country, but the strange words and devices. On one kind are the words "10 Chahis" and "Postes Persanes" while on the other kind are the latter words but apparently a different value. The colors are also different. But all should read her letter.

Married.

We have been expecting for some time to record the marriage of Morris Eckhart to one of the best looking and worthiest of the girls in this section. It now comes to pass. They were married Aug. 12, and the Waterloo Press of to-day has this:

"The marriage of Morris Eckhart and Miss Ada McEntaffer occurred at the residence of the bride's uncle, Mr. and Mrs. Hi. McEntaffer, on Center street, last evening."

Miss McEntaffer has many friends in Auburn who will be glad to welcome her as a citizen, and the wife of one of our most worthy young men. And with these friends, the COURIER joins in a hearty welcome.

Obituary

Glen, infant son of Tim and Addie McDowell was born in Auburn June 1, 1896, departed this life Aug. 11, 1896, aged 2 months and 10 days. Glen leaves to mourn his early death a father, mother and a brother, besides many friends. These little ones are precious and very dear unto us and it is hard to give they up. Jesus the Great Shepherd, takes the little lambs to His fold above, where they shall live for evermore. Funeral services were conducted from the house Wedsday afternoon Aug. 12, at 4 o'clock. Interment took place in Evergreen Cemetery. J. D. Brosy and Rev. Meese conducted the services.

Tourist Drafts.

The United States Express Company has always an eye to business, and at the same time manages to do the business public a service. The latest thing of theirs to come to our notice, is the "Tourist Drafts" they now furnish. A man who is going off on a journey and who does not care to take along much loose money can go to one of the company's agents and purchase a little book of drafts. These little books contain ten drafts each, for $10, $20 or $50 according to what a man wants. The first would cost $100, the second $200, and the third $500, and would be that much to him at any hotel or any other place where money had to be used along the journey. In addition to the face value a small fee is charged, of course, it being 30 cents for the least, and for the larger amounts one-fourth of one per cent of the face value is charged. These drafts are easily identified and cashed and one would think they are quite a commercial convenience. A better knowledge of this can be gained by seeing C. B. Weaver, the agent here.

Keep Up Your Scott's Emulsion in Summer-time

What are your resources for the summer? Have you an abundance of health stowed away for the long, hot, depleting days, or does summer find you low in vitality, run down, losing flesh, and weak? Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver Oil will give you the proper reserve force, because it builds up the system on a solid foundation. A tonic may stimulate; Scott's Emulsion not only "boosts," it sustains.

It is a wise precaution always to have at least a small bottle of Scott's Emulsion in the house. Unopened, it will keep indefinitely. Tightly corked, after using, kept in a cool place, it will remain sweet for weeks.

Henderson-Kepler.

It gives us pleasure to record the marriage of two popular society young people, the happy event taking place yesterday, August 12, at the fine farm home of Alfred Kepler, in Franklin township. It was the union of George M. Henderson, of Auburn, and Miss Minnie Kepler, and was celebrated in the presence of a large company of the friends of both the contracting parties. The company included many of the neighbors of Mr. and Mrs. Kepler in that part of the country, as well as the young neighbor friends of the bride. And there were friends of both bride and groom from over the country, including Waterloo, Auburn, Wabash, Bluffton, Ashley, Angola and Spencerville. The day was one of the few fine ones of this week, and before the hour had arrived all the rooms and porticoes of the large residence were occupied by a happy and interested company. An hour or so was spent very pleasantly in greeting old friends whom chance had kept apart for many years, and then as the hands of the clock pointed towards noon, there came a hush, and all eyes turned to the altar, a lovely canopy of lace, flowers and smilax. Then began the wedding march, executed by Miss Desdemona Ross, of Wabash. Then down the white covered staircase, through festoons of lace, came Judge Penfield, of Auburn, who was to officiate. followed by the bridesmaid, Miss Nina Thomas of Muncie. and the best man. Mr. Harry Wright, now a resident of Chicago. Then followed the bride and groom. They stepped gracefully under the delicate canopy, and the Judge proceeded with the ceremony that joined hands and hearts for life. The ceremony was brief, but impressive and solemn. and though a judge does not make this his main business, all felt it was gracefully done. After the ceremony came the congratulations which were abundant and hearty. A fine lunch in several courses followed, which was, of course, enjoyed by all. We wish right here to compliment the four little lassies who so gracefully and easily served the hundred or more guests located all over the rooms and the verandas. We think a good word for them is due. Nor should we forget the gentlemanly caterer, Mr. Noyes, of Fremont, who was the "chef" of the occasion.

The bride's dress was of silver gauze combined with chiffon and satin ribbons, and trimmed with pearl passementerie. It was becomingly made in princess style. Her bouquet was of white roses. Miss Nina Thomas, the bridesmaid, was very becomingly attired in yellow silk mull, with yellow satin ribbons. She carried yellow roses.

After an hour or two given up to social enjoyments, the company dispersed, with many good wishes for the future happiness of the young couple. The bride and groom came that evening to Auburn, and took the east bound B. & O. train for a wedding tour of a week or more, which will include a trip up the lakes. After this they will be "at home" at the fine residence Mr. Henderson has just completed on South Main street.

A large number of Auburn friends accompanied them to the train, and had the usual amount of fun throwing rice and old shoes. And this was so enjoyable to several of them that they came near failing to get off the train. As it started up, they lingered as long as they could then made a break for the rear door of the coach, which being the last one, was locked. And then came a rush for the forward door. Dr. Ford reached the ground in safety, but John Crimmins had to pull the bell cord and stop the train. We believe when the conductor discovered him, he was softly murmuring,

"O, Mr. Conductor stop the train,
I want to get off and walk."

He was accommodated, and walked home.

Among the guests at the wedding from abroad, were three girls from the Wabash public schools, pupils of Miss Kepler, who has been for some time a teacher there. Their names are, Lucy Chapler, Bessie Millirons and Mayme Smith. There was Miss Ross, of Wabash; Miss Nina Thomas, of Muncie; Harry Wright, formerly of Garrett, but now of Chicago; Miss ——Wheeler, of Bluffton; Mr. and Mrs. Wickwire, of Ashley; Frank Henderson, wife and little daughter Gladys, of Spencerville; Dr. Ford, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Borst, Miss Nettie Ernest, Miss Blanche Shilling, Mr. and Mrs. R. Sawvel, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Dills, D. M. Link, John Crimmins. Mrs. Mary Boyer, Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Brown, Judge Penfield, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Barns, of Auburn; W. H. Leas, D. L. Leas and H. K. Leas and their wives, of Waterloo, and others.

The Buiding and Loan.

Affairs at Indianapolis in regard to the Building & Loan suits have been getting lively again. Yesterday's dailies said that the National Union had gone into the hands of a receiver, the court having decided to have that done the day before, which was Wednesday. The bond to be given by the receiver was made enormously high, being $1,200,000. H. C. Trusler was made receiver. But the Union National appealed the case to the supreme court, and pending the decision on appeal, the Association will still be in Mr. Ensley's hands. He also had to give bond of $1,200,000, and was allowed only from Wednesday noon till Thursday forenoon to get bondsmen. But he had no trouble in making it. A letter received here this morning gives this version of it, and is no doubt correct. In the meantime a meeting of the stockholders will be called next week.

Hail Ice Cream.

Ice cream from hail is not so very common about here. Still it can be done. Henry Smith's wife over in Wilmington surprised her husband that way the day of the hail storm about a week ago. He had been helping a neighbor to cut oats, he found on coming home that evening that she had gathered hail enough to make nearly a gallon of ice cream and had it nearly all ready for him. We don't wish to be understood as saying that he ate it all himself, but the family had all they could eat and there was some left for next day. Nature is kind to us now and then, if she does send hailstones to bang our corn to pieces. And a nice little lesson in punctuation could be brought out in the heading of this article by putting a comma after the first word.

10,000 There

Angola, Ind., Aug. 14, (Special).

Yesterday occured the 23rd annual reunion of the Old Settlers of Steuben county at this place. Rain in the early morning cooled off the air and then the clouds cleared away and the crowd began to roll in from all directions, and by noon the city was a mass of people. Conservative estimates place the crowd at 10,000 people. Never was there such a joyous social gathering of old and young in this county. Judge S. A. Powers made a complete success of the reunion, and every number of the programme was carried out to the fullest satisfaction of all. The Indians three men and one woman were present and satisfied the natural curiosity of thouands. The day was void of accidents, but one or two of the pioneers were overcome by the heat while in the jam near the stand. Bands of martial music filled the hearts of all with old-time enthusiasm. The lecture in the evening at the M. E. church by the Indian. John Jacob, was well attended.

Royal Baking Powder

ABSOLUTELY PURE

NOT AFTER JINNY.

This Settled, the Traveler Was Made Welcome.

I was riding along a country road in the vicinity of Memphis when I came to a newly painted frame house which gave such shining evidence of prosperity that it was an attraction to the barren landscape about it. A long, lean man, stoop-shouldered and ungainly, sat on a post in front of the spick-and-span doorstep and held an old rifle across his knees, at the same time that he peered from under his shaggy brows in all directions, as if he were in ambush and expected to be surprised.

I wanted several favors at this man's hands if possible, one of them being supper, another an invigorating draught of moonshine whisky, and finally, and the only demand I was certain of a route to Memphis by that particular road.

"Evening," I said in as jocular a tone as I could assume. "Guarding the new paint?"

"Evenin', stranger," he answered, as short as pie crust.

"Could you tell me how to reach Memphis tonight?" I asked.

"Foller yer nose!"

"Then I am on the right road?"

"Git!"

He leveled the rifle at me, and my horse shied at the sudden movement. At the same time I heard a cackling laugh through the half-open door.

I was disconcerted, but hardly alarmed, as it was evident that the man was nothing worse than a crank, so I assumed an air of injured innocence and asked:

"Do you take me for a sheriff or a revenue officer, because I am neither one nor the other?"

"No, young feller, I take you for one of them silly gentry as want ter come courtin' my gal Jinny, since they heard tell that her mother's step-uncle, Job Morrill, left her a hundred dollars in his will!"

At this moment the door opened wide and the homeliest girl I ever saw in my life filled the space with her ample circumference. She smiled at me so sweetly that I felt it imperative to hasten on my journey, or let the old man shoot me on the spot.

"Pop, you needn't be afeard of that un; he's sassy enough ter look out fer hisself," she chirped.

"So be, mister, ef Jinny favors yer, and et ain't her money you be arter, come rite in and take suthin."

Again my intelligent horse shied, and, before I could control him I was half way to Memphis, and out of reach of the old man's rifle and the inhospitable imputation of wanting "Jinny's" money.

Funny Little Japanese Women.

The all-conquering bicycle has invaded Japan, and it is now a familiar sight in the land of the jinrikisai. The Europeans take to it kindly, and the little brown men and women are equally enthusiastic. The government has equipped many of its postmen with roadsters, especially those who deliver mail in the suburbs or in the country districts. In each brigade a bicycle corps has been formed who are daily drilled in about the same style as similar organizations in the armies of Europe. The Japanese people themselves still regard the wheel as a great curiosity, but are beginning to both master it and manufacture it. Some of the Japanese women have adopted a queer bicycle costume that is a combination of bloomers with the native dress. It is neither Japanese nor European. Combined with the upper part of the kamona costume the Japanese clothe their nether limbs in what are neither knickerbockers, trousers, zouaves nor bloomers. The ludicrous effect is heightened by the girl having the national habit of turning the toes in, developed to its largest extent. All that you see when she passes you is a pair of round and pretty heels wabbling in an uncertain manner, and a little body coiled up that makes you think of a gay little monkey on the top of a pole. —Chicago Chronicle.

The Traveler's Right to Fresh Air.

A wise justice in Lyons, Wayne county, has decided that a railway in this state is bound to carry fresh air free, as well as bicycles. A woman traveling on a train complained that the air was bad. The conductor tried to open the window in the usual way, but was unable to do so, and refused to get a crowbar to pry it open, whereupon the suffering woman smashed the glass with her parasol. The conductor then had her taken into custody on a charge of insanity. A doctor examined her and pronounced her rational. Her defense was that she had paid for her transportation and was entitled to fresh air with it. The justice thought so too, and discharged her. It is possible that this precedent may cause all the railway companies considerable trouble. If it be good law that when car windows are not in working order the passenger may smash the glass, better care will be taken to see that all the windows in the car can be readily moved up and down.—Auburn Advertiser.

Professor Dusel of Bonn one day noticed his wife placing a large bouquet on his desk.

"What does all this mean?" he asked.

"Why, this is the anniversary of your marriage," replied Mrs. Dusel.

"Is that so? Well, let me know when yours comes round, and I'll reciprocate."—Fliegende Blaetter.

Nine Epidemics

Since 1878 there have been nine epidemics of dysentery in different parts of the country in which Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy was used with perfect success. Dysentery, when epidemic, is almost as severe and dangerous as Asiatic cholera. Heretofore the best efforts of the most skilled physicians have failed to check its ravages, this remedy, however, has cured the most malignant cases, both of children and adults, and under the most trying conditions, which proves it to be the best medicine in the world for bowel complaints. Cure for Flux.

My little boy when two years of age, was taken very ill with bloody flux. I was advised to use Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy, and luckily procured part of a bottle. I carefully read the directions and gave it accordingly. He was very low, but slowly and surely he began to improve, gradually recovered, and is now as stout and strong as ever. I feel sure it saved his life. I never can praise the Remedy half its worth. I am sorry every one in the world does not know how good it is, as I do.—Mrs. Lina S. OTHER TOWNS SUFFER ALSO

Reports From Many of Them. Sparrows Killed Notes

Saturday evening about six o'clock or a little later, a rain began, that finally turned to a cyclone. For several hours heavy black clouds had been threatening us, but had gone around. But when they did hit us, there began a heavy rainfall with wind. In few minutes the air turned black and the clouds seemed to fairly come down to earth. The center of the storm seems to have traveled east along Seventh street, bearing a little to the north, and from this point, we could see it from the COURIER office fully. The street seemed full of black smoke mixed with sheets of white steam, the latter appearance caused probably by the fierce wind blowing the sheets of rain into fine spray. For a few moments its fury increased till the appearance was appalling. Then it got so dark we could not see across the street, but could hear the cracking of material as signs and awnings gave way, though our doors and windows were closed. When it became lighter the work of the storm was seen everywhere. Signs were gone eastward, and awnings were in shreds that cracked like whiplashes. The streets were running with water which still kept coming down. It gradually decreased, and then the storm-bound people could get out and look about. There was more or less damage done everywhere. It was by this time dark, but torn trees and the like were to be seen everywhere. The people began to throng the streets to pick up their property. Boys began to find hundreds of dead birds, English sparrows especially, in the public square where the destruction of trees was great. Not only had the birds been violently blown about, but many were drowned in the water, of which great torrents had fallen. They were wet and helpless, and those not killed were easily taken. Marshal West was soon out and helped to clear the streets and sidewalks, continuing at this about all night. The people were awakened next morning from their Sunday rest at about five by the sound of chopping, which went on more or less all that day.

As soon as the storm slackened efforts were made to stop the flow of water pouring into Dr. Nusbaum's office and into Hebel's store below, as the roof was torn off. It was fixed up as much as possible till daylight, when more effective means could be used. Schaab's furniture store also had part of the roof off and the goods had to be moved in both stores.

Notes

A. J. Ralston's fine box elder tree was blown down. It was probably the largest in the county.

The worst loss among our business men was that of Hebel Bros. The tin roof was blown from a part of the building and the water came in like a flood. Dr. Nusbanm's office and the law office on the second floor suffered first, and and then it soaked into the store below. Soon the plastering of the ceiling began to fall, and show cases and goods had to be moved to the north side where they were comparatively safe. But early on Sunday morniug, Frank Rush with a force of men went to work putting on the roof or replacing it with new tin, and by night it was nearly safe.

A part of the roof on the Schaab furniture building was also stripped off. But the goods were moved with but little damage. Workmen began repairing it Monday.

The fierce wind drove thousands of English sparrows roosting in the trees on the public square against the court house or onto the wet ground and being thoroughly drenched, they could not loosen their wings and in their stunned and dazed condition they were helpless. They were gathered up by the hundred and killed or carried off and many piled up in the sheriff's office to dry out. Many were dashed to pieces and killed by the storm and were found all over the grounds and in the gutters. John Knoder dressed a hundred or more, and made a potpie of the breasts.

All over town, the lovely maple shade trees suffered. A dozen or more on the public square were torn to pieces, greatly damaging the looks of the park we have always been so proud of. At Wm. McIntyre's, D. C. Caruth's, E. Zimmerman's and across the street opposite the south block of the Kiblinger factory, was the worst ruins of shade trees. Apple and pear trees were whipped clean of fruit generally, and even in town there must have been hundreds of bushels of fine winter apples strewn over the ground. The old cherry trees are nearly all gone. At the Catholic parsonage one big tree fell against the house.

Among the other trees blown down is the big willow behind which Parrett stood when he shot John Fretz. Pity it had not blown down before that happened.

The queerest thing happened to Ed. Eldridge. He found a peacock lodged in one of his apple trees nearly exhausted, mainly stripped of feathers and so bewildered as to be almost helpless. He took it down and cared for it and it will no doubt be saved. But no one knows of any peacocks within several miles of Auburn. It spent a part of Sunday on Lew Bowers' barn.

Lewis' lumber warehouse was partly unroofed, and Bachtel's wagon shed destroyed. John Turner's barn was considerably wrecked. The tall frame building of McDowell & Carter was somewhat twisted and out of shape. The smoke stacks on the band sawmill were blown over and that at the old Trentman factory leaned over.

A great many chimneys were blown off, in some instances sending the bricks half across the street and dropping them about equally in straight line from the building.

No less than fifteen privies were overturned in the storm, but fortunately no larger buildings.

The wind pump at the Zimmerman factory, the one at Bert Robbins and that of Wm. Carr in the country are more or less wrecked.

A strawstack at Wm. McKinley's was blown over, covering up a horse and some cattle but all were got out alive.

Miss Rose Blair and her nephew, Harold, were here in a covered carriage, with a spirited horse, and were just starting back to Waterloo as the storm began. On reaching the north end of town they could see the danger, and turning about, drove back at high speed and reached Trout's livery barn just as the storm began its worst. Here they staid about half an hour and then got to the home of the COURIER family, and staid till morning. All efforts to telegraph or telephone to her father at Waterloo failed. But later a young man came from that place on horseback to learn their whereabouts. He was sent back to report their safety.

At the fair ground the large floral hall, built in the form of a cross was slid from its foundations except at the east end. The west end of the long part of the cross was torn to pieces, and the wreck crushed like egg shells. Several parties had put their damp wheat on the floor to dry, and it got wet again. Sunday they gathered up all they could and and spread it out on the floor of the east part, thus saving most of it. Hi Cupp, Green Lahnum, Cal. Baird and several others had wheat there.

Cal. Baird's barn near the fair ground and Mort Wilson's are both partly unroofed, and Pete Grogg's west of town. The north half of the roof of Mr. Eckhart's barn west of town was blown off and Mr. Stimley's was injured.

Dr. Ford lost a good deal of timber on his farm east of town. Charlie Rugman and Philip Fluke, west of town lost a lot more timber at about the same points the big storm of Aug. 20, two years before had hit them.

A. B. Walsworth and little boy were going home from town and were caught in the cyclone. The little lad was driving one team and following up his father, who had the other, but kept very cool for a boy. At length they had to turn to one side and wait until the storm was over.

The storm was accompanied with the most constant and vivid lightning, and much damage was done in burning out fuses, etc., and the electric light plant soon had to stop, and the town being left in darkness added to the gloom.

At Chicago and other points in that section, there was no severe storm Saturday evening, but they had something like it in the morning. The B. & O. ticket station in South Chicago was unroofed.

At Huntington Wallace's show tent was blown over, as well as a number of animal cages. The animals were badly scared, but only a few got loose. The horses, 300, had a big time, but by morning all were secured.

At St Joe the steeple of the M. P. church was blown down, but not much other damage except in shade trees. At Columbia City Dan Myers. restaurant had some plate glass broken one or two small out buildings were wrecked. The Western Union operator was just going home when the storm picked him up and landed him on a truck. He got off and crawled into a ditch and lay there till the worst was over. He was not hurt.

The Institute.

Saturday the two principal teachers arrived, and were here over Sunday, to be in readiness for the work to begin to-day. They are Mrs. Emma Mont McRae, who is at the Swineford House, and Prof. Chas. O. Merica, who is stopping with his uncle, Supt. Merica. Both are able educators, and will do good work. At 10 a. m. to-day there were present exactly 151 teachers who responded to their names at roll call. This lacks but two of being enough to fill all the school rooms in the county. There was singing, led by C. A. Woodcox, followed by scripture reading and prayer by Rev. J. D. Brosy. Mrs. McRae then gave an informal talk, outlining her work in English Literature, and Prof. C. O. Merica made a similar talk on the subject he will teach, Educational Psychology. In the afternoon the regular work began. The institute bids fair to be one of the very best of the many excellent ones we have had. This afternoon there was a valuable lesson on music by Prof. Louis D. Eichhorn, Supervisor of Music, Logansport.

Chipped His Thumb.

Thursday's Daily.

W. E. Buckmaster, of Kendallville, working on the Central Telephone chipped off his thumb yesterday. He was helping to put up a pole, and went to cut something with a hatchet, when by a mis-directed blow, he struck his thumb. To-day, he came in and had Dr. Baxter fix it up. It will be somewhat troublesome for awhile, but not serious.

Two Lives Saved.

Mrs. Phoebe Thomas, of Junction City Ill., was told by her doctors she had consumption and that there was no hope for her, but two bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery completely cured her and she says it saved her life. Mr. Thomas Eggers, 139 Florida St., San Francisco, suffered from a dreadful cold, approaching consumption. He tried without result, everything else, then he bought one bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery and in two weeks was cured. He is naturally thankful. It is such results, of which these are samples, that prove the wonderful efficacy of this medicine in coughs and colds. Free trial bottles at Robbins & McCord's drugstore. Regular size 50 cents and $1. 5

THE NEWS RECORD.

SUMMARY OF A WEEK'S HAPPENINGS.

The Latest News as Flashed Over the Wires from All Parts of the World—Regarding Politics, Religion, Casualties, Commerce and Industry.

A BANK ROBBERY.

A Daring Robber Secures $2,000 in Bills and Escapes Capture.

Kansas City (Mo.) special: The stock yards branch of the American National Bank, which is located on the second floor of the Live Stock Exchange, was robbed of $2,000 in cash by a quick and nervy thief. The money was all in bills, and $200 in silver in the same drawer was left undisturbed. Cashier Boswell, who was in charge of the bank, secured $2,200 from the main institution, and going to the Exchange Building placed the money in the drawer under the counter as is his custom. Having a letter to deliver on the floor below, he went down stairs a moment, leaving the door of the banking room open. When Cashier Boswell returned he found the drawer open, a jimmy having been used, the bills gone and marks of nails in the shoes of the thief where he jumped over the counter in making his escape.

Fight with Burglars.

Marshal Arnold of Orville, Ohio, and two assistants, tried to arrest four men who had been trying to sell property that it was thought had been stolen. The men turned and ran. Arnold captured one and shot another, who escaped. One of the two men who were pursued by citizens turned and began firing, one of the shots passing into the right leg of Robert Springer. A big posse of men gave chase, and the men were found hiding in a cornfield. Packages of cutlery found in their pockets and buried stuff, showed that it had been in the cornfields, where they had stolen from Wm. Pontius, Rockford, O.

Battles in Cuba.

Havana special: The Spanish force commanded by Col. Hernandez, has had three engagements with rebels under Bermudez, near Isabel, Province of Pinar Del Rio. Fifteen of the rebels were killed. The troops lost a captain and twenty-one privates wounded.

Gen. Bosch reports that the rebel leader Rabi attacked a convoy at Jiguani, near Bayamo. The insurgents were repulsed. Their losses are unknown. Twenty-two of the troops were wounded. The troops found a number of unexploded torpedoes in the road.

Fell Down Stairs.

A strange double fatality occurred at the National Soldiers' Home at Milwaukee, Wis., the victims being Richard Botfield, aged about 78, late of the United States Navy, and Wm. I. Gordon, late of Company D, Ninth Ohio Infantry. They were assisting each other up the steps of the main building when both fell backward to the stone flagging, and were so badly hurt that they died soon after.

Bride at 14.

Alva Kessler, aged 18, and Ida Kendall, aged 14, were married at Kokomo, Ind., having eloped from Pleva. After the family had gone to bed the girl threw her clothing out of an upstairs window and climbed down a grapevine to the ground. The youthful lovers being then driven to Kokomo in a buggy, were married on a license obtained, it is alleged, through misrepresentation.

Jews Are Forbidden.

Washington, special: The Turkish legation has received the following communication from the sublime porte:

"The access to the Empire is expressly forbidden to the Jewish emigrants."

The Boston Manufacturing Company's plant, employing 1,000 hands, has also closed for five weeks, and the American Watch Company has decided to continue the shut down of its big factories. By the falling of a draw the caboose of a freight on the Louisville and Nashville Road, near Morris Station, Ky., was thrown down an embankment. Joshua Wright, a brakeman, was instantly killed. John Shieger, another brakemen, was fatally injured.

At Perry, O. T., Sheriff Andy Folsom has been arrested by a Deputy United States Marshal on a charge of having murdered a wealthy cattle man named Long some nine years ago. Folsom was suspected at the time of the murder, but was not prosecuted.

CIRCLES THE GLOBE.

An Interesting Itinerary Pursued by a Connecticut Man.

John J. Brough, a well-known merchant of Manchester, Conn., aged 45 years, has returned from a trip around the world, which consumed exactly a year. Mr. Brough traveled on a bicycle wherever possible. Of the 60,000 miles covered by him 40,000 were by water, 12,000 on his wheel, and the rest by railroad in different countries. Mr. Brough sailed from New York Aug. 17, 1895. He was accompanied on his start by his brother-in-law, Cyrus P. Forsyth, of Black Creek, Ont. The two landed at Queenstown, Ireland, and while on a tour of the island Mr. Forsyth fell from his bicycle and received a compound fracture of his arm. His companion proceeded alone. He visited Scotland, North and South Wales, and many places in England. From London he went by water to Dieppe, in France, then wheeling to Holland, Germany. At Frankfort he won a fifty-mile bicycle race and with it a prize of $100. In Italy he rode his wheel from Rome to Naples. At Constantinople he was in prison for three nights and two days for being without a passport. Later he went to Sicily. From Sicily he went to Egypt. Later he found himself in Arabia, and then made his way by Bombay to Calcutta. From the latter city he made a journey to the Strait settlements. Then to Rango, on the Burmah, and on to China. From China he went to Japan and overland to Yokohama. Sailing from that Japanese port he reached San Francisco.

GAIL HAMILTON.

The Noted Writer and Controversialist Passes Away.

Abigail Dodge, better known as Gail Hamilton, died at her home in Hamilton, Mass., Monday evening, without having recovered consciousness since sustaining a shock of paralysis Sunday morning. Miss Dodge for many years was a conspicuous figure in Washington. She went to the capital early in the '50s to teach school and through her ability with the pen she secured a position on the staff of the National Era. Miss Dodge was perhaps the best of the many intellectual women that have sprung up in the United States during the last thirty years. She was best known probably from her pungent and rather erratic writings and the strong espousal of the political fortunes of Secretary Blaine. Between herself and Mr. Blaine there was a keen and perfect sympathy. Gail Hamilton's first book was published in 1862. Since that time her pen has never been idle. She has contributed largely to magazines and to periodicals and some of her work is of an order that compares well with that done by the best writers among the men. No woman has written more clearly, forcefully or with equal intelligence and understanding on the subject of politics. From 1865 to 1867 she was one of the editors of "Our Young Folks," a children's magazine published in Boston, and subsequently merged with St. Nicholas.

TEN ARE PROBABLY LOST.

Boat's Crew of Bark Flora Stafford Is Missing.

According to private advices received in Philadelphia ten men of the crew of twenty-one men of the British bark Flora Stafford, which was burned at sea several weeks ago, perished. She sailed from Newcastle, N. S. W., April 22, for Manila, with about 2,000 tons of coal, and on June 8, in latitude 6 north, longitude 13 east, she took fire, presumably through spontaneous combustion. The flames soon got beyond control, and the crew was compelled to take to the boats. Capt. Oscar Smith, a brother to Capt. Smith of this city, took to one boat with ten men, and the mate with nine others of the crew got in the second boat. Capt. Smith, with his ten men, succeeded in being saved; but nothing has ever been heard from the chief mate and his crew.

DOGS SAVED NANSEN'S LIFE.

It Develops that Their Barking Directed Him to Jackson.

It now develops that the meeting between Dr. Nansen and Jackson, the English explorer, was the result of the barking of the dogs. The Norwegian and his companions were exploring one day when they heard barking, and, following the sounds, to their amazement they reached Jackson's camp. Vardo has been en fete and decorated in honor of the return of Dr. Nansen. Had the dogs not guided Nansen and his companions to Jackson's party they would probably have wandered on until they perished of cold and hunger, as they were lost at the time and knew not whither they were going.

Opposed to Hazing.

President Cleveland, as commander-in-chief of the army, has put his foot down forcibly on the practice of hazing at West Point Military Academy. Two cases of hazing have just been before him for consideration and in both he has approved the sentence of dismissal imposed by the court martial. Cadet Giles Bishop was found guilty recently of requiring Cadet C. J. Harris to stand on one foot in a constrained and painful position. Though he pleaded not guilty before the court, he was convicted. In approving his dismissal from the service of the United States President Cleveland says: "The offense of maltreating and abusing new cadets by upper class men is so mean and cowardly and so opposed to every trait that should characterize a gentleman and a true soldier, that severe punishment should not be necessary to its prevention. If, however, punishment must be resorted to to effect a discontinuance of this disgraceful practice I can do no less than to resist all appeals for clemency. I am determined in all cases of this description, when the proof is clear, to refuse relief to those cadets who, in violation of a wholesome regulation of the military academy, indulge in the brutal, cowardly treatment of beginners, commonly called hazing." Since the famous case of ten years ago, when the ears of a colored cadet at West Point were cut off, there have been no serious cases of hazing. The cadets in their idleness this summer, however, have resorted again to hazing to occupy their time and several young men have been severely punished.

Tit for Tat.

The French people, who have for so long imposed upon a credulous American public by shipping back to them as the finest of French products Maine herring and Southern cotton seed oil in the shape of sardines and olive oil, are now suffering from a counter imposition which is brought to light by United States Consul Germain at Zurich. In the course of a report to the State Department on the subject of American dried fruits in Switzerland, he speaks of the success that has attended the introduction in France last season of California prunes and then following out the prospect thus opened up, he says that French receivers are arranging to have all such fruit packed in cases, similar to those used in France, using French marks, so that the goods may be sold to the retailer as French fruit.

Saved His Life and Lost It.

While attempting to ford Walnut River George B. Mogle, of Cheney, Kan., fell from his horse, but, grasping the animal's tail, was dragged to the bank. Just as he relaxed his hold the horse kicked him into the river and he was drowned.

Havana's Condition Dreadful.

Health Officer Alvah H. Doty, who has just returned from Havana on the steamship Orizaba, said he found the Cuban capital in a frightful sanitary condition. He appointed resident physicians at Havana, Santiago and Cienfugos, who will see that the laws of the port of New York in regard to passengers from fever infected places are enforced at the point of embarkation. Dr. Doty could not find the health officer or the health office in Havana. "Within the last two weeks preceding my departure," Dr. Doty said, "there were 300 cases of yellow fever there. No attempt has been made to sewer the city properly. By simply cutting through a narrow strip of land and dredging a channel the city's refuse might be carried into the Gulf stream and far out to sea. With proper sanitary precautions Havana would be a remarkably fine city. The Spanish soldiers get sick on their way to Havana in the transports. When they land some of them are half-dead from the effects of the fever." Dr. Doty had a talk with Consul General Lee, who, the Doctor says, is awakened at all hours of the night by people who want him to stop the execution of friends or relatives. If there is a chance to save them, Gen. Lee, the Doctor says, immediately tries to do so.

COLLECTOR IS ACCUSED.

Special Agent Unearths Frauds in San Francisco Custom House.

During the last six months H. H. Moore, special agent of the Treasury Department, has been engaged in a systematic investigation of the management of the San Francisco custom house. That he has unearthed extensive frauds upon the Government is evident by the fact that three or more employes have been dismissed from the service, while others have been indicted and are awaiting trial for violations of Federal laws. The latest testimony secured by the special agent drags into the scandal Collector John H. Wise and his son, Harry Wise, the first named being accused of knowing that ex-Chinese Interpreter Dick Williams was making money by the illegal landing of Chinese, while the latter is accused of having accepted valuable presents from Williams and with attempting to aid him in an effort to intimidate witnesses.

DRAGGED BEHIND A HORSE.

Fearful Cruelty of a Farmer in Manitoba to a Little Lad.

John Glenn, a farmer of Rapid City, a settlement near Winnipeg, is being closely guarded by law officers from indignant settlers. Some time ago Glenn adopted a 14-year-old lad. On Saturday the lad, who had been ill-treated, ran away. Glenn took a horse and followed, catching the little fellow about ten miles out of the settlement. On Sunday the boy was found on the roadside, dying from the effects of terrible bruises all over his body. Before he died the boy recovered sufficient to tell that his guardian, when they got to a lonely part of the road, tied a rope around his waist, and, pushing him off the horse, dragged him along the road. The horse was galloped several miles at full speed. The child had nearly all his bones broken. Glenn left him by the roadside, thinking he was dead.

Woman Dies of a Spider's Bite.

At Phillipsburg, N. J., Mrs. A. Melinda Slavin, wife of John Slavin and the mother of nine children, while performing her household duties was bitten on the arm by a small spider. She brushed the insect off and gave no heed to the small, stinging wound which it had made. Her arm began to swell, and her condition was so alarming that a physician was called in. Blood poisoning had resulted from the bite of the spider. The woman died in great agony.

View on Spain's Claims.

The London newspapers comment at length on Spain's bill for damages against the United States, as a result of the fitting out in American ports of filibustering expeditions destined for Cuba, and to the decision arrived at in the case of the Alabama. The Globe says: "The United States' acceptance of the Geneva award makes it absolutely impossible for them to repudiate their liability under the present circumstances with any show of reason or justice."

Out of Canadian Mines.

Official returns from British Columbia to the Dominion Government show that in 1894 the aggregate value of precious metals mined in the province was $1,000,000; last year the value was $5,038,375, and this year the output will be greater, judging from the three months ended July 15, when the estimated value of gold smelted and shipped was $1,750,000.

Widow Gets Only $612.

The administrator of the estate of the late Gov. Chase of Indiana has made his final report. After the debts were paid the widow received $612. Gov. Chase had invested heavily in mining stocks that are considered worthless.

Neels Are Champions.

In the national lawn tennis tournament at Newport, R. I., the championship in doubles was won easily by C. B. and R. S. Neel, of Chicago, from R. D. Wrenn and Malcolm Chace, who were champions last year.

NANSEN'S TRIP NORTH

EXPLORER SAYS HE NEARLY REACHED THE POLE.

Claims to Have Reached a Point Within 200 Miles of the Coveted Object—Went Four Degrees Further than Any Former Explorer.

Arctic Adventures.

The story of Dr. Nansen's attempt to reach the North Pole is interesting, like the accounts of previous explorations of the same kind, in the sense that the world always likes to read about personal adventures in remote and mysterious regions. There is a certain charm in records of courage and endurance even when the results are not of any material importance; and the results of these successive Arctic journeys can hardly be said to have justified the expense and privation, the suffering and fatality that they have involved. Dr. Nansen claims to have proceeded four degrees further than any former explorer, and to have reached a point within about 200 miles of the coveted object. Looking northward from there, he says, there was nothing to be seen but a vast white wonder of ice, "hummock and hummock to the horizon, like a sea of frozen breakers." The sight was a grand one, no doubt, but it was also a profitless one, practically speaking.

THE FRAM.

MAP SHOWING APPROXIMATELY HOW DR. NANSEN HAS ECLIPSED THE RECORDS OF ALL PREVIOUS ARCTIC EXPEDITIONS.

Dr. Nansen says that the Fram drifted with the ice in a westerly direction to 84 degrees and he expects the vessel will eventually arrive at Spitzbergen. He adds that wherever they penetrated they found the ice broken. Large patches of water were also found, 3,800 meters deep. Below the depth of 190 meters the water was appreciably warmer, probably owing to the Gulf stream. Rocky scars, of which the explorers had no previous knowledge, prevented entrance into the Olenek River for days. In consequence of the scarcity of dogs with the expedition, Dr. Nansen was compelled to turn back at 86.15. He adds that if he had been provided with a sufficient number of dogs and canoes the pole would have been reached. The land voyage was most arduous, but extremely available scientific results were obtained. In 1895 Dr. Nansen reached the north coast of Franz Joseph Land and built a stone house in which he lived the whole winter. The Jackson-Harmsworth expedition arrived at Franz Joseph Land the following spring.

There was the usual amount of hardship and peril in the journey which led to this recent inconclusive result. On several occasions there were narrow escapes from death while navigating among the huge blocks of ice. There was much wandering through snow and in intense cold on sledges drawn by dogs. One winter was spent in a hut built of stones, earth and moss, and having a roof of walrus hide, tied down with ropes and covered with snow; and for a period of ten months bear meat and blubber were the only food. During weeks the mercury was frozen, the lowest temperature being 62 degrees below zero; and at one time the vessel of the party, the Fram, was firmly frozen in ice of more than thirty feet of measured thickness. These incidents show in a general way what difficulties were encountered, and what bravery and fortitude were required to overcome them. It does not appear that there was any weakening on the part of any of the adventurers because of these severe trials, but it remains, nevertheless, for Dr. Nansen to explain why he left the Fram and all of his companions but one and made his way back to civilization.

DR. NANSEN IN HIS STUDY.

We are assured that Dr. Nansen brings back with him several maps and many photographs to increase our knowledge of the region that he visited. He was gone three years, and there is no reason to believe, that is to say, that he accomplished anything of substantial importance. The fact that he got nearer to the pole than any previous explorer counts only in a comparative way, and not as a decisive triumph. It can be said, perhaps, that he has added something to the possibility of ultimate success in the case, and this will encourage other adventurous spirits to make other attempts of that sort, and in the course of time the pole may be reached.

The appeal of the British Government against the acquittal of Capt. Lothaire, the Belgian officer who caused the English trader Stokes to be hanged in the Congo region for selling arms and ammunition to the natives, was opened in Brussels before the superior court of the Congo State.

DEFINE THEIR CREED.

The Gold Democrats Issue a Declaration of Principles.

The National Executive Committee of the gold Democrats, in session at Chicago, has issued an address to the Democrats of the United States. This address is, in effect, the platform on which the National Democratic party goes before the people. Another declaration of principles will be adopted, of course, at the national gathering in Indianapolis as a part of convention routine, but it is not overstatement of the case to say that in the main it can do but little more than paraphrase the declaration issued from Chicago.

The Indianapolis conference evolved the call for the national convention and no more. It was agreed there that the members of the party throughout the nation were entitled to a statement of the reasons why certain leaders take issue with the principles enunciated in the Chicago convention—a statement fuller and more explicit than could be embodied in a call for a convention. Whereas the convention call prepared at Indianapolis was a declaration of war by gold Democrats, it was designed that the address to be prepared by the Executive Committee should be a call to arms.

PROSPECTS OF FRUIT CROP.

Apples Indicate a Better Yield and Peaches a Reduced One.

The Agricultural Department's August report of fruit conditions is as follows:

Apples—The general condition advanced during July from 64.6 to 65.7, a gratifying indication of sustained crop prospects. This general average covers all kinds of apples in all sections of the country. Notwithstanding a general condition of 64.6 July 1, which was low as far as the crop of the country was concerned, it was specifically stated that "prospects for excellent crops" continued in States of the northern belt from Maine to Minnesota and in Iowa, with fair but comparatively smaller crops in Ohio, Illinois and Indiana. In the present report a very general betterment is shown in that region. The condition is very uneven in Ohio, Illinois and Indiana, many counties reporting entire failure, while others report abundant crops, which accounts for the somewhat lower conditions of those States. In the past a final condition of 75 per cent. or over has been followed by an abundant supply of apples, so that the excellence of the crops of the present season, in this particular and extensive region, is plainly evident. In other parts of the country, with a few exceptions, the condition is low.

Peaches—Present returns show a generally reduced condition. Of the commercial States the best prospects still are found in Delaware, Michigan, Ohio and Maryland, while in New Jersey, Virginia, Georgia and California percentages indicate less than half a crop. In Delaware the early crop was nearly ruined by curculio and "yellows" and fruit on the trees is badly stung there and in Maryland, though a fine product is expected from the mountain orchards of the latter State. In Michigan and Ohio excellent crops are indicated.

Grapes—The condition of grapes is generally high. Some complaints are made of rot, due to excessively moist season, but seemingly not extensive enough to much affect the general condition.

AMBULANCE FOR OLD TOPERS.

How Salvationists Hope to Reach the Drunkards of Gotham.

The Salvation Army has devised a new method of reforming, or, at least, of helping men who have been unfortunate enough to get drunk. It is called the ambulance liquor cure. It will be tried in New York. The ambulances are to patrol by night those parts of the city where the largest crop of street "drunks" is to be found. One pretty army lass will drive and two more will assist the helpless victim of spirits into the wagon. He or she will be taken to the army headquarters, given a bed and a breakfast in the morning. If the lodger is grateful for this kindness and has a few cents to give away, the army will not refuse to take the fee. This sort of crusading smacks a little of kidnaping, but the police will not interfere with it. It will save the force some trouble, and the unfortunates the humiliation of an appearance in the police court. The ambulances to be used will be distinguished from those used by the police and hospitals with a large circle inclosing a carmine heart and surounded by the lettering, "League of Love Ambulance."

The ratification at Columbus of the Republican ticket and opening of the Ohio campaign was a stupendous affair. It was under the auspices of the State Executive Committee and the Ohio League of Republican Clubs, and there was an immense influx of organized clubs and adherents to the party from all over the State. The features of the day were a parade and a mass meeting under a mammoth tent. Senator Sherman presided and Senator-elect Foraker and Gen. Stewart L. Woodford of New York were among the speakers.

ALL LEAVE LOUISVILLE.

National Meet of the L. A. W. Wags Success.

Things not originally planned by either the race or entertainment committee in Louisville were plentifully served on Saturday, the closing day of the L. A. W. '96 meet. There was a dramatic touch to the farewell scene, which, although it made the grand stand people uncomfortable, added a lively interest to current events. Rain and Cooper were the elements which sent spectators and hosts into a frenzy. The rain had given evidence for several hours that it was qualifying for a hot campaign, but Cooper's act was a genuine surprise. Not enough water fell to induce the holders of seats to seek safety away from the track, so all remained to see the outcome of the verbal sparring matches. Cooper was the first man to cross the tape in the five-mile national championship, but met with disqualification by the judges. It was claimed by them that Cooper had dug his elbows into Bald and made faces at him unbecoming a rider. The crowd saw this and at once set up a cry of disapproval. Cooper was hissed and Bald was called for, but Bald did not win. The championship was hung on Becker's belt, Aker received second place and Nat Butler third.

TOM COOPER.

The most popular winning of the meet was done by Walter Sanger ("old Wooden Shoes.") He is a big fellow, the most powerfully built of any man on the circuit, but his weight was a matter of insignificance to his admirers at the close of the two-mile professional handicap, when they carried him up and down on their shoulders in front of the grand stand, while the crowd of men and women stood on their seats and let Sanger's name test the full extent of their lung power. The enthusiasm was created originally on the opening day of the meet, when Sanger's appearance in the one mile was the signal for a chorus of calls for "Wooden Shoes." Although virtually he won the event, Butler, who had taken advantage of his sprints and never tried to stir from his hind wheel, shot in ahead of him at the tape. On the next day Gardiner won in the same manner.

WALTER SANGER.

Following the races the greater number of visitors packed their collars and souvenirs and took trains home. There were no disappointments, except, perhaps, a few of the riders and some of the manufacturers.

G. A. R. COLONY A FAILURE.

The Veterans at Fitzgerald, Ga., Are in Hard Luck.

An Atlanta correspondent says: The colonists, who are trying to build up the new town of Fitzgerald, Ga., are in hard luck. Last winter the town had 8,000 inhabitants and about 150 business houses, but the hot weather has driven more than half of the settlers back to their old homes, where many of them will remain permanently. Disease and death have thinned the ranks of the colonists, and they dread what the future has in store for them.

It was a mistake for these people to settle in a region where summer begins with April and ends with October. They cannot endure the climate, and they are too far from the markets to make truck farming profitable. The natural conditions of the place were bad enough, but the colonists have made them worse by building houses suited to a cold climate.

Then they have their stables and cow sheds near their cottages, and in warm weather these conveniences are very disagreeable and dangerous. But some of the plucky citizens are determined to hold out and many of those who have left are expected to return in the fall and make another effort to overcome the adverse forces of nature. The Georgians are anxious to see the newcomers succeed, but they regret that they did not locate their town on the Piedmont slope in northern Georgia, where the climate enables people to work outdoors all the year round, and where malaria is unknown. The failure of Fitzgerald will be regarded as a calamity by the progressive Southerners, who desire to see an influx of white immigrants.

GOVERNMENTS MAPS ISSUED.

Many New Features Brought Out in the Finely Executed Work.

The big general maps of the United States, issued by the general land office for this year, have just been issued. The result of the work of engraving and printing is one of the most complete and finely drawn sets yet issued by the Government. The feature is the division of the country into sections, marking the various cessions and purchases from other Governments. The tracts covered in the original thirteen colonies and the Gadsden purchase, the Texas annexation, the cessions of Louisiana, Alaska, Mexico and Florida are clearly set out for the first time. Commissioner Lamoreux is the originator of the idea. Only a limited number of maps have been issued, and a large saving over previous years is made in the contract price of 62 cents each to the Government.

INDIANA INCIDENTS TERSELY TOLD.

Defalcation and Suicide by Bankers—Kelley Amazes South Bend—Family Near Anderson Who Have No Fear Nor Use for a Dentist.

South Bend Is Puzzled.

When Josiah E. Kelley fired a bullet into his heart, in the basement of his home, in South Bend, Thursday evening, he made full confession that he was a defaulter of the funds of the First National Bank, of which he was assistant cashier, and with which he had been connected since boyhood. South Bend has had more than its share of sensations concerning its banks, but the discovery that Kelley was a defaulter, and his act of self-destruction following the discovery of his guilt by the National Bank Examiner, John L. Vance, shook the business as well as the social foundations of the community as they had not been shaken before. If there was anybody in the banking business in South Bend in whom the people generally had entire confidence, it was Josiah E. Kelley. The bank with which he had been connected since 1868 is one of the oldest and soundest institutions in the State. It was founded in 1843 as "The State Bank of Indiana" and became a national bank in 1863, a short time before Kelley entered it as an office boy. The only feature of the lamentable incident, from which the owners of the bank and the business public generally can derive any gratification is that the defalcation, amounting in round numbers to $24,100, will in no wise cripple the bank or even impair its credit.

Have No Use for Teeth.

A family of freaks was unearthed near Lapel, west of Anderson, Saturday. It consists of several people without a tooth. James Leonard is the father. He is past 50 years of age, and has passed this much of his life sound and healthy without the assistance of a molar or even a baby tooth. None never grew. Twenty years ago he married a woman who had as fine a set of teeth as could be found. She still possesses them. They had four children, all of whom are full grown and perfect in regard to health, but who, like their father, never had a tooth in their heads. Their gums, however, came down much further than is ordinarily the case and are hard and as firm as bone. Mr. Leonard is able to crack nuts in his jaws without pain and seems to get along fully as well as though he were possessed of a full set of teeth. The children's jaws are quite as firm and strong. All are perfectly contented, have no use for dentists and no aches or pains in their jaws. They live on a farm and seldom go away from home. They are fairly well to do.

All Over the State.

Frank J. Wref, of South Bend, was sandbagged and robbed of $78 while on his way home.

Early last April a sick man arrived at Branchville and took lodgings at the Essay Hotel. As he did not register his name he soon became known in the village as the "stranger." No one knew whence he came, and the only place he was ever heard to mention during his limited conversations was Evansville. During the last six weeks he was confined to his bed, and Sunday he died. He was always neatly dressed and all bills were paid promptly whenever service was rendered. There is much speculation over his action in seeking rural seclusion and awaiting death in a little hamlet fifteen miles from railway or river connection.

Emmett Cox, a farmer near Avilla, attempted to murder his wife and brother-in-law early Tuesday morning. Some time ago Cox beat his wife, and she left him, returning to her father's house. Cox has been unable to effect a reconciliation, and during the night went to the barn and secreted himself to await her coming. As the wife and her brother, William Halferty, approached to do the morning chores, Cox sprang from his hiding place and began firing at them. At the first shot Mrs. Cox grabbed the revolver and received the bullet through her hand. Cox then struck her over the head with the weapon. The brother interfered, and Cox shot him twice, once in the leg and again in the right groin. The would-be murderer then fled, gashing his throat with a knife as he ran. He was captured and is in the county jail at Albion. His victims will recover.

A case almost surpassing credulity has developed at English Lake by the return of William Chambers after an absence of forty-seven years. In the spring of 1849 Chambers, then a young man, left his wife, a bride of fifteen months, and one child, a babe in the cradle, to seek his fortune on the Pacific coast. He took up a claim and letters to his wife told of the wealth he was accumulating. He was gone a year when the letters stopped. The wife still clung to the hope that he would return, but months lapsed into years and still Chambers was absent. Fifteen years from the time Chambers left Indiana Mrs. Chambers was again married and five children were born, all of whom are living. Her second husband's name was Wolke, and he lived until 1891. Sunday Chambers, aged 69, his figure bowed with the weight of years, returned home. He did not expect to find his wife, but it was to learn her fate and to locate the whereabouts of the child, who had grown to manhood, that he left California, where his fortune had been made. Chambers says that the success on which he had first calculated did not materialize. He became discouraged, and fearful that the news of his failure would be a crushing blow to his wife he ceased to write to her. When the time came that a fortune was within his grasp word came that she had died of a broken heart. He gave up his life to the pursuit of wealth, hoping that his fortune would become the inheritance of his only son, of whose whereabouts he was also ignorant. The long-separated couple will again live together.

Miss Lizzie Reasor, living in Cass County, started to walk to St. Louis Wednesday morning, where she is to meet B. A. Stensell of Denver. The long overland journey is to have its sequel in the marriage of the couple. Miss Reasor is 25 years of age, and unusually pretty. Stensell advertised for a wife and Miss Reasor was the successful applicant for his affection. He gives his age as 31. The novel agreement that they should meet in St. Louis was fixed upon in lieu of Miss Reasor's inability to go to Denver. She expects to be assisted on her journey by persons en route.

While Eddie, the 12-year-old son of William South, of Lebanon, was playing with a revolver the weapon was accidentally discharged, the shot taking effect in the breast of Eddie McCoy, a lad about the same age, who was fatally injured.

Thomas Knotter, of Crown Point, was arrested for bigamy. He married his first wife eight years ago in Oklahoma and moved to Chicago during the World's Fair in 1893. He made the acquaintance of Fannie Hock, who married him under the impression that he was a single man. Knotter had two children by his first wife, deserting his family four years after he was married. Both Knotter and his wife will be tried for bigamy.

THE SILENT SHORE.

By John Bloundelle-Burton

To those more directly interested in the murder and in the discovery of the assassin, the passing summer seemed to bring but little promise of success.

Lord Penlyn knew that Senor Guffanta had left London, but beyond that he did not know what had become of him, nor whether it was the business of Don Rodriguez or pleasure, or the search for the murderer, that had taken him away.

Stuart, who still believed him innocent of the slightest participation or knowledge of the crime, yet did not feel inclined to give him the least information as to the Senor's movements, fearing that, if Smerdon was the man—of which, as yet, he by no means felt positive—he might learn that he was being pursued; and so contented himself with saying as little as possible.

As to Dobson, he had now come to the conclusion that the "Signor," as he always called him, was an arrant humbug, and really knew no more about the murder than he did himself.

And as the detective had already received a handsome sum of money from Lord Penlyn for his services, such as they were, and as he had at the present moment what he called "one or two other good little jobs on," he gradually devoted himself to these matters, and the murder of Mr. Cundall ceased to entirely occupy his efforts.

Though, as he was a man who did his duty to the best of his ability, he still kept one of his subordinates looking about and making inquiries in various places where he thought information might be obtained.

But the information, as he confessed, was very long in coming.

From Senor Guffanta Stuart had heard more than once during his absence, which had now extended to three weeks, but the letters he received contained nothing but accounts of his failure to come upon the suspected man.

In Paris, the Senor wrote, he had been absolutely unable to find any person of the name of Smerdon, though he had tried everything in his power to do so.

He had pored daily over Galignani and other papers that contained the lists of strangers who arrived in the French capital, he had personally inspected the visitors' books in every hotel likely to be patronized by English people of good social position; but all to no effect.

Then, determined, if his man was there, not to miss him, he had applied to the particular bureau of police at the Prefecture where are kept, according to French law, the lists furnished weekly by every hotel keeper and lodging house keeper of their guests and tenants, both old and new; and these, being shown him, he had carefully searched, and still he had failed. He was induced to think, he wrote Stuart, that Smerdon, either alone or with his family (if he really had them with him) must have changed his route, or his destination, at the last moment.

Or, perhaps they had traveled by Brussels and the Rhine to Switzerland, or passed through Paris from one station to the other without stopping, or they might have gone by the way of Rheims and Delle from Calais to Basle.

Could Mr. Stuart, he asked, obtain any further information from Lord Penlyn as to the whereabouts of the man whose face he wished to see, for if he could not, he did not know where to look for him.

In answer to this, Stuart wrote back that no letter had come from Smerdon since the day he left Occleve House, the day on which the Senor had seen the murderer in the cab, but that he had little doubt that the former was now in Switzerland.

"Why," he wrote, "since you are determined to make yourself sure about Smerdon's identity with the man you saw kill our friend, do you not go on into Switzerland? There you could have but little difficulty in finding him, for printed lists of the visitors to almost every resort, small or large, are published daily or weekly. Any bookseller would procure you the Fremdenblatts and Listes des Etrangers, and if you could only find his name at one spot, you would be sure to catch him up at last. When a traveler leaves an hotel in Switzerland, the train, or boat, or diligence is a sure indication of what district he is changing to, and any intelligent porter or servant will in all probability be able to remember any person you can describe fairly accurately."

To this a letter came back from Guffanta, saying that he acknowledged the reason of Mr. Stuart's remarks, and that he would waste no more time in Paris, but would at once set out for Switzerland.

"Only," he wrote, in his usual grave and studied style, "you must pardon me for what I am going to say, and for what I am going to ask. It is for money. I have exhausted my store, which was not great when I arrived in England, and which has only been increased by a small draft on Don Rodriguez's London banker. I have enough to take me to Switzerland, I find, but not enough to carry me into the heart of the country. Will you please send me some to the Poste Restante at Basle? I will repay it some day, and be sure that I shall eventually gain the object we both desire in our hearts."

For answer to this Stuart put a fifty-pound note in a registered letter, and forwarded it to the address Guffanta had given him.

Then, when it had been acknowledged by the latter, he heard no more from him for some time.

CHAPTER XXI.

During this period Lord Penlyn had been absent from town.

He had received from Sir Paul Raughton, at the time when the Senor was about to leave London, a letter telling him that Ida was much better, and that he thought that Penlyn might see her if he went down to Belmont. Sir Paul had faithfully delivered the message given him, and to Ida this, he said, had been the best medicine.

At first she would scarcely believe it possible that her lover would ever again see her or speak of love to her; but, when she learned that not only was he anxious to do this, but that it was he himself whom he considered in the wrong, and that, instead of extending his pardon to her, he was anxious to sue for hers, the color came back to her cheek and the smile to her eyes and lips.

"Oh, papa," she said, as she sat up one day in her boudoir and nestled close to him, "oh, papa, how could I ever think so ill of him, of him who is everything that is good and noble? How wicked I have been! How wicked and unjust!"

"Of course!" Sir Paul exclaimed, "that is just the kind of thing a woman always does say. She quarrels with the man she loves, and then, just because he wants to make up the quarrel as much as she does, she thinks she has been in the wrong. And, after all, mind you, Ida, although I don't believe that Penlyn had any more to do with the murder than I had——"

"No, papa!" speaking firmly.

"Still he does not come out of the affair with flying colors. He never moved hand nor foot to find out who really had done it, and he kept the secret of poor Cundall being his brother from me. He oughtn't to have done that!"

Sir Paul did feel himself aggrieved at this.

He thought that, as Ida's father, he should have been told everything bearing upon the connection between the two men, and he considered that there had been some intention to deceive him on the part of Penlyn.

In his joy at the prospect of his daughter's renewed happiness he was very willing to forgive Penlyn, but still he could not help mentioning his errors, as he considered them.

"Remember the letter from his brother, papa! It contained his solemn injunctions—rendered doubly solemn by the awful fate that overtook him on the very night he wrote them! How could he confide the secret to anyone after that?"

Her father made no answer to this question, not knowing what to say.

After all, he acknowledged that had he been made the custodian of such a secret, had he had such solemn injunctions laid on him as Cundall had laid on his brother, he would have tried to keep them equally well.

Honestly, he could not tell himself that Penlyn should have broken the solemn command imposed upon him; the command issued by a man who, as he gave it, was standing at the gate of the grave.

So, when Penlyn paid his next visit to Belmont, there was a different meeting between him and its inmates from the meetings that had gone before.

Sir Paul took him by the hand, and told him that he was sincerely happy in knowing that once more he and Ida were thoroughly united, and then he went in to her.

Not a moment elapsed before she was folded to his heart and he had kissed her again and again, not a moment before she was beseeching him to forgive her for the injurious thoughts and suspicions she had let come into her mind.

"Hush, Ida; hush, my darling!" he said, as he tried to soothe her; "it is not you who should ask forgiveness, but I. Not because I kept my brother's secret from you, but because of the brutal way in which I cast you off, simply for your doubting me for one moment. Oh, Ida, my own, say that you forgive me."

"I have nothing to forgive," she said; "the fault was mine. I should never have doubted you."

And so once more they were united, united never more to part.

And since everything was now known to Ida, her future husband was able to talk freely to her, to tell her other things that had transpired of late, and especially of, what seemed to him, the strange behavior of the Senor, and the accusations he had brought against him of shielding the murderer in his house.

"Oh, Gervase!" Ida exclaimed, "why is it that everyone should be so unjust to you? Was it not enough that I should have suspected you—though only for a moment in my grief and delirium—without this man doing so in another manner? It is monstrous, monstrous!"

"Your suspicions," he answered, "were natural enough. You had had your mind disturbed by that strange dream, and, when you heard of my relationship to Cundall, it was natural that your thoughts should take the turn they did. But I cannot understand Guffanta, nor what he means."

He had recognized many times during the estrangement between him and Ida that her temporary suspicion of him was natural enough, and that—being no heroine of romance, but only a straightforward English girl, with a strange delusion as to having seen the assassin in her dream—it was not strange she should have doubted him; but for Guffanta's accusation he could find no reason.

Over and over again he had asked himself whom it could be that he suspected? and again and again he had failed to find an answer.

On that fatal night there had been no one sleeping in Occleve House but the servants, no one who could have gained admission to it; yet the Senor had charged him with sheltering the man who had done the deed, both on that night and afterwards.

"Can he not be made to speak out openly?" Ida asked. "Can he not be made to say who the person was whose face he saw? Why do you not force him to do so?"

"I have seen nothing of him since the night he accused me of protecting the murderer, and he has left the hotel he was staying at."

"Where is he gone?" Ida asked.

"No one seems to know, though Stuart says he fancies he is still looking for the murderer. I pray God he may find him."

"And I, too!" Ida said.

After this meeting, Penlyn acceded to the request of Sir Paul and his future wife that he should stay at Belmont for some time, and he took up his abode there with them.

His valet came down from town, bringing with him all things necessary for a stay in the country, and then Ida passed happier days in the society of her lover than she had ever yet enjoyed.

They spent their mornings together sitting under the firs upon the lawn, they drove together—for she was still too weak to ride in the afternoons; and in the evenings Sir Paul would join them.

Their marriage had been postponed for two months in consequence of Ida's ill-health, but they knew that by the end of October they would be happy, and so they bore the delay without repining.

One thing alone chastened their happiness—the memory of the dead man, and the knowledge that his murderer had not been brought to justice.

"I swore upon his grave to avenge him," Lord Penlyn said, "and I have done nothing, can do nothing. If any one ever avenges him it will be Senor Guffanta, and I sometimes doubt if he will be able to do so. It seems a poor termination to the vows I took."

"Perhaps it is but a natural one," Ida answered. "It is only in romances, and in some few cases of real life, that a murder planned as this one must have been is punished. Yet, so long as we live, we will pray that some day his wicked assassin may be discovered."

"Do you still think," Penlyn asked, "that the figure which you saw in your dream was known to you in actual life? Do you think that if the murderer is ever found you will remember that you have known him?"

"It is a dream," she answered, "only a dream! Yet it made a strange impression on me. You know that I also said that, if once I could remember to what man in actual life that figure bore a resemblance, I would have his every action of the past and present closely scrutinized; yet I, too, can do nothing. Even though I could identify some living person with that figure, what could I, a woman, do?"

"Nothing, darling," her lover answered her, "we can neither of us do anything. If Guffanta cannot find him, we must be content to leave his punishment to heaven."

So, gradually, they came to think that never in this world would Walter Cundall's death be avenged, and gradually their thoughts turned to other things, to the happy life that seemed before them, and to the way in which that life should be spent.

Under the fir trees they would sit and plan how the vast fortune that the dead man had left should best be laid out, how an almshouse bearing his name should be erected at Occleve Chase, and how a large charity, also in his name, should be endowed in London.

And even then, they knew that but a drop of his wealth would be spent; it would necessitate unceasing thought upon their part to gradually get it all distributed in a manner that should do good to others.

"He was the essence of charity and generosity," Penlyn said, "it shall be by a charitable and generous disposal of his wealth that we will honor his memory."

They were seated on their usual bench one evening, still making their plans, when they saw one of Sir Paul's footmen coming towards them and bringing the usual batch of papers and letters.

It was the time at which the post generally came in, and they had made a habit of having their correspondence brought to them there, and of passing the half-hour before dinner in reading their letters.

The man handed several to Lord Penlyn and one to Ida, and they began to peruse them.

Those to Penlyn were ordinary ones and did not take long in the reading, and he was about to turn round and ask Ida if hers was of any importance, when he was startled by a sound from her lips—a sound that was half a gasp and half a moan.

As he looked at her he saw that she had sunk back against the wooden rail of the garden seat, and that she was deathly pale.

The letter she had received, and the envelope bearing the green stamp of Switzerland, had fallen at her feet.

"Ida! my dearest! what is it?" he exclaimed, as he bent towards her and placed his arm around her. "Ida! have you had bad news, have you——"

"The dream," she moaned, "the dream!"

"What dream?" he said, while a sweat of horror, of undefined, unknown horror broke out upon his forehead. "What dream?"

"The letter! Read the letter!" she answered, while in her eyes was a look he had once seen before—the far-away look that had been there when he first spoke to her of his brother's murder.

He stooped and picked up the letter—picked it up and read it hurriedly; and then he, too, let it fall again and leaned back against the seat.

"Philip Smerdon my brother's murderer!" he exclaimed. "Philip Smerdon, my friend, an assassin! The self-accused, the self-avowed murderer of Walter Cundall! Ida," he said, turning to her, "is his the figure in your dream?"

"Yes," she wailed. "Yes! I recognize it now."

THE PESTIFEROUS FLY.

Timely Facts About the Plague of the Baldheaded.

Enter now the fly season. What a lot of human misery these insects are accountable for! If all the flies in the world could be exterminated it would be a great blessing to mankind. They do some good as scavengers, but that is far overbalanced by the harm they do, apart from the discomfort they occasion. There is no doubt that they carry diseases from one person to another, and so help to spread epidemics.

Eye complaints are propagated by a certain small species of flies. A fly of this sort will alight on an individual with an eye trouble and take some of the germs off with him and deposit them on the next unfortunate person he settles upon. Flies also convey infection from sores.

Mrs. Fly lays her eggs in warm refuse or in decaying vegetable matter. The heat hatches these eggs and a lot of maggots are brought into the world. After a few days they reach the pupa stage, and from the pupa emerge shortly afterwards the perfect winged flies. Thus these pests are generally bred in stables, which accounts for most people's great objection to living near them. When the young flies are full fledged they fly off and enter any doors and windows which are left incautiously open, and worry the inmates.

Flies ordinarily live about three weeks. The first cold weather kills most of them, just enough living through the winter to propagate their species. A few of the most sturdy of the females live through each winter and in the spring lay eggs before dying and so continue their kind. They remain torpid during the cold weather in nooks and crannies, which accounts for the fact that they do not bother the human race except in summer.

There are giants and pigmies among flies, just as there are in the human race. Everybody has noticed how much smaller some flies are than others. It is commonly supposed that these little ones are the young, but such is not the case. A fly does not grow at all after it has reached the winged stage. It attains its full growth in the larval stage, as do all other insects.

There is a popular notion that flies have suckers on their feet which enable them to walk on the walls and ceilings. This, like many other generally accepted theories, is not the case. They have no suckers on their feet at all, but have a pair of little cushions and two hooks on the bottom of each foot. The cushions are covered with lots of knobbed hairs and kept moist by an exuding fluid, thus enabling the fly to walk on the ceiling or window pane, the moist, hairy pads adhering to the smooth surface.

They have six legs which gives them a large surface for sticking on to things. The twelve hooks on their feet they use when they are obliged to travel over rough surfaces such as whitewashed walls or cloths, the hooks enabling them to hold on to the little irregularities.

Estimating Its Height.

The Arabs have two methods of estimating the height to which a colt will grow, the first being to stretch a cord from the nostril over the ears and down along the neck, and compare this measurement with that from the withers to the feet. The other method being to compare the distance between the knee and the withers with that from knee to the coronet. In the first method it is considered that the colt will grow as much taller as the first measurement exceeds that of the second; and the second method if the proportion is as two to one the horse will grow no taller.

A "TEMPERATURE" CLOCK.

Expansion and Contraction of Mercury Keeps It Perpetually Going.

The "temperature" clock is a novel scientific contrivance that promises to solve the problem of how to construct a timepiece so that it will continually run, and never need attention. It is clearly shown in accompanying diagram, and is described as follows:

It is composed of two reservoirs—A A, located a short distance apart, each of which has centrally a tubular standard B, open at their upper ends, and connected by a cross bar C. Within these tubular standards are placed pistons D, having packed piston heads E, and a suitable quantity of mercury is placed within the reservoirs so that the tubes B will be partially filled.

The piston rods D pass through keepers F at the upper ends of the standards, and the uper ends of the rods are held in proper location to each other by means of a cross bar G. A coiled spring H is placed on each rod D, between the bar G and keeper F, in order to keep the plunger E firmly seated on the mercury, and to lower the cross bar G when the mercury contracts.

Below the connecting cross bar C is a bracket I in which is mounted a ratchet wheel J and a toothed wheel K on a horizontal shaft. Centrally on the cross bar G two vertically depending rack bars L M are hinged, the bar L having downwardly projecting teeth, so that when the pistons move the bar G upwardly the toothed bar M engages with the ratchet wheel, and when the pistons move downwardly the toothed bar L engages with the same wheel and continues to rotate it in the direction of the arrow.

As the ratchet gear J is on the same shaft with the large gear wheel K, and the latter being geared with a smaller gear N which turns the winding mechanism of the clock, it is obvious that whether the pistons move up or down, the clock spring, or the weights, if the latter should be moved, are constantly being wound up, and the clock thereby kept constantly in motion. The mechanism is so arranged that a change in temperature of one degree will wind up the clock for a six hours' run, and it indeed would be a stable temperature if it remained absolutely stationary for a period of six or twelve hours.

THE SAVAGE GUN.

It Will Be Used by the National Guard of New York State.

Herewith is presented an illustration of the mechanism of the Savage gun, which has been selected by the Board of Examiners for the use of the New York State National Guard. The rifle has a lever bolt action, with a fixed central magazine, holding five cartridges, with one in the barrel chamber, making a total of six. When used as a single loader, the act of placing a cartridge in the breech opening holds the cartridges in the magazine in reserve automatically. A glance will show the number of cartridges contained in the magazine.

Thus the rifle can be used alternately, as desired, either as a single loader or as a magazine rifle, at the will of the operator, and it can be used as a single loader while the full magazine is held in reserve in the event of a rush being made at close quarters by the enemy. The rifle is hammerless, and the magazine arrangement, according to experts, is the best yet invented.

The rifle is constructed to use the government cartridge, 30 calibre, 35 grains of smokeless powder, 220 grains metal jacketed bullet. The velocity is 2,000 feet per second, the barrel pressure being about 35,000 pounds per square inch. Should the guard ever have to co-operate in the field with Federal troops both could use the same cartridge, thereby avoiding the possibility of serious mistakes in serving out ammunition.

LI'S OPPOSITION TO WAR.

China's Greatest General Is Pre-Eminently a Man of Peace.

Ex-Secretary John W. Foster contributes a sketch of "The Viceroy Li Hung Chang" to the Century. Mr. Foster says:

"Although the greatest general his country has produced in this century, he is pre-eminently a man of peace. Confucius, whose disciple he is proud to call himself, taught the folly of war, and the practice of the Government and Chinese society in this respect is inspired by his teachings. While Japan has exalted the warlike spirit, and there the soldier is the idol of the people, in China the soldier is lightly esteemed, and always takes rank below the literary class. But notwithstanding this peaceful spirit, there is often a war party in China, and on two or three memorable occasions it has fallen to the lot of the Viceroy Li to be placed in antagonism to it.

The Kuldja question, about 1880, brought the country to the brink of war with Russia, and it was only by his most active resistance to the war party at Peking that a peaceful settlement was reached. It is now well known that he opposed the late hostilities with Japan. The Government of the latter during the progress of the war obtained possession of and published certain memorials to the throne, dated in 1882, and forwarded by the Viceroy, which looked to the ultimate invasion of Japan; but at best it was merely an inchoate scheme and probably encouraged by the Viceroy to aid his projects for the defense of the approaches to Peking. He had a better knowledge of the military strength of Japan and of the weakness of China than any other of the Emperor's advisers, and he feared the consequences to his country of a conflict.

CAMPAIGN EXPENSES.

COSTS MORE TO ELECT EACH SUCCEEDING PRESIDENT.

Funds Subscribed by the Great Parties Are Expended Legitimately, and Not to Buy Votes—Five Millions Will Be Scattered This Year.

Big Campaign Funds.

The election of a President of the United States is a costly affair and the handling of campaign funds is consequently a matter of great importance to both the great political parties. The most exact business principles must be followed and for this and other reasons the appointment of a man to have charge of the finances of a national committee is a most momentous question. With every recurring campaign the expenses of election show an increase. Competent judges predict that not less than $5,000,000 will be expended by the two national committees in the great battle this year. The late Gov. Curtin, of Pennsylvania, said not long before his death that it cost less to elect Lincoln in 1860 than is now often spent in a single Congressional district, and yet the work was just as thoroughly done as that of any committee the party has had since.

ZACH CHANDLER. (A Great Collector.)

The use of large sums of money by national committees began with the two committees that managed Grant's canvasses in 1868 and 1872, and so rapidly did the extravagance increase that in 1880, at the time of Garfield's election, the national committee handled, or others handled for it, more than $1,000,000, while it has been estimated by those whose opportunities for knowing were good that throughout the country there was spent by different committees in the aggregate more than $4,000,000. The expenses of the campaigns of 1884 and 1888 were about the same. In the campaign of 1892 the national committees each collected and expended over $1,500,000 and the State committees collected for their individual use about a quarter of that sum.

STEPHEN W. DORSEY. (A Shrewd Dispenser.)

The charge that most of the money raised for campaign purposes is used to corrupt voters and purchase votes is both silly and false. The expense of a presidential battle are of a legitimate nature. Four years ago the Republican National Committee expended $200,000 in the publication and circulation of campaign documents. An additional $100,000 was devoted to the campaign orators and their expenses. A little over $200,000 went to the Congressional districts where the contest was close and the outcome doubtful, and where it was used to pay band hire and the cost of the uniforms of marching clubs and of parades and public meetings. Something like $300,000 was sent to the chairman of the State committees of the doubtful States, and the cost of maintaining the national headquarters and of the local campaign in New York City consumed the balance of the funds raised by the national committee. The expenses of the Democratic National Committee in 1892 varied in some minor details, but its funds were expended through about the same channels as the Republican committee, the campaign methods of both parties being very similar.

WILLIAM H. BARNUM.

With the growing use of money in politics it has been found more and more desirable that the chairman of a national committee should be a man of large private fortune and of high standing in the business world. When subscriptions are slow in coming in, and he has as yet only promises in lieu of cash, he must become responsible for or advance the funds needed to meet current expenses. These advances frequently amount to several hundred thousand dollars, while if there is a shortage at the end of the campaign the chairman is the one looked to to make it good. Contributions to the campaign funds come in the main from men of large means within the party, some of whem give as high as $100,000. Large corporations also contribute handsomely in hope of securing political favor. In some cases these large concerns give to both of the great parties, thus making themselves safe in any event. There is a considerable class of men anxious to secure political prominence or to occupy high positions who give lavishly as a means of advancing their political interests. Finally comes the aggregate of small popular subscriptions, which foots up a large sum, and which represents men of moderate means, who take a patriotic pride in the success of their cause.

WILLIAM L. SCOTT. [A Liberal Giver.]

STEPHEN B. ELKINS. [A Political Financier.]

Presidential candidates, as a rule, are not depended upon for large subscriptions. The only exceptions have been Mr. Tilden and Mr. Blaine. The former is said to have spent over half a million dollars in the campaign of 1876, and Mr. Blaine's contribution to the campaign of 1884 is said to have exceeded $150,000.

The importance and influence of this potent electioneering argument—hard cash—has developed some very successful and shrewd beggars of money for campaign purposes. Republican veterans, when in a reminiscent mood, delight to talk about the late Marshall Jewell, who as a collector of campaign funds, perhaps, never had his equal. When others failed Jewell always succeeded, and it is told of him that in Boston in a single day he raised $170,000. Zach Chandler was a good deal of a diamond in the rough, but he was a shrewd judge of human nature, and he knew pretty well what chords to strike in order to make men generous. He was chairman of the Republican National Committee in 1876, and there was no lack of funds in that campaign. August Belmont in the campaigns immediately following the war was another good collector. So was William H. Barnum, who succeeded Mr. Belmont as chairman of the Democratic National Committee. Roswell P. Flower and Levi P. Morton are also both expert beggars.

The moneys expended by the national and State committees represent only a part of the cost of a presidential campaign. Conventions like those held in St. Louis and Chicago cost at a modest estimate from $1,500,000 to $2,000,000 apiece, and the check of business during the campaign which follows them involves a loss of many millions more. Taking all these things into consideration, it may be roughly estimated that a presidential campaign costs the country about $20,000,000.

DIFFICULTIES OF BURNT WORK.

Drawings Made by Hot Iron on a Surface of Wood.

Many years ago the manual labor of the artist in color was reduced to a minimum; he no longer grinds his colors, or makes his canvas and brushes. But up to the present day the artist in burnt wood has toiled on with his rude forge and burning irons, with the devotion of an old-time alchemist. Singularly enough, relief from the discomforts of this crude mode of work has at last come through the avenue which brings relief from all physical ailments—that of medicine. The thermocautery, a surgical instrument invented for cauterizing, has been adapted to the use of the artist, so that he can work with comparative freedom.

Formerly the fire-etcher employed copper tools, not unlike soldering irons, set into wooden or other non-conducting handles. These tools cooled rapidly, and had to be constantly shifted, while the oxidation of the copper necessitated constant cleaning. What with feeding his fire and blowing it up with hand-bellows, it is a wonder that the wood burner produced anything at all artistic. To-day the hollow burning point is of platinum, a metal which does not oxidize. Once heated, a never-failing current of naptha gas, burning within, enables the artist to work for hours, wholly independent of the forge, the bellows, and other paraphernalia. The electrode, another surgical cautery, is likewise used in burnt wood, and electricity will in time supersede all other means of heating the burning point.

With these facilities at hand, the fire etcher must still encounter difficulties not found in practicing the kindred arts. Clouds of smoke constantly rise in his face, while the incessant flashing of the fiery point is always trying to the eye. He must have a deep-rooted love of his art and the patience of Job.—Century.

To Cure Headaches.

"A hot bath, a stroll in the fresh air, shampooing the head in weak soda water, or a timely nap in a cool, quiet room will sometimes stop a nervous headache," writes Dr. B. F. Herrick, in the Ladies' Home Journal. "When overfatigued from shopping or sight-seeing a sponge dipped in very hot water and pressed repeatedly over the back of the neck between the ears will be found exceedingly refreshing, especially if the face and temples are afterward subjected to the same treatment. Neuralgia is caused not only by cold air, but by acidity of the stomach, starved nerves, imperfect teeth, or by indolence combined with a too generous diet. Heat is the best and quickest cure for this distressing pain. A hot flatiron, passed rapidly and deftly over several folds of flannel laid on the affected spot, will often give relief in less than ten minutes, without the aid of medicine. Hot fomentations are of equal value; though when the skin is very tender it is more advisable to use dry heat, nothing being better for the purpose than bags of heated salt, flour or sand, which retain warmth for a long time. Cold water, applied by the finger tips to the nerves in front of the ear, has been known to dispel neuralgic pains like magic. When caused by acidity a dose of charcoal or soda will usually act as a corrective. Sick headache is accompanied by bilious symptoms, and attacks usually come on when the person is overtired or below par physically. This is a disease of the first half of life, and often stops of its own accord after middle age. A careful diet is imperative in every case, sweetmeats and pastry being especially pernicious.

"Eating heartily when very tired, late dinners, eating irregularly, insufficient mastication or too much animal food, especially in the spring or during the hot weather, are frequent causes of indigestion, causing headaches by reflex action."

Crane the Carrier.

Every year, on the approach of winter, thousands and thousands of birds, little as well as big ones, have to leave their summer quarters in search of sunnier lands. How large birds of strong wing can cross such a wide stretch of water as the eastern part of the Mediterranean it is easy to understand, but how do the wee ones, like wrens, titmice, finches and the rest manage it? Why, they ride first-class on the back of cranes. In autumn great flocks of cranes may be seen traveling southwards, flying low and giving forth a strange cry, as if of warning, and they sweep along southwards. As soon as they hear this note all kinds of little birds fly up to the cranes and settle on their backs, the twitter of those already snugly squatting thereon being audible at times. Then when spring revisits the north, and it is time for the little things to return to their old haunts, the cranes carry them back again—this time, however, flying high, as if they felt assured their tiny friends would easily reach the earth once the great sea were passed.

THE AUBURN COURIER

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana office as second-class matter.

THURSDAY.....AUGUST 27, 1896

Hon. James H. Teller,

Brother of Senator Teller, and author of the "Battle of the Standards," will address the citizens of DeKalb Co. at the school house park, Waterloo, at 2 p. m., on Saturday, August 29, and Hon. J. M. Robinson, democratic candidate for congress, and the Hon. Henry Colerick will speak in the evening from the Boozer platform at 8 p. m.

Bryan Silver Clubs will be present from neighboring cities, and two bands will be in attendance. Turn out and hear the speaking. Mr. Teller has always been a republican, but has left the party to take the stump for free silver, 16 to 1.

J. M. Robinson

Hon. J. M. Robinson reached here to-day noon, on the north bound Lake Shore train and was met at the station by the Trumpet Note Band and a number of the citizens, and was taken up town in Geo. Lanning's carriage. As the weather had been threatening rain since the heavy shower in the morning, it was not certain where the speech would be till about one o'clock. Then, seats were prepared, and a stand for the speaker in the northeast part of the public square. But in spite of threatening weather, the attendance was large, numbering not less than 800 to 1000. The speaker was introduced by D. M. Link, and at once entered on his subject. Mr. Robinson is a plain, earnest speaker, and he made every point clear before he left it. He called attention to the bad financial condition of the country, and showed this to be due to the bad financial legislation of the republican party. He read extracts from speeches made by Blaine, Allison, Lincoln, Ingalls, Thurston of Nebraska, now chief manager for McKinley, and even speeches by McKinley himself, showing that only a few years ago, they favored re-monetizing silver. In fact all through his speech, he dealt sledge hammer blows at the party that has for so many years worked against the interests of the common people. His speech was enthusiastically received and many republicans were present and gave careful attention to what he said. He was followed by Mr. Kelley, but the early hour we go to press on Saturday prevents going any further with the report.

Republican Tricks.

An effort was made at Bluffton Saturday to suppress free speech. Bogardus, the fellow who shoots, was there and had the crowd. Congressman Hand was billed for a republican speech but the crowd came not to hear him. They were all crowding about Bogardus. The republican marshal ordered Bogardus to cease speaking. He asked why. "You have no license," replied the officer. He showed his license, but the officer said it was not sufficient and hustled him off to police court. Here he stood trial and was acquitted. He returned to his stand and was cheered to the echo, and then he made a red-hot silver speech.

The Truth.

It is always best to tell the truth and nothing but the truth, even in political matters. Some one has been freely circulating the story about here, that if Mr. Krontz is elected surveyor he will have Ex-surveyor Hook to assist him in the office. There is not a grain of truth in this. Mr. Hook has no idea of leaving his own business and Mr. Krontz is giving his attention to the election, not to getting a deputy. He has no one in view and will not have till he sees whether he needs one or not. It is a lie out of whole cloth, and is used to lessen Mr. Krontz' vote.

He Thanks Them.

Rev. W. L. Meese feels that a few words expressive of his gratitude are due to all who helped to make the reunion such a splendid success. These words of thanks will include the band, the speakers, the press here and over the country, the married couples who came at his call, and who were of course the main stay of the occasion, and those who contributed a sum so liberal that that the minister had a surplus for himself after all expenses were paid. But above all he feels a debt of gratitude to God for His divine blessing so abundantly and freely given, by which we had a day of ideal loveliness, where would have been bitter disappointment but for His favor. The day and all its memories will always be a bright one to him as he hopes it will be to all concerned.

The Dispatch.

Our neighbor in its last week's issue, has this item of interest.

The Daily Courier was issued as a non-partisan, but it seems that it is a snake in the grass. Its attack on Senators Sherman and Foraker of Ohio, is very amusing to intelligent people. Its recent conversion seems to have turned its silly little head and makes it believe it can measure arms with American statesmen. Impudent egotism. Wonder how a morning daily would take in Auburn. One not double leaded nor all mammoth head lines to kill space.

To this we feel like saying:

1. As to attacks on Senators Sherman and Foraker, we quoted nothing but the words each spoke in the meeting in Ohio last Saturday. They were their own words not ours, and if they were an "attack" it was an attack on Senator Sherman by Senator Sherman and on Foraker by Foraker. And if men so eminent as these are claimed to be, are silly enough to make an attack on themselves no one has a right to object if we common mortals laugh at them.

2. We do not think it so much out of place even if we do attack such men as Sherman and Foraker. Both have shown themselves to be men of very small caliber and meager abilities. Take the one who is considered the abler of the two, Sherman. No man who ever sat in congress has been so greatly overestimated. His public career has been almost one continual blunder. Some of these have cost the people vast sums of money. The Sherman silver law is one of them. This proved so bad a law that he himself hastened to help kick it out of the statute books. But in the three years it was in force, it lost the taxpayers 4 millions in money.

3. As to "measuring arms with such American Statesmen." We have already shown that neither is a statesman. We have alluded to Sherman, and as to Foraker, he is not yet a "senator" and will not be sworn in till the 4th of March next, and may not sit in the senate till the first Monday in December, 1897. And no one has ever accused him of being a statesman in the past. Before deciding whether it is "egotism" on the part of the editor of this paper to "attack" such men, it will be proper to wait and hear what explanation these two "statesmen" are able to give of their contradictory statements made the same afternoon. And if they are able men, let them show it, by refuting what the humble editor said.

4. As to "a morning daily in Auburn." We think it would take well. It would be a good thing. Push it along.

Income Tax.

(Laporte Argus)

The income tax is one of the live issues of this campaign and it should remain an issue in politics until it is sustained by the supreme court. It will not be long before there will be several changes in court. Judge Field, one of the members most hostile to an income tax, is now practically dying and his place is likely to be filled soon, when the income tax matter can be taken up again and the decision may be the other way and this altogether just and fair tax again be imposed. All the highly developed countries of the world, notably Germany, France and England, rely largely on an income tax for public revenue. In this country it is simply an extension to the national government of a principle of taxation that has always been in use by the states and local authorities. It is simply taxation according to wealth and ability to pay. That is the whole principle of the income tax and if it is not a just tax there never was one.

Sherman Again.

Come to think of it we did not say all the good things we could have said the other day when we hit Statesman Sherman's speech. He said that under the Bland—Allison silver coinng law, we brought 291 million ounces of silver at a total cost of 308 million dollars, and that as silver has depreciated, the government had suffered a loss on it of 100 million. Let us see. That 291 million ounces of silver is 139,640 millions of grains, and dividing this by 412.5 the number of grains in one dollar, we find it made 338 millions of silver dollars. And as this was actually coined into dollars they are now worth 100 cents on a dollar, and instead of losing 100 millions as he asserts, we have gained 30 millions. But had we allowed that silver to remain in bullion bars, as was done under his own pet Sherman bill, we would then have lost 100 millions. Sherman was thinking of the other bill, or else he don't understand arithmetic.

As to the states in the doubtful list, California gave a small democratic majority in 1892, and is likely to increase it this year. Delaware is as likely to go democratic, as any other way in spite of the quarrel over gold and silver. Illinois and Indiana are classed as doubtful, but there are plenty of people on both sides, who concede that both are likely to go for free silver. Iowa, Nichigan, Minnesota and Wisconsin, will no doubt go repulican. So will Kansas, probably unless a more solid union is made between the democrats and populists. But of the doubtful states, Montana, Washington, West Virginia, Oregon and both Drkotas, no doubt go for free silver.

Now, taking Kansas out of the democratic column, will change that 180 to 160. Now add the probable states of California, Delaware, Illinois, Indiana, Montana, Washington, West Virginia, Oregon and the two Dakotas, a total additionof 75 electoral votes, which with the 160 already conceded, would give Bryon 235, or 12 more than a majority. This showing is not unreasonable, for we have classed as doubtful several states claimed for the democrats, and have taken Kansas with its ten votes, out of the democratic column, though it is quite possible it may go democratic. Those who are studying the outlook will find this a very interesting table before the campaign is over.

Storm Freak.

Lightning and wind do some strange things. In the storm Saturday evening the barn of Joe Stahl, about three miles north of here, was struck by the tornado. The roof appears to have been lifted apart at the peak far enough to let the two lightning rods fall down in between, and then the two parts settled together again and left the lightning rods standing all right with the horizontal part of the rods below the roof and the upright parts sticking up through and ready for business when the next electrical storm comes along. This reminds us of the story our New York state people tell of the chestnut tree which the lightning broke off, splitting the stub enough to let the top part fall into it, where it caught and remained for years.

Poor Plan.

The railroads of the country seem to be joining the larger monopolies and trusts in bulldozing voters to support McKinley. It is the old dodge. But voters aught to understand them by this time.

But in those sections of the eastern states where there are so many factories a new plan is being enforced. Boss Hanna, who is McKinley's manager, has sent a circular to the factory owners, advising them to organize their men into "Battalions" of McKinley marching clubs, telling them their interests lie in that direction. In some factories the men are given a chance to sign the constitution of such a club, under pain of discharge, unless they do so. But of course they can vote as they please if they choose as the ballot is secret in nearly every state in the Union. And on the other hand we read now and then of a business man, a merchant or some one in similar business, who has changed from the gold standard belief to the silver standard, giving as a reason, that his dealings are all with farmers or men employed at wages in factories, and that a continuation of the gold basis will work seriously against these classes. But in any case, we object to the bulldozing of men by employers. The right to vote as one believes, is a sacred right, and anyone who tries to intimidate a voter should be made to feel that he has lost his influence.

Sugar Bounties.

There have recently passed through the treasury orders for the payment of $5,000,000 in bounties to a few hundred sugar produc rs in Louisiana. According to late statements the total number of persons entitled to sugar bounties is less than 500.

The McKinley tariff act removed all duties from sugar. It was not protected by a tariff on foreign sugar. But in lieu of protection by tariff, a bounty was paid to the sugar growers for each pound of sugar produced.

The bountities amounted to $12,000,000 the first year under the McKinley act. The amount would have been from $40,000,000 to $50,000,000 a year if the act had remained in force.

The present tariff act repealed the sugar bounty clause in the McKinley tariff act. But, as is alleged, on the crop at that time there was accruing $5,000,000 in bounty. The case was taken into court and it was decided that the sugar men were entitled to this amount of unpaid bounties.

The money has, therefore, been drawn from the treasury. This payment increases the deficit. When republicans again reproach democrats with the fact that payments from the treasury are in excess of receipts tell them that it is partly on account of an old claim of $5,000,000 for sugar bounties under Candidate McKinley's tariff.

Obituary.

William Oiler was born near Fredricksburg, Maryland, Feb. 13, 1806; departed this life Aug. 15, 1896, aged 90 years, 6 months and 2 days.

He was left an orphan at the age of seven years, and was consequently without the parental help, oversight and influence so necessary to proper development in the morning of life. He emigrated during his early manhood to Dayton, Ohio, where he resided until the commencement of of the Mexican War, when he enlisted in Co. E., 15th Regt., U. S. Inft., and served 21 months. He also served his country as a true and loyal citizen, during the dark days of the sixties, enlisting Oct. 5, 1861, with Co. I, 57th Regt., Ohio Inft., serving for three years and one month. Upon his return from the war with Mexico he was united in marriage to Miss Mary Johns, of Dayton, Ohio, Aug. 25, 1849. To this union were born six children, four sons and two daughters, one son and both daughters deceased in youth, preceding their father to the unseen shore. He leaves an aged companion, three sons, eight grandchildren and one great-grandchild to mourn their loss. His removal to Wilmington Twp., DeKalb Co., occured in 1869. Early in life he became a christian, but his experience was varied until about ten years ago, when he received an experience that has been satisfactory since which time he has constantly witnessed for his Saviour. The funeral services were held at Norris Chapel, by Rev. F. L. Erlougher. The services were attended and participated in by the DeLong Post, G. A. R., of Auburn, of which he was a member.

"Soldier, rest! Thy warfare o'er,
Sleep the sleep that knows no breaking;
Dream of battle-fields no more,
Morn of toil nor night of waking."

CARD OF THANKS.

ED. COURIER:—Please allow us to extend our heartfelt thanks to the neighbors and friends who so kindly assisted us through the sickness and death of our beloved husband and father.

MRS. MARY OILER AND CHILDREN.

CORUNNA.

Mattie Franks is very low at this writing.

Quite a number were baptized at the mill pond last Sunday afternoon by Rev. Co k, of Garrett.

There will be another store opened up in Corunna in a few days, in the Gushwa building.

We had a terrific storm of wind, rain and hail, and thunder and lightning, Saturday evening. A good deal of damage is reported from various sections.

Charley Willets went to Andrews last Thursday to stay several days with his son who met with a serious accident while switching cars.

Wm. Dawson was in Charlotte, Mich., last week. James Finch returned from there a few days before and reported everybody in Mich. for free silver, and we suppose Mr. Dawson went up there to lay in a supply.

George Getts, of Waterloo, and Elmer Bachtol of Auburn, were in town over Sunday. Of course Minnie Finch and Rose Snelbaker, were not supposed to know anything about their presence here.

A small crowd witnessed a close game of ball between Waterloo and Corunna, on the former's ground, on the 18th. The score stood 7 to 4 in favor Waterloo. Batteries, Getts and Denison, Gay and Simons. The best feature of the game was the exce lent fielding of A. E. Mercer.

BUTLER.

J. A. Campbell rode to Fort Wayne last Friday but the heavy rain compelled him to return on the train.

A strange incident occurred at the M. E. church last Sunday during the closing of the day's services, while the congregation were singing of the last hymn, a wild bird perched on the inner sill of a window and united its piping voice with the singers, Not satisfied with its efforts there, it flew in and perched upon the keys of the organ almost beneath the hand of the organist and continued its loudest notes, remained on the organ until after the benediction, then flew out and disappeared.

The past week has been rife with fire losses in this vicinity. On Thursday night John Allwood's house was destroyed by fire and most of its contents. His farm is near the center of Troy township On Saturday morning David Weidler, living two and one half miles north and west of Waterloo, had two horses killed by lightning In this same storm Isaac King, living about five miles north-west of Butler, lost his barn and all its contents by lightning, loss $600 to $800 on Saturday night about seven o'clock. Frank Good, living three miles north east of Butler had his new burned by lightning together with four horses, forty tons of hay, implements and harness, loss fully $1000 all were insured in J. A. Campbell's agency. On the same evening David Smith, living a short distance north-east of Troy lost his barn by lightning. Have not learned extent of loss or amount of insurance.

Mrs. R. C. Campbell is visiting her sister in Toledo.

The race track is nearing completion, and will soon be ready for use.

Mrs. W. H. Madden, wife of Dr. Madden was buried last Friday. Mrs. Sally Ann Smith (Madden) sister of Dr Madden and husband, of Carroll Co O., were in attendance at the funeral of the latters wife.

Old Democrat

The Testimony of an Old Time Democrat is Always in Order. Read This One.

WATERLOO, IND.

EDITOR COURIER:—I have been more or less interested in all the presidential elections from Jackson to the present, and I never saw as much interest at stake for the farmer as this one. The gold men warn us to beware of silver craze, that money would be cheap and everything else so high that it would ruin the country. Now I would like to tell every brother farmer, just what I did in the greenback craze, and I can prove what I will say. At that time I lived and had a farm of 100 acres about 14 miles south of Toledo. Right at the craziest time I bought a sorghum mill and paid $120, I could get it now for $60. Then I bought a wood saw rig for $100, could get the same now for $50. Then I bought the farm I am now on, paid some down and run in debt $1,600. Now the crazy part comes in and I like such crazy spells. The way I paid these debts is this. That year I had 600 bushels of oats and sold them in Toledo for 82 cents a bushel, 150 bushels paid for the mill, the balance I paid on the land. That year I raised 220 gallons of sorghum, got $1.25 a gallon for that. At the same time I had 40 turkeys of about 18lb apiece and sold them from 18 to 22 cents a pound. That year I made 3000 gallons of sorghum for neighbors at 20 cents a gallon. It took a small part of that to live on and the rest I paid on my debt. I paid for the land one year before due. It was no trouble to collect, all had money. I tell you I like such crazy spells. All the time there was a class did not like these crazy times, the money lenders, for they got no business. So they put their heads together to demonetize silver. They got this done in 1873 and they and some congressmen no doubt made big money by it. It was done by a few but now it will go back by the action of the people. They then made money scarcer by having greenbacks destroyed and then they began to flourish. But the farmer begins to squirm and we will be pressed harder yet if we don't fight for our interest.

When he first moved to Auburn, he planted on his residence lot, some seeds of choice red wild plums, and this year they are bearing. He has a bushel or so of very fine fruit and the flavor is better than that of most cultivated kinds. We have no doubt it would pay farmers, who have wild plums, to cultivate the most desirable kinds.

—Senator Allison of Iowa, is leading republican senators from the northwest and was a prominent candidate for president on the republican ticket. Has he changed his mind as to silver? Here is what he said June 16, 1890, in the debate on the Sherman bill: The affairs of this world cannot be conducted upon the single basis of gold; and the war and contest to-day is between those who seek to destroy and outlaw silver and those who seek to place it upon an equality with gold. That is the contest; and I am for the full and complete restoration of silver as one of the coin metals of the world, and therefore I propose to do whatever I can to promote that most desirable object.

—Mr. and Mrs. F. N. Beidler removed back to Waterloo yesterday, as he has taken a pssition in the new store of D. L. Leas, to be opened in a few days in the first room on the rebuilt burnt district next north of Darby's building. Mr. and Mrs. Beidler have made many warm friends while in Auburn, and renewed many of the friendships of early days, for many old-time Waterloo people are here and we all regret to see them go. He thinks others should know that they can also be cured by similar treatment.

—Wisconsin is in doubt as to the coming election. Quartermaster General Hollingsworth, of that state, who is a radical republican and attached to Gov. Upham's staff, says he wants to be fair in the estimates as to the result in Wisconsin, and says: The result is in doubt, no matter what the politicians claim. A great number of republicans have affiliated themselves with the free silver movement, and the thing looks very dubious.

—Take your exhibits to Ashley Free Street Fair, Sept. 9. 10 and 11. Write Geo. Strayer, secy., for premium lists.

Cyclone Echos.

Of course we omitted a great deal in our writeup of the cyclone yesterday, as it was impossible to remember all in a case where so many accidents had occurred. We note such as we now recall:

That part of the metal roof on the Rice photo gallery, that runs up over the north wall, was torn off and thrown into the street, but the building was not otherwise hurt.

At G. H. Yesbera's store a transom over the main door was blown in and the roof damaged. His loss in all will be not less than $50.

The south block of the Kiblinger factory had the upper windows, those in the mansard story, blown in, but no harm done to the building.

The two big apple trees that have been so long a landmark on old Mrs. Leasure's property, were blown over leaving a big gap in the landscape.

Brown, Culbertson & Boland had the tops of their front windows damaged some.

On the lot where Uncle George McMillan lives, owned by Mrs. Morrison, of Chicago, the big apple tree was destroyed and at least ten bushels of apples strewed over the ground.

North of of this place there was but little damage, except at Joe Stahl's. Several trees were torn down. But north of that, as far as Ashley, no signs of a storm were seen.

The barn of Hon. Curtis Brouse, two miles south of Kendallville, was struck by lightning and destroyed. Mr. Brouse being absent, nothing could be saved. Two fine horses which were in the barn were burned, also two of his choice merino sheep, together with about thirty tons of hay, his crop of unthreshed wheat, a binder, two buggies, harnesses and many other farming implements. Partly insured.

The two big apple trees back of the old S. W. Ralston residence were uprooted and being very large, are now worked up into stove wood.

At Ashley.

The biggest political meeting Ashley has had this campaign was the one held there on Monday evening when Mr. Robinson spoke. His arguments were on about the same lines as when he was here. He speaks in a way to hurt the feelings of none. He aims to convince, not bulldose, and his arguments are all of such a friendly character that he makes friends wherever he goes. We notice that at Ashley, however, a few hoodlums hung onto the ragged edge of the crowd and blew fish horns to annoy the speaker and his hearers. We hope no democrat in DeKalb county, old or young will do this.

FRANKLIN MEETING.

At Taylor's Corners, in Franklin township, H. D. Boozer will address the voters of all parties, on Friday evening of this week, Aug. 28. All come and hear him.

The Old Log Cabin.

Cyrus Bowman is again superintendent of the old time Log Cabin at the Waterloo Fair, and asks everybody to help him to make a good display of ancient and pioneer articles. People in town and country, can generally find something. Pioneer, household articles, such as old candlesticks and lamps, ancient dishes, furniture, and everything in that line that has gone out of date and will prove a curiosity to the younger generations. All these articles should be brought to the fair, or what will likely be easier for all concerned, should be left at the furniture store of Wm. Ettinger in Waterloo, and Mr. Bowman will take them over to the Cabin, place them and label such as have no labels, and at the close of the fair, will deliver them to the owner, or to Mr. Ettinger in as good condition as when he got them. The owners can label each article if they choose, and if the article has a history, it can be briefly given. Those who saw the "Art Loan Collection" at the M. E. church in Auburn can see at once what a great variety of articles of interest can be found in many homes. Give Mr. Bowman a grand display. He is one of the pioneers himself. The fair begins on Tuesday, Sept. 1.

Walter W. Felts, a California electrician, has invented what he thinks is a cure for blindness by sending electricity at a high voltage over the optic nerve.

The stock of Europe last year consumed 47,117 tons of American hay, for which the "Maud Mullers" of this country and their fathers and brothers received $699,029.

The little kingdom of Saxony, in Germany, is increasing faster in population than any other part of the empire. It now has 3,753,262 people on a territory not much larger than Rhode Island.

The candy-makers say that the most profitable part of the trade is in fancy candies put up in ornamental boxes, the box frequently cutting more figure in the purchase than the goods.

The "Printers' Bible" is so called because it contains a curious typographical error in the 161st verse of Psalms cxix., which is made to read, "Printers have persecuted me without a cause," instead of "Princes."

The transcript on appeal in the Durant murder case at San Francisco has at last been filed, a whole year after the trial began. Thus the case, after all this dreary delay, has finally dragged itself into the Supreme Court.

Though there are 10,500 civilian members of the Legion of Honor, the French Government proposes to increase their number to 12,000 knights, 2,000 officers, 300 commanders and fifty grand officers. When it was found in 1873 that there were over 20,000 civilians in the order, a law was passed that there should be only one new appointment for every two deaths.

It is found that steel articles hardened in petroleum show no cracks, do not warp, and after hardening remain nearly white, so that they can be blued without previous rubbing with emery. The articles to be hardened should be thoroughly rubbed with ordinary washing soap, heated to a cherry red in a charcoal fire and then quickly plunged into petroleum.

The voracity of the eagle and similar birds of prey is well known, but the contents of a nest which was recently discovered in the Alps by a Swiss hunter shows the following remarkable variety in the daily menu: A hare, twenty-seven chamois' feet, four pigeons' feet, thirty peasants' feet, eleven heads of fowls, eighteen heads of grouse, and the remains of a number of rabbits, marmots and squirrels.

The discovery has been made that the Paris Opera is the most dangerous theater in Paris. Apart from certain perils attached to the defective arrangement of the electric lighting, none of the regulations ordered after the Opera Comique disaster has been carried out. It is estimated that there are 20,000 tons of inflammable scenery piled up in such a way that it takes four days to dislodge a scene required.

All the colored people in South Africa are treated alike by the whites as divided from themselves by a wide and impassable gulf. A native, whatever his rank, would seldom be permitted, except as a domestic servant, to enter a private house. When Khama was in England last autumn and was entertained at lunch by the Duke of Westminster the news excited general annoyance and disgust among the whites in South Africa.

It is impossible, unless possessed of considerable means, to live with comfort in a private house in Johannesburg. Rents are in proportion to all other prices asked—enormous. It is difficult for white workingmen engaged in the mines to obtain a single room in a tiny shanty under a rental of $20 a month at the very least, while a small villa of five rooms, built of corrugated iron, will easily let at $60 to $70 a month.

Australia is turning out a new variety of Mannlicher repeating rifle for its army, which is the lightest repeating rifle in the world, weighing seven pounds and four ounces, instead of nine pounds eleven ounces, the weight of the old pattern. All the individual parts in the new rifle, including the locking box, the magazine and barrel, are lighter than in the old. The bayonet and sheath are also made lighter.

There has been a great complaint of late by foreigners in Paris regarding the quality of the coffee served at the hotels and cafes. Paris has been noted heretofore for the excellence of the coffee dispensed to visitors, but for some unknown reason the coffee served recently has been of the very lowest grade. It has always been difficult to obtain a cup of good tea on the continent, but no complaint against the coffee has ever been heard before.

The wonders of Professor Roentgen's discovery have given great potency to the term X ray in small places, where the people generally have little opportunity to see experiments or to gain an understanding of the strange radiance. A Lewiston, Me., dentist promises patients that tooth filling won't hurt any more, since he has invented a "sort of X ray process," by which an electric current is sent through the tooth continuously for a quarter of an hour before an operation, the electricity "carrying with it a cocaine injection, or at least its effects."

Mormons are much in evidence in Perth Amboy, N. J., and Major Tice has revoked the permit granted several weeks ago for the Mormons to hold open-air meetings on the street. He says that the Mormon principles are incompatible with morality and good citizenship. Captain Samuel Hornsby, a member of the city council and son of a Mormon elder, will probably question the Mayor's right to permit the Salvation Army and the American Volunteers to hold meetings while he denies the privilege to the Mormons.

Among the latst novelties in the machine shop is a hydaulic tool for removing the heads of steel and iron rivets, and intended to supersede the present system of cutting them off by hammer and chisel. The new tool is of the portable type, eighteen inches long, and is operated by means of hydraulic power. The hydraulic pump is controlled by a small hand lever, and drives a chisel-shaped cutter of chilled steel against the rivet head, shearing it off flush with the surface of the plate. The cutter can be readily removed for sharpening.

The octroi service at the barriers of Paris for exacting duties on certain objects which are brought in leads to more ingenuity than any similar custom house arrangement. Knowing that the police do not pay much attention to empty fiacres which drive through the barriers, someone devised the scheme of stuffing their cushions with dried raisins, on which there is a heavy duty. But a traitor mostly turns up under these circumstances, and recently the police seized three fiacres and opened the cushions. Raisins—raisins everywhere was the result.

A useful office appliance has been patented in Europe in the shape of an apparatus for attaching stamps to envelopes. A rectangular box is fitted to hold 200 stamps, piled one on the other, gummed side down, with two little hooks at the bottom, holding the stamps in place. A downward pressure of a vertical handle fixed to the side of the box releases the two hooks and forces down on a stamp on a moistening pad. It is claimed that with this apparatus envelopes can be stamped at the rate of 1,200 to 1,500 an hour. For general use a special stand is constructed, carrying boxes for three or more values of stamps, with the moistening pad in front.

The property possessed by formic aldehyde of hardening gelatine has been taken advantage of by an English inventor in the devising of a new mechanical printing process from gelatine. The method secures a sensitized film, which will give a positive direct or a negative suitable for photo-mechanical printing. The sensitive film contains gelatine, formic aldehyde and salt, such as ferric chloride, which is reduced by the action of light. The formic aldehyde, which renders gelatine insoluble, is oxidized to formic acid where the light impinges, and leaves the film soluble in these parts. The positive is then developed by warm water. To produce a negative formalin sulphite is added to the gelatine and reducible salt. When the light acts the sulphurous acid is oxidized and sets the formalin free, so that it can combine with the gelatine and render it insoluble. These negatives are suitable for photo-mechanical printing.

PERSONALITY OF THE POPES.

Two or Three Bad Men Responsible for the Evil Spoken of Them.

Two or three bad men are responsible for almost all the evil that has been said and written against the characters of the Popes in the middle ages. Farnese of Naples; Caraffa of Maddaloni, another Neapolitan who reigned as Paul IV.; and Rodrigo Borgia, a Spaniard, who was Alexander VI., are the chief instances. There were, indeed, many Popes who were not perfect, who were more or less ambitious, avaricious, warlike, timid, headstrong, weak, according to their several characters; but it can hardly be said that any of them were, like those I have mentioned, really bad men through and through, vicious, unscrupulous and daringly criminal. Paul IV. outlived most of his vices, and devoted his last years to ecclesiastical affairs, but Alexander died poisoned by an accident.

According to Guicciardini, the Pope knew nothing of Caesar Borgia's intention of poisoning their rich friend, the Cardinal of Conreto, with whom they were both to sup in a villa on Aug. 17, 1503. The Pope arrived at the place first, was thirsty, asked for a drink, and by a mistake was given wine from a flask prepared and sent by Caesar for the Cardinal. Caesar himself came in next and drank likewise. The Pope died the next day, but Caesar recovered, though badly poisoned, to find himself a ruined man and a fugitive. The Cardinal did not touch the wine. This event ended an epoch and a reign of terror, and it pilloried the name of Borgia forever. Alexander expired in the third room of the Borgia apartments in the raving of a terrible delirium, during which the superstitious bystanders believed that he was conversing with Satan, to whom he had sold his soul for the papacy, and some were ready to swear that they actually saw seven devils in the room when he was dying. The fact that these witnesses were able to count the fiends speaks well for their coolness, at all events.—Century.

Learn to Listen Intelligently.

"Learn, after you have learned to speak, to listen, and to listen intelligently," writes Ruth Ashmore on how "To Be a Social Success," in the Ladies' Home Journal. "Express your interest through your eyes, and when it is needed say the encouraging word that, like hot water on the tea, brings out the strength. If a speaker mentions a wrong date do not correct her, the world cares for the interesting talk, not for whether the affair described happened on Thursday or Friday, nor whether the bon mot was born at 9 or 1 o'clock. The effect on the speaker is belittling, and you have no right to underrate any one. Chatter about anything you will but personalities. But do not feel that you must raise the tone of society by ringing in, when everybody is laughing at some funny little story about a child, or all are smiling at an amusing description of how the orange blossoms grow down South, your opinion of some heavy history that has lately been published. Society is not a school, it is a pleasure ground."

Saved the Sculptor.

During the Reign of Terror, David had Houdon, the sculptor, arrested, and wished to have him guillotined, as he had declared war against all the artists, his colleagues. Mme. Houdon went to Barrere and urged him to save her husband. "I see no way," Barrere said; "but tell me, for which of his works has he been imprisoned?" "For the statue of Saint Scolastica," said Mme. Houdon. "What does she look like?" "A fine woman, with a scrap of paper in her hand." At that moment entered Collot-d'Herbois. Barrere said to him: "Houdon has made a statue of Philosophy meditating on the Revolution; you must have it bought by the Assembly and placed in the room in front of the Assembly room, and declare that Houdon has deserved well of the country." This was done and Houdon was saved.

Politics of the Day

CAMPAIGN OF INTIMIDATION.

In a political struggle, so unmistakably between "the masses and the classes," as the present one, it is not surprising that every influence that can be exerted by means of wage-paying, appealing to ignorance, offering rewards and threatening resentment, is used by those upon whom fortune has conferred large means, which they hope to make larger. Especially by corporations, where individual responsibility is so conveniently hidden, are such exertions put forth. Everywhere we have the rich endeavoring to deceive the poor, and the well-worn fraud of the "silver dollar, worth fifty cents," though exposed ten thousand times, does perpetual duty shamelessly, and figures in every newspaper as an argument. Compulsion is on every hand, and in every shape.

One day the railroads refuse to make reduced rates for Democratic gatherings. The next life insurance companies issue to their policyholders campaign literature, urging on the latter the falsehood that the value of policies will be diminished one-half by Democratic success, and thereby proclaiming themselves insolvent to accomplish a partisan object. The day after comes a meeting of the clerks and employes of some banking house, who unanimously (upon penalty of discharge if dissenting) indorse McKinley and Hobart. Then follows the eviction of a workingman for non-conformity with his employer on the silver question. Next the shutting up of an iron mine, and the throwing of thousands out of employ, under false pretense of apprehension of diminishing profits. Clergymen are compelled to preach partisan sermons under threat of reduction of salary, and cooks' and housemaids' wages are retrenched because "we are all coming to a silver basis." A railroad men's sound money club is to be organized among those who receive wages from every transportation company, and the prediction is made that the compulsory votes of these clubbites will, in some States, carry counties.

This is a tremendous power for the Democracy to encounter. It controls the timid and those incapable of reasoning, and it should correspondingly arouse the patriotic and energetic. It is clear that a campaign of lies is to be anticipated ,and that every perversion of truth will be welcomed by our adversaries and inflicted by them upon their dupes. A bold front must be taken as to this intimidation policy of the McKinley managers without further delay.—New York News.

The Joss Gets Loose.

In the absence of Li Hung Hanna, grand vizier and high priest, the Joss of Canton has escaped from his shrine and is wandering up and down the State of Ohio, uttering strange and unfamiliar phrases and carrying alarm and consternation among the faithful. Profane and vulgar persons are permitted to gaze upon the unveiled countenance of the oracle. No priest is at hand to turn aside the gaping multitude. The sacred hat is set awry upon the anointed head and from it issue blasphemous and heretical deliverances, calculated to disturb and unsettle even the very elect. Away from the complicated and curiously contrived mechanism of the joss-house—the miniature windmills, the delicate clockwork, the tanks of natural gas—the Joss moves feebly and uncertainly. His eyes, no longer glowing with the fire of inspiration, are fixed in a stony and fishlike stare. His breastplate lacks luster; the very dragons and butterflies on his mantle of yellow silk seem to doze. Worst of all, the phonographic apparatus in the Hat is hopelessly deranged, and there is no one at hand to set it right. It runs on, emitting the most heterodox and revolutionary sentiments and causing dismay and doubt among the worshipers.

At Alliance, for instance, whither the Joss had been hauled in triumph by a shouting multitude of his disciples, the Hat was expected to set forth in the usual terms the saving grace of a high protective tariff. Deep silence reigned during the preliminary croakings and wheezings of the hallowed headpiece, and the devotees settled down to listen to the familiar words. Judge of their dismay when, instead of the traditional tariff creed, uttered in ponderous and solemn tones, and accompanied by the familiar sweep of the right arm, the Joss hesitated, wavered for a moment, and then, in a dull monotone, gave forth this sentiment:

"After all, my fellow citizens, the hope of the republic, its safety and security, the hope of strength and perpetuity of popular government, must rest upon the great public school system now happily and firmly established throughout the United States."

Here was sacrilege from the Joss himself—the oracle desecrating his own shrine. Contrary to all his teachings that the safety of the republic lay solely in the highest tariff that could be devised, the tutelary deity declared that salvation was to be found to another direction. The idol was smashing itself. Protection and prosperity were blasphemed. The result was panic, confusion, utter rout. The devotees stared wildly and then fled to the neighboring forests, uttering cries of alarm. They have not since emerged. As for the Joss, he stood for a while deserted in his temporary shrine, a vacant smile upon his face and his lips feebly moving. Then he gathered up the skirts of his garments and started across country for Canton. Li Hung Hanna has been telegraphed for.—Chicago Chronicle.

Democracy Will Live.

Democracy stood at the cradle of the Republic. It has been potential at every progressive step that freedom has since taken. It has gone hand in hand with liberty along all the paths of peace. It has been borne aloft on the flashing bayonets of millions of men in the fiery track of war. If it is to die its demise will not precede that of the Republic, nor will it outlive the Republic. The two, inseparable in life, will be united in death. Wrapped in the same cerements they will be carried by the same hostile hands to the same tomb. Such a party cannot die. It shall not die.—Chicago Chronicle.

Drivel in Politics.

A contemporary in noting the fact that William J. Bryan, the Democratic candidate for President, travels in good style, puts up at first-class hotels, and has a score of assistants back of his candidacy, asks where he is getting the money to meet these expenses? Then it proceeds to answer its own question by intimating that Senator Thurston is right in averring that Candidate Bryan is in the pay of a wealthy syndicate of silver mine owners.

It is time to eliminate drivel of this sort from politics. Any sensible person knows that as the candidate of his party, Mr. Bryan has back of him the resources of the national Democratic committee. Naturally, that organization will have a fair sum of money at its command, and it is both common sense and custom for it to pay the expenses of the head of the ticket, especially while traveling.

VENTRILOQUIST HANNA—You will observe, ladies and gentlemen, that the little figures speak exactly as I direct.

While it is true that the free silver candidate is not so well fixed financially as is the head of the single gold standard ticket, the recollection as to where Major McKinley's wealth came from is not greatly to his credit. After McKinley's disastrous failure, when it was found that he had upon a fortune of less than $30,000, endorsed paper to the extent of $110,000 it will be remembered that representatives of the industries protected by the McKinley bill came forward and saved the Ohio statesman from ruin. It is foolish for any person or newspaper to attempt to make campaign material of the fact that Mr. Bryan is a poor man. Had not the protected industries come to McKinley's relief, not only would he be still poorer than is Mr. Bryan, but he would also be weighed down with debts, which would have kept him from ever again being in a position to pose in either business or politics.—Philadelphia Item.

Democratic Tariff Principle Is Right.

The McKinleyites defend their threat to unsettle business with another period of congressional dickering with protected interests by saying: "Vote this year for higher duties and settle the tariff question for once and all. Restore the McKinley law and then we shall have no more of this agitation for free trade."

The idea that going back to protection will take the tariff question out of politics is a grave mistake. There cannot, and will not, be a truce on the issue between high taxes and low taxes; between cheap goods and dear goods; between restricted trade and free commerce with all the world. So long as the system of raising public revenues operates to benefit a small number of persons at the expense of the whole people; so long as customs taxes foster monopolies by shutting out foreign competition; so long as heavy duties increase the cost of the people's necessities, there will be a tariff question on which parties will be divided.

There can be no compromise between the men who believe that protection is favoritism, paternalism and robbery under the form of law, and the men who claim that it is a sound public policy. One view or the other is right. The Democrats are convinced that taxes should be so levied as to yield the largest revenue with the least injury to trade and industry. The Republicans profess to believe that foreign commerce is an evil which should be restricted, if not altogether prohibited. Even if the latter theory should be endorsed by the people this year, it would by no means prove that it was right. The best interests of ninety-nine one-hundredths of the American people are on the side of low tariff taxes and enlarged commerce. Sooner or later they will find this out, and demand that every vestige of protection be destroyed.

The Democratic tariff principle is entirely right and just, and is therefore bound to prevail throughout all the world at no distant time. A Republican victory gained by a campaign of falsehood, appeals to ignorance and prejudice, and corruption funds contributed by the protected trusts, may delay the good work of breaking down high-tariff walls which divide nations, but the movement for a sound economic system of taxation will not stop. In spite of all discouragements it will continue until the people everywhere recognize and accept the great truth that liberty is the law of commerce as well as of political institutions.

Looking Forward.

O, Billy McKinley will have a black eye
After election.
The people will know that the Bryan boom's high.
The St. Louis convention they chained up a bear;
But the Republicans surely will swear
By the great guns they never were there.
After election.

There'll be no more talking of 16 to 1
After election.
For then the good deed will really be done
After election.
The free silver law will really be so,
For this is a fact, as you very well know,
The Republicans all will be under the snow
After election.

The free silver man fills the President's chair
After election.
For McKinley, you know, will never be there
After election.
And gold bugs will hide their heads in disgust,
Their glittering flag will be trailed in the dust,
And their golden balloon it will certainly bust
After election.

The people will get what they really need
After election.
Down will go corporate power and greed
After election.
Financial distress will have gone by.
The good of the people will be all the cry.
For twenty years coming, but now it is nigh,
Just after election.

Have You a Good Memory?

Unless you are a very young voter, you must remember the campaign of 1888. In that year all the promises of prosperity now being made by the McKinleyites were scattered broadcast throughout the country. The people believed what they were told and the Republicans were restored to power. After two years the McKinley law was enacted. You no doubt remember the predictions of higher wages, more work for labor, better times for the farmer, and increased business for the transportation interests, which were made by the defenders of that robber tariff measure.

Do you remember how those prophecies of good times were fulfilled? Have you forgotten that immediately after the McKinley law took effect there began a period of labor troubles involving hundreds of thousands of workers who struck against wage reductions or were locked out because they refused to accept less pay? In 1892 the condition of affairs among the strikers was so serious that in five States the militia had to be called out. This was a sample of the promised high-tariff prosperity.

You know that the McKinley law was in operation all through 1893 and for eight months of 1894. That was not so long ago that you cannot remember the condition of industry and business in that period. You probably heard something about a panic. You may have seen idle men looking in vain for work. You at least saw in the papers daily accounts of banks failing, mills shutting down, wage reductions and bankrupt business men. Were those the signs of prosperity? These things happened under the McKinley law. What reason is there for supposing that they will not happen again if that law is restored?

Judging by their imprudent pretenses that more taxes are a panacea for all business and industrial ills, the Republicans seem to have forgotten that they went through the same performance eight years ago and that their scheme was tried for four years with disastrous results. Have you forgotten it?

Said by a Republican

One thing is certain, silver converts are being made very fast, and free coinage is more popular now than six months ago. The common people all want it; bankers merchants, manufacturers and professional men are beginning to think that its "horrors" may have been exaggerated, while all unite in declaring that things could be little worse from a business standpoint than the last few years. And the truth is, the people may vote in November to try it.—Alleghenian.

Gilbert Parker's new novel, "The Pomp of the Lavilettes," is nearly ready. Mr. Parker has also completed the manuscript of a new short serial to be called "Cumner's Son."

An important work soon to issue from the Macmillan press is Henry O. Wakeman's "An Introduction to the History of the Church of England, from the Earliest Times to the Present Day."

President Roswell D. Hitchcock, of the Union Theological Seminary, New York, has issued in tasteful brochure from an American version of "The Gospel According to John," with the readings prefaced by the American Committee of Revision.

The autobiography of Augustus J. C. Hare is at last to see the light in the coming autumn. Two of the projected four volumes will appear in September. This monumental work is to be entitled "The Story of My Life," and will be illustrated with numerous wood cuts and photogravures.

A new terror looms ahead for magazine publishers. The proprietor of McClure's Magazine is now traveling in Palestine making arrangements for elaborate illustrations to embellish a serial life of Christ to be printed at enormous expense in colors. The text is to be written by Maclaren or Crockett.

W. M. Meredith, George Meredith's son, who is now a partner in the London publishing house of Archibald Constable & Co., has purchased the copyright of his father's book, "The Tragic Comedians." The Scribners are to handle the new thirty-four-volume edition of Meredith, 1,000 sets being apportioned to America.

The Scientific American celebrates the completion of its fiftieth year with a striking anniversary number covering seventy-two pages and reviewing in severalty all the leading industrial arts during the last half century. The publishers have done a valuable service for students of science as well as for their own justly esteemed periodical.

The Bookman says of the great thirty-volume literary anthology which Charles Dudley Warner is editing: "He is building a sort of literary Pantheon wherein shall be set the masterpieces of those alone who stand for something sound and strong and wholesome. No other living American is so well qualified to carry out this plan with breadth of vision and judgment; and, we may add, not many would possess the courage to attempt the task."

Competitive Preaching.

Elijah Hedding, the well-known Methodist bishop who lived in the first half of the present century, was particularly felicitous in making appointments for the different circuits. He used, however, to tell with keen enjoyment of one occasion on which he failed to give satisfaction.

At the close of a conference when he had made numerous appointments for circuits, a boy appeared, gasping for breath, and informed him that a man at the hotel, who seemed to be in a dying condition, was anxiously calling the bishop's name.

Hurrying to the hotel, he found the man in a state bordering on hysterics because he had failed to secure the appointment he wished, but had been assigned to another circuit.

"Now stop bawling," said the bishop firmly, when the man had made his complaint, "and go to your post and labor like a man." He thought he had seen the last of the fault finder, but a short time after the man appeared again, in a great state of excitement.

"I don't blame you, bishop," he said, "but it's that presiding elder! And now if you'll only hear him and me preach two bouts of twenty sermons apiece," he continued, looking anxiously at Bishop Hedding for encouragement, "two bouts of twenty sermons apiece, if I don't beat him, bishop, why I'll give up!"

This trial never took place, but the bishop had some difficulty in persuading the discontented preacher to return to his post.

Where Space Is Limited.

According to the Washington Star, a young man who contributes—or tries to contribute—to the newspapers was seen standing out in the night and gazing long and earnestly at the sky.

"What are you doing? Studying astronomy?" asked the friend who encountered him there.

"No; go away and don't disturb me. I am gazing into infinite distance."

"I don't see what satisfaction you find in that."

"That's because you have never had any experience with editors. You don't know what comfort it is to find some place where nothing is ever crowded out for want of space."

Degenerating.

No jokes are better appreciated than those that are made unwittingly by sober-minded men.

An English journal relates a case in point, the sober-minded man being Mr. John Burns, a very serious member of the House of Commons. He was speaking in a pessimistic strain about what he felt to be a great falling off in the character and standing of that august body.

"Since I came into this house, four years ago," he said, "the confidence of the public in it has much diminished."

Different Now.

Hodge—Too bad that you have to work nights in addition to the long hours you put in during the day.

Henson—Oh, I don't have to work nights. I get through at 5 o'clock every day.

Hodge—Why, your wife told my wife that you had to work until 11 or 12 o'clock every night.

Henson—Yes, but you know my wife's away from home now.—Cleveland Leader.

The Reason.

Manager—Don't you think that your dress is—well, just a little bit low cut?

Miss Monkfort—You see, the reason is that my voice is a trifle off to-night, and it is necessary to distract the audience's attention from the fact.—Judy.

HESITATE NO LONGER.

Modesty in women is natural. It is one of women's chief charms.

No one cares for one who really lacks this essential to womanliness.

Women have suffered fearfully because of over-sensitiveness in this direction. They couldn't say to the physician what they ought to say to someone. Mrs. Pinkham has received the confidence of thousands. Women open their hearts to her. She understands their suffering, and has the power to relieve and cure.

In nearly all cases the source of women's suffering is in the womb. In many cases the male physician does not understand the case and treats the patient for consumption—indigestion—anything but the right thing.

It is under such circumstances that thousands of women have turned to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., and opened their heart and lives—woman to woman—and received her help.

You ask how she can tell if the doctor cannot? Because no man living ever treated so many cases and possesses such vast experience.

Displacement, inflammation, torpid action, stagnation, sends to all parts of the body the pains that crush you.

Lydia E. Pinkham's "Vegetable Compound" is the sure cure for this trouble. For twenty years it has done its grand work and cured thousands.

EDUCATIONAL COLUMN

NOTES ABOUT SCHOOLS AND THEIR MANAGEMENT.

A Moorish College Is a Very Simple Affair—Parents Should Not Foster a Spirit of Rebellion Against School Rules—General Educational Matters

Education in Morocco.

A Moorish "college" is a simple affair—no seats; no desks; a few books. For beginners, boards about the size of foolscap, whitened on both sides with clay, take the place of book, paper, and slate. On these the various lessons, from the alphabet to the Koran, are plainly written in large black letters. A switch or two, a sand-box in lieu of blotter, and a book or two complete the paraphernalia. The dominie squats on the ground, tailor fashion, as do his pupils before him. They, from ten to thirty in number, imitate him as he repeats the lesson in a sonorous sing-song voice, accompanying the words by a rocking to and fro, which sometimes enables them to keep time. A sharp aplication of the switch to bare pate or shoulder is wonderfully effective in recalling wandering attention, and really lazy boys are speedily expelled. Girls, as a rule, get no schooling at all.

On the admission of a pupil the parents pay some small sum, varying according to their means, and every Wednesday, which is a half holiday, a payment is made of from half a cent to five cents. New moons and feast days are made occasions for the giving of larger sums, as are also holidays, which last ten days in the case of the greater festivals. Thursdays are whole holidays, and no work is done on Friday mornings, that day being the Mohammedan Sabbath, or at least "meeting-day," as it is called.

After learning the letters and figures, the youngsters set about committing the Koran to memory. When the first chapter is mastered—the one which with them corresponds to the "Pater Noster" of Christendom—it is customary for them to be paraded round the town on horseback with ear-splitting music, and sometimes charitably disposed persons make small presents to the young students by way af encouragement. After the first chapter the last is learned, then the last but one; and so on backwards to the second, as, with the exception of the first, the longest chapters are at the beginning.—Harper's Magazine.

Some Teachers Not Fit.

Some teachers have acquired the best of education, but are no more fit to train or teach our children in the schools than a hawk is to care for a brood of chickens; for as a hawk is at all times ready to seize its prey so are some teachers ready to give vent to their angry passion on some little child. Children are ruled at home by loving parents, and through respect and love they are easily controlled; but when they find that their teacher has not interest enough to sometimes be seen with them on the play ground, or hand in hand with some little tot on the street, they soon begin to think they are under no obligation to obey. I know of teachers with twenty scholars who don't find time to solve a problem nor for three or four days time to teach writing, and who keep little children sitting perfectly idle for hours at a time because they don't have time to waste on them. Now it is the nature of children to be busy, and if not otherwise employed of course they will be into mischief. We have some noble men and women in our schools and with them as teachers our children soon learn to be something more than "boobies." I believe care should be taken to employ teachers who are adapted to lead children into their school work with interest and, too, that teachers should be of noble characters. Parents should become acquainted with those who teach their children and have a true interest in the progress of education in their localities. I think this is a very important matter.—Parent.

Obedience to Rightful Authority.

A bit of candy or cake surreptiously given to a child, from whom these unnecessary articles are usually kept, not only disturbs the stomach—that would be the least part of it—but suggests a course of conduct which is unlimited in its possibilities of evil, for a luxury, harmless and even advantageous in itself, given in disregard of rightful authority, becomes an evil. Reverence for law, obedience to rightful authority, are most necessary in these days of independence, and anything which disturbs such reverence and obedience, however harmless in itself, should be scrupulously avoided. So far as an outsider is concerned parental rules for the child are absolutely inflexible, and obedience to his father's and mother's directions should be made as easy as possible to him. A similar principle should be recognized in regard to teachers. Parents are too careless in speaking disrespectfully of school rules before their children. A mistake in method of discipline is not likely to be so mischievous in its results as a spirit of rebellion against authority nourished in the child's heart. Discussion of teachers and their measures should be held in private; if they are thoroughly wrong the child should be removed from the school; if on the whole good, the errors should be excused.—Ladies' Home Journal.

What May Be Expected.

Book and magazine publishers pour out a stream of literature on all the subjects that pertain to the welfare of the human being from the time the child is an hour old until it is twenty years of age. There are charts published to record the weight, height, speech, motions, consciousness, etc., etc., of the infant, and the whole mass of such literature is for the teacher—written by teachers, addressed to other teachers—no word of the parent. At this rate of progress toward making the school room the center of all human activity, civilization and development, in the course of a few years the teacher will be expected to be a specialist in the field of medicine, of the eye, ear, and throat; an adept in mental science, normal and abnormal; a sanitary engineer up to date on every modern appliance of heating, ventilating, lighting, seating; an authority on personal hygiene, clothing and corrective gymnastics; and a part of her daily duty will be to issue bulletins dealing with the disposition of the few hours that the child necessarily spends at home—bulletins stating the time of eating and the kind of food to be given—with a chart showing the psychological condition of the child, and an analysis of the kind of food recommended, the hour for bathing and sleeping, etc.—Tessa L. Kelso.

Our Nation's Hope.

Although I'm not a Senator,
Yet, still, I think that I
Can make a speech as well as one—
At least I'm going to try.

My teacher says I'm very smart,
And to my class a credit;
And, you bet, the highest prize
I'm going to try and get it.

My spelling, reading, numbers, too,
My pennies and my dollars,
I know as well as those who wear
Their piccadilly collars.

I'm getting kind of tired now,
And hope you will excuse me
From talking any further,
Or of nonsense you'll accuse me.

I see my mamma looking, too,
From her smiling I infer
She feels right proud of me, and I
Feel very proud of her.

Uniformity Will Disappear.

The last Legislature of Washington enacted a law requiring the State Board of Education to adopt, or readopt, text books for use in the public schools of the State, provided that the retail prices of the books adopted should not exceed two-thirds of the retail prices of the books heretofore in use. No proposals were received for high school books, except in the case of physiologies, that came within the legal restriction; hence none were adopted except physiologies, leaving all high schools to use what they may see fit on all other subjects. Uniformity, which has existed during the last five years, will probably disappear as a result of the operation of this law.—Educational News.

Don't Stop Growing.

The teacher who stops growing begins to lose teaching power. There are many petty annoyances which assail every teacher; and usually some one or more serious drawbacks to one's intellectual vitality. All these can be more than counterbalanced by the inspiriting effects of new intellectual activity. If that is wanting, the friction becomes galling, the pleasure of the daily work is impaired, the teacher loses cheerfulness and energy and the old measure of success. The end of the year is a good time to determine that, whatever else is unattained in the coming twelvemonth, there must and shall be a healthful, intellectual growth.—Martin Kellogg.

Off for School.

Oh! mamma, mamma, it's half past eight!
Where are my rubbers? I shall be late;
And where is my pencil? I know just where
I laid it down, but it isn't there.
Oh! here is my bag with my books all right—
I'm glad that my lessons were learned last night;
And now I'm off—here's a kiss—good-bye.

Torpedo for Grave Ghouls.

The coffin torpedo is the latest device to foil the grave robber.

Of late years the practice of despoiling graves has become so widespread that every effort has been put forth to find some means to end it. It is believed the present invention will achieve that purpose.

This new contrivance is a regulation bomb, as deadly as any ever invented by anarchistic genius. It is placed in the casket just previous to interment, and after it is placed in position and the lid of the casket screwed down, it will be an exceedingly dangerous undertaking to attempt to force the casket open. The lid of the closed coffin presses down a spring. Raising this lid, even in slight degree, releases the spring, causing it to strike a percussion cap. The resulting explosion of the cap also explodes the bomb, and, while the concussion would wrench the casket, it is almost impossible for the person who is trying to open the casket to escape instant death.—New York Journal.

Trouble Ahead.

The sensitiveness of military gentlemen about their rank and titles has been the cause of much heartburning and many disasters. Its more amusing side is hit off by a store in Pearson's Weekly.

Corporal McCaffery was in a raging temper, and could hardly keep his forage cap at the proper angle of forty-five on account of the wrinkles in his forehead.

"What's up, Dennis? Where's the fire?" asked an intimate friend.

"Oi'll just tell yez. Patrick McGlynn knows as well as inny of yez that only last week Oi was gazitted 'corporal,' and look yez here, now, the spalpeen has sint me a litter 'To Dennis McCaffery,' and marked it 'private,' the scoundrel! Oi'll let him know fwhat it is to insult the honor of a non-commissioned officer. Oi'll show him 'private!' be jabbers if Oi don't!"

His First Plea.

In a Southern city a few years ago a young lawyer undertook the defense of an old darky who had been arrested as a chicken thief, and who in the days of slavery had been owned by the lawyer's father.

It was the young man's first plea, and was not brilliant in either construction or delivery. The darky received a pretty severe sentence, his guilt being well proved.

"Thank you, sah," said the prisoner, addressing the judge cheerfully, when the sentence had been pronounced; "dat's mighty hard, but it ain't anywhar near what I expected. I thought, sah, dat between my character and pore Mars' Frank's speech, dey'd hang me, sure!"

A Boise, Idaho, man having advertised he would not be responsible for debts contracted by his wife, she retorts that "he never paid any of my bills for my clothes or anything else in the nineteen years I have been married to him. He is now walking around town with a suit of clothes on that I paid $15 for."

Pope Leo, it is said, has selected the princess of Bulgaria as the recipient of the Golden Rose for this year in token of his approval of her opposition to the "conversion" of little Prince Boris to the orthodox faith.

Gypsy Superstitions.

If a gypsy meets a woman upon entering a town, he looks upon it as a piece of good luck and a sign that he will collect plenty of alms. If, on the contrary, he encounters a man, he will get nothing, and will probably meet with misfortune besides.

No gypsy girl would listen to a nightingale when in company with her lover; if she did, it would denote a separation.

Birds seem, as a rule, to bring misfortune.

If a cock crows when a marriage procession is passing, it denotes that the couple will always be quarreling.

If geese or ducks fly across the path, the husband will be ground under the heel of his wife and her female relatives.

A flock of sparrows is the sign that the love of the bride and the bridegroom will soon vanish.

Ravens or crows at a wedding denote approaching poverty.

If the birds fly to the right, the wife will soon tire of the union; if to the left, the husband will soon tire of the wife.

A flock of sheep brings luck; a herd of goats, misfortune.

A dog, a donkey, a cow, are all signs of good luck.

Doves or swallows crossing the path of a young pair are a sign of great riches.

If a gypsy girl wishes to know how soon she will marry, she whispers in the ear of the first donkey she meets, "Shall I soon have a husband?"

If the donkey moves its ears, the girl knows that she will marry almost immediately. If, on the contrary, the animal shakes its head, it will be some time before she gets a husband.

She Knew One Spanish Word.

"I shall never forget my first visit to Madrid," said a woman the other evening. "I was the only member of the party who knew any Spanish, and I knew but one word, that one being 'leche'—milk—but by means of gestures we managed to get along until breakfast was served. Then as luck would have it, the maid brought my coffee without any milk, and, also as luck would have it, I promptly forgot the one Spanish word that I knew, and which of all words was the one most wanted at that moment. This time neither gesture nor yelling were of any avail, so at last in desperation I seized a piece of paper and a pencil and drew a picture of a cow. Whereupon the maid tripped off and came back with three tickets to the bull fight."—New York Evening Sun.

A Wonderful Phenomenon.

The man who should pass through life without experiencing a twinge of indigestion might be fitly regarded as a wonderful phenomenon. We doubt if such a privileged mortal has ever existed. If so, we have never seen him. But thousands are known to be daily relieved of dyspepsia by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the popular remedy for that truly national complaint, as well as for fever and ague, debility, constipation, rheumatism and kidney troubles.

Joan of Arc's Armor.

discovery has just been made of a relic, which, should it prove genuine, will be a national object of veneration to the French. It is the armor given by Charles VII. at Bourges to Joan of Arc. He ordered it to be made for her during the siege of Orleans. The armor bears the arms that Charles VII. granted her.

Parliament Doubles.

However, as she had been that day on a visit to her sister, whose husband was getting $18 a week, while her own dear new hubby got but $14, perhaps her discontent was excusable.—Indianapolis Journal.

A Beautiful Illustrated Book Free.

"A thing of beauty is a joy forever," we all know, and have learned to admire as well. But when an object of admiration carries with it a large measure of useful information in addition to its artistic merit, its intrinsic value becomes very much enhanced. In our last week's issue there appeared an advertisement announcing that The John M. Smyth Company, 150 to 168 West Madison street, Chicago, would send free to all applicants their elegant new and massive 400-page illustrated catalogue. The John M. Smyth Company is the largest furniture and house-furnishing establishment in the world. Their new catalogue is a marvel of the printer's finest art, as well as an encyclopedia of information pertaining to all kinds of home, office and hotel furnishing. Illustrations run in profusion through the book, and prices are given for everything. This great book—a perfect standard work on house and office furnishing—should be in every home of our land. It will be shipped free by express, charges prepaid, to all who write for it to

The Animal Kingdom in Newspaperdom

The top of the Herald building in New York is said to be decorated with twenty figures of owls. Behind the eyes of those owls will be sixteen-candle power electric lights. The clock over the main entrance will be connected with these lights, and at midnight each particular owl will wink the other eye. Mr. Pulitzer should now get up some electric owls that will not only wink the other eye, but shriek unitedly at noonday, "We told you so." This bit of enterprise would goad Brother Dana into having a colossal office cat set up on top of his modest building that would arch its back occasionally and yowl loudly, "If you see it in the Sun it's so," and then conclude the performance by thrusting its tongue into its cheek and grinning from ear to ear.—Buffalo Commercial.

Never Out of Season.

By lighting his hot houses at night with electric lights of 5,000 candle-power Dr. Werner von Siemens ripens raspberries in seventy-five days; grapes in two months and a half, etc. The expression "in season" may soon lose its significance in this connection, since by the application of electricity, fruits, vegetables, etc., can be had at any time of the year. The fruits thus produced are remarkable for brilliant color and fine aroma, but are not as sweet as those ripened by the sun.

GRAND SUCCESS

Was the Matrimonial Reunion Held Yesterday at the Fair Ground.

Thursday's Daily.

Teams began to arrive quite early this morning, with people who came to attend the Meese reunion, and by ten o'clock there was a large number of teams and people at the fair grounds. All was ready for them, including a speaker's stand, convenient grounds for uses etc. The Volunteers' Band, and the Epworth Guards were on hand also. The program was fully carried out. Hon. R. M. Lockhart was president and Miss Etta Heist secretary. Judge Bowesox of Bryan made the chief address but there were several others. The latest of the hour when the meeting closed compels us to wait until tomorrow for a full report.

Friday's Daily.

After what we said yesterday the first exercise was singing the hymn, "Praise God from Whom all Blessings Flow," followed by prayer, by Dr. Palmer. President Lockhart took the chair, and J. E. Pomeroy made the address of of welcome, which was a very fine one proving Mr. Pomeroy to be a man of talent in this direction. Dr. Palmer, of Chicago, who is with the Volunteers, then made an able and eloquent address. Then there was music by the Auburn chorus and by the Volunteers' band, and then the speech by Judge Bowersox, of Bryan. His subject was, "Is marriage a Failure or a Success?" It was an able and eloquent speech, and given in a way to captivate his audience. He was surprised, he said, at the numbers called together by this occasion. He had been used to speaking to a large audience of people, but not to acres of them. At the close of his address. Dr. Palmer suggested that we acknowledge our thanks to him by giving the Chautauquan Salute, which is by waving handkerchiefs. And the whole grove was in an instant alive with snowy emblems, waved enthusiastically. It was an inspiriting sight. At this point came the noon recess, and then the pleasant, grove, was soon dotted with groups of happy picnickers enjoying their abundant store of "basket dinner." Soon after one o'clock, they were again called to order by Pres. Lockhart, and there singing by the Butler township choir of young people. Morris Widney, was called, and gave one of his finest songs, which captured the audience, and they insisted on having another and he sang again. He was accompanied on the organ by Miss Gay Simon. One of the very finest things was the recitation that followed, given by a little son of Charlie Baber, of Butler, township. He has talent of a high order, and it is plain he is not afraid to give hard work and study to the pieces he recites. Rev. Mr. Yager of Waterloo, then delivered a bright and able address, which greatly pleased the audience. He was followed by a song given by the Cedar Chapel Glee Club. Mr. Lockhart was called for a short speech and after this was a solo by Miss Maud Trover. It was fine of course. In fact all the singing was excellent. The next in order was the march of the married conples, to the east end of the Floral Hall, where a place had been prepared for taking a photograph of them by Mr. Hoffman. Before starting J. C. Lochner offered a motion that the next meeting be in two years and on the Thursday nearest the date of this first meeting. This was carried, and then the pictures were taken. In Marching to the place, the couple first married by Mr. Meese, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Swineford, were at the head, and the last couple, Mr. and Mrs. Wilbert Lutz were the last ones Mr. Meese Married. Mr. Lutz carrying a flag. When arranged on the stand at the Hall, two pictures were taken. The first included the whole group and Mr Hoffman made several negatives of this, all proving good. Then he had Mr. Meese come to the front [illegible] up, with Mr. Lutz on one [illegible] and Mrs. Lutz on the other and their pictures were taken, with the other group for a background. Mr. Hoffman, had about noon, taken the entire assembage, as they were seated or standing among the trees of the grove. He will finish up a lot of all these, and will have them on sale, for all who wish to get them.

The whole affair was an eminent success, the day was the best that could have been, and all rejoiced with Mr. Meese, that all things had turned out so well. Of course he was happy and that made all the rest happy.

Several of the couples present went about through the crowd and a handsome sum of money was donated for the worthy preacher.

Partly by counting and partly by estimating, it was the opinion of good guessers, that the audience numbered over 2,000. There were people from all over the county, and quite a number from outside.

The music was all good, and the people greatly enjoyed it.

Over 90 couples registered with the secretary giving date of marriage, bride's maiden name, and the number of children, if any. And they were in general a fine looking lot of people.

By actual count, 89 couples marched in line when the pictures were taken. And there were a few on the ground, who did not enroll their names.

Retire Greenbacks.

(Laporte Argus)

Let us suppose that either silver dollars or paper certificates backed by silver dollars, were paid out in place of the greenbacks as fast as they are redeemed in gold and destroyed. What would then happen? It is clear that the currency would not be contracted, and that the greenbacks, that have caused the country so much trouble and expense to keep a stock of gold on hand for their frequent redemption, would soon be entirely eliminated from our currency and a long step taken toward the simplification of our mony to constitutional gold and silver. Contrary to the general belief, the greenback has proved to be the most expensive currency we have and it has been the prime cause of nearly all our financial troubles. They stand in their relations to the government exactly in the same position that a thousand little over due debts does to the individual. They are a constant embarrassment for they are likely to be presented for payment at any moment whether the government is prepared to pay at the time or not. The government like the individual, is therefore kept on a constant strain to be prepared to meet these payments, whereas with a funded debt deliberate preparations can be made to meet the small annual interest and final payment, if payment is desired. No individual could do business successfully if his little floating debts were constantly being gathered up by designing men and presented for payment. Any successful business man would under such conditions obtain money in larger quantities and stated times and pay off and forever extinguish the harrowing little debts that serve as gadflies of annoyance. There is not an experienced business man in the country who will not say this would be the only sensible and practical thing for him to do, but it is a curious fact that apparently a great majority of the people make a fetich of greenbacks, and would have the government pursue a course directly opposite that they would take as individuals. Clearly this is a mistake, for the government represents a collection of individuals, and every business principle that applies to the individual applies with equal force to the government. The country will never have a perfectly safe and reliable currency until the government goes to doing business on reliable business principles, the same as good business men do.

"The Foot of a Fly"

says an eminent English doctor, "will carry enough poison to infect a household." In summer-time, more especially, disease germs fill the air, multitudes are infected, fall ill, die; multitudes escape. These messengers of mischief do not exist for millions. Why not? Because they are healthy and strong—protected as a crocodile is against gunshot. It is the weak, the wasted, the thin-blooded who fall; those who have no resistive power so that a sudden cough or cold develops into graver disease. We hear of catching disease! Why not catch health? We can do it by always maintaining our healthy weight.

Scott's Emulsion

of Cod-liver Oil, is condensed nourishment; food for the building up of the system to resist the attacks of disease. It should be taken in reasonable doses all summer long by all those whose weight is below the standard of health. If you are losing ground, try a bottle now.

Campaign Quartet.

The campaign, as far as music is concerned, is now open. A "Campaign Quartet" has been formed, composed Frank Lahnum Wm Kruse, Art Beidler and Saxby McIntosh. As will be seen, it is strictly non-partisan, Lahnum and Kruse being democrats, and Beidler and McIntosh republicans, so they will sing for both parties. Their first engagement will be with the Bryan Club next Tuesday evening. They will be prepared to sing at the meetings of any and all clubs. Arrangements for their services can be made with D. M. Link or Art Beidler.

The Old Log Cabin.

Cyrus Bowman is again superintendent of the old time Log Cabin at the Waterloo Fair, and asks everybody to help him to make a good display of ancient and pioneer articles. People in town and country, can generally find something. Pioneer, household articles, such as old candlesticks and lamps, ancient dishes, furniture, and everything in that line that has gone out of date and will prove a curiosity to the younger generations. All these articles should be brought to the fair, or what will likely be easier for all concerned, should be left at the furniture store of Wm. Ettinger in Waterloo, and Mr. Bowman will take them over to the Cabin, place them and label such as have no labels and at the close of the fair, will deliver them to the owner, or to Mr. Ettinger in as good condition as when he got them. The owners can label each article if they choose, and if the article has a history, it can be briefly given. Those who saw the "Art Loan Collection" at the M. E. church in Auburn can see at once what a great variety of articles of interest can be found in many homes. Give Mr. Bowman a grand display. He is one of the pioneers himself. The fair begins on Tuesday, Sept. 1.

Nearly Hung.

Friday's Daily.

Alt Moody and some men were taking down electric light wires in front of Sommers' saloon yesterday and a sort of a swing formed by the wire was hanging from each side of the street when Sherm Peterson the Lake Shore operator came riding along on his bicycle. He did not notice the wire and it caught him under the chin, throwing him backward and raising the wheel in the air. Mr. Peterson's neck is black from ear to ear and he is suffering quite a considerable from the heavy shock. There is a rumor that a settlement will be expected from the Mining Company. In about an hour after Mr. Peterson was hurt a team came near getting tangled up in the same wire.

Bicycle Accident.

Wednesday's Daily.

While returning from Kendallville yesterday and about 2 miles from that place W. H. Kuhn met with an accident. He was riding at a lively speed on level gravel road when his bicycle frame broke in two, throwing Mr Kuhn about fifteen feet, and hurting his shoulder quite bad. Several other Auburn wheelmen soon were on the scene and Mr. Kuhn picked up his wheel having a part in each hand and got in a wagon and was taken to Avilla. The break was probably due to the accident he had here the Fourth of July as his wheel was damaged on that day. Mr. Kuhn is now at his home under the doctor's care and in a very critical condition.

GEORGE PUT HIS FOOT IN IT.

He Had Noticed the Pretty Waiter Girls at Luncheon.

"Why is it, George," began Mrs. Mann, according to the Boston Transcript, "that you never come home noons now? Can it be that you are getting tired of your little wife?"

"Nonsense!" exclaimed Mr. Mann, with a laugh.

"Then perhaps it is my cooking that you object to. I suppose they have ever so much better things at the places where you go down-town."

"Oh, it isn't that at all. The fact is, I have so much to do now; I am so hurried, you understand, that really I can't take the time to come home."

"There is one thing I want to ask you, George?"

"Well, what is it?"

"Do they have girl waiters where you take your luncheon?"

"Yes—that is, I think so; why do you ask?"

"Oh, it doesn't matter if you never took enough notice to find out; but they tell me that in some of the restaurants they have girl waiters, and that the men flirt with them awfully."

"But, of course, darling, you would not think that of me?"

"No, George—I don't think you would flirt with anybody."

"Of course not; but you did worry just a tiny bit about those pretty table girls?"

"Why, George, what are you saying? You speak of them as being pretty, and you know that you were unable to tell me for certain whether there were any girls there at all. Oh, what a blundering fellow!"

"I mean that I have heard the men speak of pretty table girls at places where they lunched and I suppose I got from that the idea that all table girls are pretty."

Mrs. Mann (after a pause): "George, do you think you would enjoy your meals better at home if I should put on a white skirt over my dress and put on a white waist, with a big broad collar around my neck?"

"What in the world put that into your head?"

"Why, that is the way the waiter girls dress, isn't it?"

"And what of that?"

"Nothing; only, perhaps, if I looked like one of those waiter girls you would just as lief come home to lunch as to go to an eating-house."

"But, my dear, do you think you could ever look like a waiter girl, whatever you had on?"

"You mean by that, I suppose, that I ain't pretty enough. If that is what you think of your wife, George Mann, the sooner we separate the better for both of us. To think that I ever should be treated in such an outrageous manner as this!"

Chicago's Well-Used Library.

The report of the public library board for the fiscal year ended June 1, sets forth that the number of books taken to homes from the library and sub-stations during the year, being 1,173,586 volumes, is greater than in the case of any similar institution in the world. Manchester, England, is not a close second, with 975,944 volumes. Boston, Mass comes next, with 847,321 volumes. Birmingham, England, is the fourth, with a record of 818,312. The total number of volumes held by the library is 217,203. Accessions for the year equaled 10,485. The aggregate number of books, periodicals, etc., in use during the year, including books of reference, was 2,542,244, an increase of 57,192 over the previous year. The attendance at the central reading room, and at the sub-stations, was materially greater than for the preceding year. A great demand is noted for additional reading rooms throughout the city, notably in those districts of dense population where the poorer people live. Lack of funds has prevented extension to as great a degree as is desirable. For the reason that space is limited, as well as money, comparatively few volumes were purchased during the year. All this will be changed after January 1, when the move will be made to the new building on the lake front. More money will be available, while space will be ample.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

More Than a Trifle.

It was only a little blossom,
Just the merest bit of bloom.
But it brought a glimpse of summer
To the little darkened room.

It was only a glad "Good morning,"
As she passed along the way;
But it spread the morning's glory
Over the livelong day.

Only a song; but the music,
Though simply pure and sweet,
Brought back to better pathways
The reckless roving feet.

Only! In our blind wisdom
How dare we say it at all?
Since the ages alone can tell us
Which is the great or small.

George Ezra, infant adopted son of John and Millie Apple, was born March 27, 1896, and died August 21, 1896, aged 4 months and 23 days. Little George leaves to mourn his death, father and mother, besides many other friends. Precious in the sight of the Lord are the death of his saints. If the death of the righteous are precious how much more so must be the death of his little lambs?

Epilepsy 20 Years.

Cured by Dr. Miles' Nervine.

A few years ago, Mr. L. W. Gallaher, was an extensive, successful expert manufacturer of lumber products. Attacked with epilepsy, he was obliged to give up his business. The attacks came upon him most inopportunely. One time falling from a carriage, at another down stairs, and often in the street. Once he fell down a shaft in the mill, his injuries nearly proving fatal. Mr. Gallaher writes from Milwaukee, Feb. 16, '95.

"There are none more miserable than epileptics. For 20 years I suffered with epileptic fits, having as high as five in one night. I tried any number of physicians, paying to one alone, a fee of $500.00 and have done little for years but search for something to help me, and have taken all the leading remedies, but received no benefit. A year ago my son, Chas. S. Gallaher, druggist at 191 Reed St., Milwaukee, gave me Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, and I tried it with gratifying results. Have had but two fits since I began taking it. I am better now in every way than I have been in 20 years."

Willis' new store was partly blown off tearing its way into the back part of George Derthick's house. Mrs. J. U. Winslow also suffered the loss of the tin roof on her brick building on Railroad street, which was carried across the street, and the chimney blown. Great trees were broken off like pipe stems. The ground was covered with fruit everywhere, and smaller injuries done.

DeKalb or DeKab.

A teacher asks which is the proper pronunciation of the name of our county. The answer is: Pronounce it as given in the first word of this heading. Sound the "l." There is no authority for any other pronunciation as far as we know. Calling it "DeKab" came, we believe from parties in Indianapolis, and was caught up by a few people in this and Steuben counties, and it is perhaps used sparingly over the state. But DeKalb is probably a German word, as Baron DeKalb, who laid down his life for the cause of American freedom, was born in a German province, which in his day was held by France, in whose service he he was before coming over here. No doubt he spoke his name as the Germans speak the word "Kalb," a calf. And while we ourselves leave the "l" silent before "f," "v" and several other letters, there is no rule for dropping it before "b," especially in words of purely German origin. Sound the "l" and say it "DeKalb."

Recruiting Garrett Lodge.

Whenever an A. O. U. W. Lodge in this vicinity need any help they call on Auburn Lodge No. 12 for they are always willing to respond and are a jolly lot of fellows and our neighbors like to entertain them. After the work an elegant supper was served by the Garrett Lodge which was enjoyed by all. Amoung those who were in attendance from here were, E. D. Beadle, Sam Brandon. Bill Wolf, Chas. Raut, Chas. Telephone Opening

The Central Union Co. Gives a Grand Blow Out.

Friday's Daily.

The Central Union Telephone Company have sent a number of invitations to our citizens asking them to attend their grand opening at the Swineford House this afternoon from 3 to 6 o'clock. There were present many of those interested in the company, among them being, Mr. Worth and Mr. Deeds, of Indianapolis, Mr. Vilas and Mr. Cross whose location we did not learn, and Mr. Taylor of Fort Wayne. The company had a copper wire stretched from their cable to the parlor of the Swineford house and by some electrical apparatus here were connected forty receivers and just that many people could hear what was being talked over the long distant phone. Many of our citizens who have friends in the east had written them to come to the phone and talk with them. A. Lewis will talk to relatives at Albion N. Y. tonight at 6 o'clock. D. A. Garwood talked to an aunt at Chicago and quite an extended conversation was kept up between the telephone men. The services is excellent to Chicago. You can hear every word distinctly.

Long Distance.

Saturday's Daily.

We gave yesterday a brief account of the exhibit at the Swineford, of the working of the Long Distance Telephone service. As noted, there was an arrangement with forty receivers, and that many persons could hear at a time, all that was said over the lines. Those who had notified distant friends to be at a certain hour at some of the Long Distance stations had the pleasure of talking to them. A. Lewis called up a merchant named Bailey, at his old home, Albion, N. Y., 450 miles east of Auburn. They had a nice little talk. Mr. Lewis asked him as to the free silver sentiment in New York states and Mr. Bailey replied, "Bryan spoke here to-day to a crowd of 30,000 to 40,000, so you can be your own judge as to how it is." The conversations were all easily heard here. F. E. Davenport called up his son, Frank, and wife, at Chicago, and all could recognize the familiar voices and hear every word said, The conversation was kept up several minutes. Then Mrs. Barns, of this office, talked with Mrs. Davenport, who was formally Minnie Zimmerman, and the two friends had quite a little visit. At 5:30 Frank returned to the telephone at Chicago, bringing his guitar, and played several tunes for the edification of those Auburn friends who used to hear him serenading. Owing, however, to the fact that he could not get the guitar close enough to the transmitter, only a part of the tones could be heard. It was however a wonderful thing, and many who were skeptical as to talking to people 500 miles distant, went away convinced that it could be easily done.

My Baby.

CANTON, O., 2-26-'96—Hand Medicine Co.—"My baby had been having wind colic since her birth and she was two months old when I procured a bottle of Dr. Hand's Colic Cure. In less than two weeks' time she was cured of having colic and has never had it since. We had tried several other medicines, but they did no good. I can cheerfully recommend your colic cure to be the best. Mrs. F. H. Rock," Sold by Fischler & Son, 25c. 2

Music of the Institute.

Besides the fine musical entertainment mentioned in Tuesday's DAILY the day sessions as usual were interpersed with songs and vocal solos. Louis D. Eichhorn supervisor of music in the public schools of Logansport arrived at the institute Monday. He is a very young looking man, but he took hold of the music of the institute with the ease and the ability of one with many years of experience. Mr. Eichhorn has a full, rich, and cultivated voice. He is full of enthusiasm, is a thorough musician, a cultured and refined gentleman, and a conductor of vocal music of rare ability. So thoroughly did his work endear him to our teachers and the large number of citizens who were continually in attendance, that upon his departure Wednesday, a vote of thanks for his valuable services met with a hearty and unanimous support of the vast assembly.

After Mr. Eichhorn's departure Mr. C. A. Woodcox, of St. Joe Station had charge of the singing. Mr. Woodcox is a good singer, has had a good musical training and his work was very acceptable.

On Tuesday afternoon Miss Flora Thomson, of Garrett, who is always greeted with appreciation by all who know her great ability as pianist for one of her age, being present was prevailed on to favor the institute with a solo. Not having any music with her she was compelled to play a lighter selection than the high grade standard production she gave at the musical Monday evening. Notwithstanding this however she was called back for the second.

On Wednesday afternoon Mrs. Orrilla Merica, wife of Prof. F. M. Merica of Garrett sang a solo to the great delight of all. Mrs. Merica is a singer of whom Garrett can well be proud; and while she now has the care of a home and the responsibilities of a mother yet she does not allow her accomplishments to retrograde but her voice becomes sweeter and more powerful each year.

Thursday forenoon, there was a piano solo by Mrs. D. A. Garwood, than whom as a pianist Northern Indiana has few better. We mildly express the sentiment of the institute when we say that wherever and before what ever assembly Mrs. Garwood is called upon to play, DeKalb with one voice feels like exclaiming, "She is ours."

Thursday afternoon, Estella Merica gave the institute a violin solo of marvelous power and sweetness. No one knows the possibilities of a violin till he hears it properly played, and to play properly requires years of training such as she has had, under the best masters. Auburn is proud of several of our musical people, but of none more than of Miss Merica. So of her we repeat: "She is ours."

On Friday morning Mrs. Yesbera who always pleases our people, appeared in her best voice and was enthusiastically encored. On Friday afternoon Miss Edith Bowden, of Troy township, and Miss Alma Husselman, of Fairfield township, each gave a most acceptable recitation.

Add to the above list those of the county who participated in the exercises Monday evening: Mrs. Maude Robbins, the nightingale of DeKalb, with her sweet-toned and cultured voice, Miss Maud Sembower, the accomplished pianist, of Garrett, and the corneter, our own Frank Fanning, and Old DeKalb can give a musical entertainment of which any county can well be proud.

DOES YOUR HEAD ACHE?

Ten to one the cause is a bad condition of the stomach and digestive organs. Also in 50c and $1.00 size Of F. E. Davenport. 39

Presto-Change.

Something like a sleight-of-hand incident comes over the wires from the Kessler cigar factory in Dr. Swarts' building on North Main street. Dr. Swarts is a republican and the Kesslers are democrats. The Doctor had hung a fine picture of McKinley up in the front window of the second story, the one above the cigar factory. Then some one began to laugh at the Kesslers for being McKinley men. So to get even, some of them went up into the second story and pasted a fine picture of Bryan over the McKinley picture. It was now Dr. Swarts' turn to be guyed about being a Bryan man. But he insisted that the handsome face across the way was the "Napoleon of Canton," and refused to be guyed. Roy Hull, who works in the cigar factory, being also of the opinion that McKinley was up there all right, jokingly told a democratic factory hand to "Step out into the street with me and see the next president," for Roy is for some unknown cause, a republican. He and the friend stepped out into the street only to behold the next president, a plain picture of the silver leader. He was struck all in a heap, but gave in. On Sunday, the Doctor took a square look across the way and he also saw the joke. And now there is no "future president" in that window, but there is fun on both sides of the street.

Ollie Robbins.

The Chicago Chronicle has a brief account of an attempt to kill Ollie Robbins, who was back here a few days ago on a visit. He is night engineer of the Title and Trust Company's building at 100 Washington street, Chicago, and Wednesday night it appears he caught some negroes stealing tools from the engine room, and he ordered them off. They at once attacked him and a life and death struggle began. The negroes were armed with knives and he was badly cut and slashed, and when he had fallen was kicked and beaten until he was unconscious. The would be assassins then made their escape. When Ollie was discovered he was got up onto a cot, but the doctor would not let him be moved for several hours. But about nine yesterday he was taken to his home. The agents of the building have hired a trained nurse to care for him. We have not learned how seriously he is hurt.

The Silo

Cal. Husselman, begins on to-day putting up his "silo" at his home farm north of town and will continue off and on during the week. It seems that in putting up this green fodder, after filling in a certain amount they must then wait a day or two to let it "sweat" and then fill some more, and then wait again, and so on, so that it may take a week or more. Mr. Husselman has put up a large tub of staves, fourteen feet in diameter and twenty-four feet high, to hold 130 tons, This he expects to fill for winter use. Like a great many others, we never saw any of this prepared fodder, and shall try and see it, before the work closes. It is made by cutting green fodder, and packing it in a certain way, and when properly prepared it is said to be the best of feed for stock, retaining more of the qualities of fresh feed than is in ordinary hay or corn fodder. We have no doubt but many farmers will call during the week to see the new method. All are welcome.

A MOTHER'S CRIME.

Killed Her Two Boys and Her Daughter.

Neighbors who broke into the home of C. W. Green, traveling passenger agent of the Big Four Railway at Kansas City, Mo., Saturday morning, found the three children, two boys, aged respectively, 13 and 4 years, and a girl aged 9, lying dead in bed. They had been shot and instantly killed as they slept. In another part of the house Mrs. Green, also dead, lay upon the floor, weltering in her own blood. The woman had apparently fired and killed her children, then dispatched herself, using a revolver. Mrs. Green had apparently suddenly become crazed in the night, and risen and committed the terrible crime. She is said to have been addicted to morphine. Mrs. Green was 35 years old. Mr. Green, who is the traveling passenger agent for that territory for the Big Four Railroad, left the city a week ago last Tuesday for a trip to Salt Lake City with Mr. Lynch, assistant passenger agent of that road.

Usurper at Zanzibar Is Overthrown.

London special: The Foreign Office has received dispatches from Zanzibar stating that the usurping Sultan, Said Khalid, having refused to surrender in accordance with the terms of the British Consul's ultimatum, the palace was bombarded by the warships in the harbor, and after the bombardment was captured by the British sailors and marines who had been landed by the war vessels. Said Khalid was made a prisoner and will be deported to India. The dispatches did not mention the loss on either side.

A later dispatch says that Said Khalid and his leading adherents made their escape and took refuge in the German Consulate. Still later dispatches say that the palace and the old custom-house were a blazing mass of ruins.

Oregon Forest Fires.

Astoria (Ore.) special: One of the largest and most destructive forest fires that has ever visited this section of the State is now raging near Oak Point, forty miles up the Columbia River from Astoria. A stretch of flame three miles wide is sweeping through the most valuable lands in Oregon. Several lumber camps have been destroyed and hundreds of cattle perished, but no loss of life is reported. Large parties of lumbermen and ranchers have been fighting the flames for two days without rest, but the fire is gaining rapid headway. Millions of logs and a vast quantity of standing timber, together with a few ranch buildings have been burned.

Whips, Tar and Fire.

Bloomington (Ind.) special: Word received from Washington Township gives particulars of a terrible White Capping case. Will Ray, a respectable married citizen, was taken from his house, tied to a tree and whipped by masked men. After his back had been cut and bruised Ray was coated with tar and feathers, and is now in a serious condition. The reason alleged is that he was too intimate with a certain woman, who was taken from her house two weeks ago and her home burned.

EARNS A MARK FOR STALLIONS.

Famous Joe Patchen Lowers the World's Record at Rigby Park.

The famous pacing stallion Joe Patchen lowered the world's stallion pacing record by a quarter of a second, going the mile in 2:03 flat on the track at Rigby Park, Me., Friday. Two of the judges' watches showed the time to be one-fifth of a second less than 2:03. It was not a very favorable day for going against records, as a strong westerly wind was blowing when the racing began. When the wind died down a little Jack Curry drove Joe Patchen for a trial. After a mile of warming up the black stallion was started down the track at a lively gait, with a runner known as Little Friend driven by Charles O'Brien. A strong head wind was blowing. The judges caught the quarter at 0:30¼, and, with the wind at his back, the famous stallion reeled off the second quarter in 0:29½. The half was made in just one minute. On the third quarter the time was 0:30¼, and at a two-minute clip. Joe Patchen gathered himself for the last quarter, but here he met the strong wind again, against which he slowed down a bit, but crossed the wire in 0:32¾. The announcement of the mile in 2:03 flat, one-quarter of a second better than the world's stallion pacing record, held by John R. Gentry, set the crowd wild. They lifted Curry, the driven, out of his sulky, swarmed from the grand stand onto the tracks and cheered like madmen.

REMARKABLE DUEL.

George Page and Will Morgan, young men living near Madison, Fla., Saturday night fought one of the most remarkable duels on record. For six months Page and Morgan have been rivals for the affections of a young lady. Saturday night both attended a dance at which the young lady was present. Her conduct drove the rivals to desperation. Finally Page invited Morgan to accompany him for a walk. Morgan consented, and as soon as they were outside Page proposed that as each was armed they take each other by the left hand and shoot out the quarrel, the survivor to take the girl. Morgan agreed, and then, with left hands clasped, they drew their pistols and began firing. Each man fired five shots. When friends arrived Morgan was found dead and Page was dying.

DECLARES 6,000 WERE MURDERED.

The London Daily News says that Dr. Nicholaides, the official representative of the Cretan reform committee, who is now in Berlin, has issued a report on the Cretan massacre. Dr. Nicolaides asserts that the statements in this report can be confirmed by the consuls at Canea, and that the diplomatic representatives there will verify the assertion that 6,000 Christians have been murdered in Crete by Turks, often with revolting brutality.

Weekly Trade Review.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says: Political events of the week had no definite influence upon business prospects, for the phenomenal variations in sterling exchange and the beginning of imports of gold may be fairly attributed to the accumulating excess of merchandise exports over imports, exports from New York for the last two weeks having been 20 per cent. larger and imports here 21 per cent. smaller than last year. The rapid movement of grain and the unusually early marketing of cotton tend strongly to aid the banking syndicate which has undertaken to regulate foreign wheat over 1 cent during the week, corn a small fraction and cotton ⅝ cents, the principal motive power being reports of injury to growing crops. The unfavorable accounts respecting wheat are in some measure discredited by the continued heavy movement from the farms, Western receipts having been 10,697,137 bushels in the two weeks, against 6,759,363 bushels last year. With prices 8 cents lower than last year, such a movement cannot be interpreted as a sign of deficient yield. The Atlantic exports for the same weeks have been (flour included) 4,892,660 bushels, against 2,995,233 bushels last year, and while the increase is encouraging, it scarcely corresponds with current accounts of deficient yield in some foreign countries. The movement of corn continued heavy, although the price is still so low that one wonders why the product is put into corn instead of into hogs. The iron and steel manufacture is the only continued depression to report, and Bessemer pig has sold at $10.40 at Pittsburg, while Southern iron is offered at prices equivalent to $10 at New York, and nearly all finished products are being sold below the current quotations. There is rapid curtailment of production, the Illinois Steel Company having only seven of its seventeen furnaces at work, but in spite of this the supply of finished products appear to greatly exceed the demand.

Visited by a Crank.

A crank visited the residence of Cornelius Vanderbilt at Newport, R. I., and insisted on seeing Miss Vanberdilt, but was prevented by the butler. He said he had a plan for elevating the masses and all Miss Vanderbilt had to do was to give $1,000,000.

Victoria Arraigned.

The Kilkenny Journal, commenting upon the release of John Daly, the Irish political prisoner, from Portland prison, says: "The red Indians' torture of captives is humane when compared with the torture inflicted upon Daly in England." Continuing, the periodical mentioned refers to the allusion in the Queen's speech to the outrages in Armenia, and adds: "The Queen can find nearer home more vent for her hypocritical tears than among the Kurds," and asks: "Where's the Queen's clemency? Daly was released a few months before death would have released him and three others have been driven mad by tortures in penal servitude, compared with which Siberian exile is drawing-room imprisonment. This is the way Victoria wishes to signalize her record reign. She would not have been a loss to the victims of her brutal rule in Ireland if she had gone years ago. At the present moment she knows that she is standing in the way of those who wish to see her in her royal sepulcher and she has neither the grace to abdicate nor the humanity to open her prisons to Irishmen until they precede her on the voyage from which none return."

THOUSANDS ARE HOMELESS.

Relief for Stricken Ontonagon Being Hurried Forward.

Telegraphic communication had not been established with Ontonagon, Mich., Tuesday, and details of the fire which wiped that village out of existence were still lacking. Advices received by railway officials from stations within a few miles of Ontonagon were to the effect that only fifteen houses were left standing, but that no lives were lost. Fifteen hundred people are homeless at Rockland and other places in the vicinity of Ontonagon to which the inhabitants fled. The Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway had a car loaded with provisions at Milwaukee Wednesday morning and succeeded in running it over the warped rails to within a quarter of a mile of Ontonagon. The people are without shelter and would be in a pitiful plight in case of storm. Other cars of provisions were sent from Marinette, Green Bay and Milwaukee.

HILTON, HUGHES & CO. ASSIGN.

Great House Founded by A. T. Stewart Closes its Doors.

The New York dry goods firm of Hilton Hughes & Co. (once A. T. Stewart & Co.) have made an assignment to G. M. Wright. The assignment is without preferences. Elihu Root is attorney for the assignee. Among the banks in Wall street the failure of Hilton, Hughes & Co. is regarded as due to a gradual decline in business. The firm's credit for the last five years has been badly impaired, and it is understood that very little if any of the firm's single-name paper is out. The firm has been taking stock for several weeks past and recently was understood to have received about $750,000, which has been used in reducing the liabilities of the firm. The assignment was made by Albert G. Hilton, who comprises the firm. No statement has as yet been made as to the amount of liabilities and assets.

SILVER LEADERS CONFER.

Washington Will Look After the East and South and Chicago the West.

In Washington there was a meeting Tuesday night of the Executive Committee of the National Silver party at its headquarters, Vice Chairman Stevens, of Colorado, presiding. The committee decided that headquarters should be established in Washington and Chicago, both to be of equal importance. The Washington branch is to look after the East and South and the Chicago headquarters the inter-West.

GOLD MEN SPEAK.

Leaders in Iowa, Michigan, and Wisconsin Choose Delegates to Indianapolis.

Gold Democrats of Michigan met in State convention Wednesday at Grand Rapids, and decided to make a fight all along the line. Their State ticket is headed by Rufus T. Sprague, and a full delegation to Indianapolis chosen. In Iowa and Wisconsin no action was taken further than to declare against 16 to 1, select Indianapolis delegates and choose presidential electors.

Vencedor Turns Wrong Boat.

At Toledo, Ohio, the Canadian yacht the Canada defeated the challenger the Vencedor Wednesday and won the international race. The defender won by twenty-six seconds, time allowance, after as pretty a yacht race as was ever sailed on Lake Erie. It was a hard race for the Yankee yacht to lose, for the Vencedor had the race well won had she not lost three minutes in a vain effort to select the right stake boat.

Sunk by an Iceberg.

Capt. Burnside and twenty-two of the crew of the British tramp steamer Moldavia were picked up at sea in three open boats by the Anchor Line steamer Circassia, which arrived from Glasgow Tuesday. The Moldavia struck an iceberg during a fog and sank, giving the crew barely time to provision the lifeboats and lower them.

IT IS GONE FOREVER.

ONTONAGON WIPED OFF THE EARTH BY FIRE.

Glory of the Little Town Made Famous by Matches Is No More—Eighteen Hundred People Are Homeless, Impoverished, and Hungry.

Sawdust Town's Fate.

Another sawdust town has gone where so many have preceded it. Ontonagon, Mich., the oldest settlement on Lake Superior between the Soo and Bayfield, is no more, and its 1,800 homeless and hungry inhabitants are depending for food and shelter upon charity.

The story of its destruction in a few brief hours Tuesday afternoon is pitifully like the stories from a score of other lumbering towns in the Northwest which have been wiped from the earth in a few hours. Smoldering forest fires had burned in the swamp south of the Diamond Match Company's big mills for two weeks. At noon the wind freshened. At 1 the first mill caught fire. The automatic sprinklers deluged the whole interior with water, but the gale from the southwest drove the flames into the lumber along the river, where 60,000,000 feet of pine lumber was stacked in piles as high as a three-story building. Then it was a race for life. So quickly did the flames spread that the firemen were compelled to abandon their apparatus and flee for their lives. Blazing shingles and firebrands were carried hundreds of feet high by the irresistible current of hot air, to fall a quarter and half mile farther on and fire the buildings that they alighted upon. The people fled in all directions, and families were divided. By 5 o'clock the destruction of the village was complete, and not a soul remained in the town proper. Prior to abandoning his post at the railway depot the operator had sent out an appeal for aid. The relief train managed to get within about a mile of the doomed village. The train picked up all the people found beside the track and took them to Rockland, where they were made as comfortable for the night as the limited accommodations of the hamlet would permit.

HARBOR AT ONTONAGON.

As soon as daylight came the train crew of the St. Paul Railway, aided by citizens, loaded into a box car all the clothing and provisions that could be collected and set out for Ontonagon.

The work of relief was begun immediately. Word was received by the railway officials at Haughton that cars of supplies including tents and lumber for temporary sheds were already on the way from Marinette, Green Bay, Iron Mountain and places farther south.

There is little hope that the town will ever recover from the blow. The timber in that vicinity has been gone for years and the Diamond Match Company can save thousands of dollars by building its mills closer to its untouched forests. The copper mines having been worked out or abandoned years ago, the match company's plant was the mainstay.

The village will, of course, be rebuilt, but there is little likelihood of its being so large or so prosperous. It is well known that many families who had accumulated wealth in former years remained only because of old associations, and now that these are removed they will doubtless move away.

The total loss will reach $2,500,000, of which the Diamond Match Company sustains $1,000,000, with insurance of about half. Besides the Diamond Match Company other large losers are:

COURTHOUSE AT ONTONAGON.

Sargent, Gennings & Gilkey, of Oconto, lumber	$100,000
Louis Reidinger, of Marquette, lumber on dock	25,000
James Norton, of Ewing, lumber on dock	10,000
D. J. Norton, of Ewing, lumber on dock	10,000
William McFarlan, of Bruce's Crossing, lumber on dock	10,000
Lowe House, four-story hotel	10,000
Centennial Hotel	5,000
Paul House	5,000
John Hawley's big store, total loss	20,000
Bank of Ontonagon	5,000
Postoffice, court house, jail and school house	50,000
James Mercer's large warehouse, dock and coal sheds	50,000
Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul depot.
Government breakwater and waterworks.
Five hundred residences.

The county buildings, business blocks, merchandise stocks and dwellings were fairly covered by insurance. The heaviest loser among insurance companies is the Milwaukee Mechanics, which held about $35,000 worth of risks on village property and lumber.

Other heavy underwriters were: London and Liverpool and Globe, $10,000; Hartford, $9,000; Northern, $7,000; New York Underwriters, Phoenix of Hartford, Phenix of Brooklyn, Hanover and Hartford, each $5,000; Columbia Fire Lloyds, $7,500; Phoenix of London, $4,000.

Only two Michigan companies—the Detroit Fire and Marine and Grand Rapids—were involved. Each lost $2,000.

Among the losses was the superb coin collection of Manager Comstock of the Diamond Match Company. This collection was valued at nearly $30,000 and was insured for $20,000. It was regarded as one of the finest in this country.

It is announced that Capt. Gen. Weyler intends to issue a decree ordering the suspension of the gathering of the coffee crop. It is said that the reason for this step is that he has ascertained that several planters have arranged to pay taxes to the insurgents in return for permission to gather in the coffee.

About forty persons were poisoned with ice cream made in a rusty can at the home of Mrs. Edward Clark at Muncie, Ind. Willie Bloom, Anna Halliday, Mattie Langdon, Linnie Bowers, Eliza Miller, Pearl Hill, Maude Clark and Mr. and Mrs. Marshal Conner suffered the most, but are now out of danger.

CANADA WINS BY A FLUKE.

Mistake of Captain Barber Costs the Vencedor the Race.

The Canadian yacht the Canada defeated the challenger the Vencedor and won the international race. The defender won by twenty-six seconds, time allowance, after as pretty a yacht race as was ever sailed on Lake Erie. It was a hard race for the Yankee yacht to lose, for she had the race well won, but lost in a most unfortunate way. The course was five miles straight away to leeward and return and repeat. On the second turn Capt. Barber could not make out the the stake boat. There were three boats in line flying the American flag and there was nothing to indicate which of these was the real boat. The stake boat had two masts. Anchored below her was another small boat with two masts and an American flag flying from one of them. The Vencedor was headed properly for the right boat, but as she neared it her captain seemed perplexed and undecided what to do. Finally he pulled away for the furthermost one and rounded them all. His error cost his boat the race, for he lost nearly three minutes hunting for the right boat. Had he turned the bont properly the Vencedor would have won the race by about one and a half minutes instend of losing it by a little less than half a minute.

CHALLENGE YACHT VENCEDOR.

INTERNATIONAL YACHT RACE TROPHY.

MET IN MILWAUKEE.

National Convention of Republican League Clubs.

The convention of the National League of Republican Clubs met in Exposition Hall, Milwaukee. The attendance of delegates at the opening session was not so large as expected, but more came in during the day and evening. There was also a slight feeling of disappointment at the absence of certain speakers of national reputation, whom the National Committee had declined to send, on the ground that they were needed elsewhere. Ex-Senator Ingalls of Kansas was asked to deliver an address, but could not attend, nor was Senator Allison able to be present. The big hall in the Exposition Building was handsomely decorated with the national colors. The background was yellow, while peering out from among the flags were large designs of twenty-dollar gold pieces. There were only a few spectators in the galleries. The delegates were slow in arriving, and it was an hour after the appointed time when they began to take their seats.

Gen. E. A. McAlpin, president of the National League, called the convention to order, and Rev. W. A. Huntsberger invoked the divine blessing upon the assemblage. President McAlpin presented Mayor Rauscheuberger, who, in behalf of the city, welcomed the visiting delegates. Mayor Rauscheuberger said it was with pleasure that, as chief executive of the city, he extended a cordial welcome to Milwaukee. He extended the fredom of the city, and said that he had the latch key with him. He paid a high compliment to the large delegations present, and said that the organization showed that there was great activity all along the line.

When he finished the delegates cheered him and gave a rousing cheer for the city of Milwaukee. S. A. Harper, of Madison, Wis., president of the Wisconsin State League, welcomed the delegates on behalf of the Wisconsin Republicans. Irving M. Bean, chairman of the Milwaukee Reception Committee, responded on behalf of the citizens' committee.

The Secretary read dispatches from McKinley, Hobart, Depew and others regretting their inability to attend the convention.

PYTHIANS INCREASE.

Members of the Order at Cleveland, Hear Pleasing News.

The reports of the officers of the Grand Lodge, Knights of Pythias, as read before the encampment in Cleveland show a remarkable growth and development of the order. That of Supreme Chancellor Walter B. Richie was listened to with especial interest and was praised for its patriotic utterances on the Americanism of the order.

The report of R. L. C. White, supreme keeper of records and seals, showed that in 1864 there were three subordinate lodges and seventy-eight members, and in 1895 6,494 subordinate lodges, and 464,539 members. States in which the greatest gains were made were: Ohio, 3,959; Illinois, 3,317; Iowa, 2,265; Massachusetts, 1,919; Missouri, 1,612; North Carolina, 1,404; Maine, 1,314; Texas, 1,219. There was a loss of 2,087 in Kansas and 4,166 in Pennsylvania. There were gains in thirty-eight States and territories and a loss in sixteen.

The report of Maj. Gen. James R. Carnahan, commanding the uniform rank, showed that the revenues had been sufficient to meet all the expenses of the management.

Notes of Current Events.

A spider caused the death of Miss Cora Sanfelise, the daughter of Frank R. Sanfelise, who lives at Brooklyn. She died just a week after being inoculated with the poison of the insect.

At the Novelty Theater in London, in a stabbing scene the spring dagger made for stage uses failed to act and an actor was stabbed to the heart so that he died in a few minutes.

George Stanley, Conway Fleming, John Fleming, Arthur Brown and Charles Fleming, all residents of Lamonte, Pettis County, Mo., were poisoned by drinking water from a jug that had contained embalming fluid.

M'KINLEY'S LETTER.

FORMALLY ACCEPTS THE PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATION.

In His Very Long Letter He Criticises the Democratic Doctrine and Its Supporters—Gold Standard, Protection and Reciprocity Supported.

Written by McKinley.

Wm. McKinley's letter formally accepting the Republican presidential nomination has been issued. Republicans consider it a strong presentation of the principal issues of the pending campaign. It is devoted principally to the discussion of what he considers the three great questions of the campaign—protection, money, and reciprocity.

About one-third of the message is devoted to a consideration of the free silver question. He announces that he is unalterably opposed to any such policy. He says that the Republican position in the pending campaign is no "new departure," but that its proposition to maintain gold and silver coin at a parity has been the unbroken policy of the Republican party since 1878. He says it has inaugurated no new policy. It will, he declares, keep in circulation and as good as gold all of the silver and paper money which are now included in the currency of the country. It will maintain their parity. It will preserve their equality in the future as it has always done in the past. It will not consent to put the United States on a silver basis, which would inevitably follow independent free coinage. It will oppose the expulsion of gold from our circulation.

He says that the farmers and laborers would suffer most by the adoption of free silver. The silver question, in his judgment, is not the only issue affecting our money in the pending contest. He considers the declaration of the Democratic and People's parties for unlimited, irredeemable paper money as the most serious menace to our financial standing and credit that could be conceived. He condemns as "in the highest degree reprehensible" all efforts to array "class against class, the classes against the masses, section against section, labor against capital, the poor against the rich, or interest against interest."

He considers protection as an issue of supreme importance, and observes that while "the peril of free silver is a menace to be feared, we are already experiencing the effect of partial free trade." The one he would avert, the other correct. He recommends the immediate restoration by Congress of the reciprocity sections of the tariff law of 1890, with such amendments, if any, as time and experience sanction as wise and proper. The underlying principle of this legislation, he declares, should be strictly observed. This, he explains, is to "afford new markets for our surplus agricultural and manufactured products without loss to the American laborer of a single day's work that he might otherwise procure."

He discusses foreign immigration briefly. He commends legislation that will prevent the coming here of all who "make war upon our institutions," or profit by public disquiet and turmoil. He favors liberal pensions for the soldiers and sailors, and expresses gratification that old sectional issues are passing away.

VILAS AND BRAGG RULE.

Wisconsin Gold Convention Chooses Presidential Electors.

The Wisconsin gold Democracy was marshaled in the Pabst Theater at Milwaukee Wednesday under the joint leadership of Gen. Bragg and Senator William F. Vilas and the State organization of the "National Democratic Party" came into being.

Senator Vilas was chosen permanent chairman and delivered a carefully prepared address. Gen. Bragg also made an address, speaking without notes. He was vitriolic and peppery, and he was enthusiastically cheered. A solid gold platform was adopted. A full electoral ticket was chosen, an organization arranged for and all the business transacted necessary to insure a gold campaign in the State. Not more than 200 delegates were present from outside the city.

The convention was called to order shortly before noon, with 229 delegates in the theater. John H. Brennan, of Stevens Point, was the temporary chairman. No State ticket was nominated by the convention. The question of following the lead of Illinois and going into the fight from national ticket down was the only thing that came near causing a brush in the proceedings, as there were several present who wanted things arranged that way. A resolution was finally adopted leaving the matter of a State ticket to the discretion of the State Central Committee, which was given power either to name candidates and have them duly placed on the official ballot or to call a State nominating convention. The platform is rather long, but it deals with just one subject, and that is the financial issue. There is no mention of any other issue being present in the campaign.

CROP OUTLOOK IN EUROPE.

Prospect as Revealed in Government Reports Is Generally Favorable.

Generally favorable prospects for the crops of Europe are announced in the report of the European agent of the Agricultural Department. The report follows by countries:

Great Britain—Harvest is half over and it is believed wheat will closely approximate thirty-two bushels per acre, the highest average for many years. The total harvest will approximate 56,000,000 bushels, the area being only about 1,750,000 acres. The barley crop will be very good and is generally in good condition. Oats are expected to fall considerably below the average. The hay crop is seriously deficient. A continuance of the summer drought through the autumn will result in such scarcity of feeding stuffs as to lessen materially the value and number of cattle and sheep.

France—Winter wheat is looking well or very well in nearly all the departments where autumn-sown cereals are grown. Spring wheat is reported as good or very good. The harvest will be completed early and it is confidently expected that it will somewhat exceed that of last year, 340,000,000 bushels.

SPRAGUE FOR GOVERNOR.

Michigan Gold Democrats Make a Fight All Along the Line.

The gold standard Democratic State convention was held at Lansing Wednesday. There were about 150 delegates present when the convention was called to order by Thomas A. Wilson, of Jackson, the provisional chairman. The resolutions read in part: "We renounce the late Chicago convention as undemocratic in its representation, arbitrary and dishonorable in its methods, revolutionary in its platform and populistic in its nominations. We refuse to support its candidates or obey its mandates."

The present national administration is indorsed, the maintenance of the existing gold standard demanded and the free and unlimited coinage of silver opposed.

A full State ticket was nominated as follows:

Governor, Rufus T. Sprague, Greenville; Lieutenant Governor, A. B. Eldridge, Marquette; Secretary of State, S. L. Boyce, St. Clair; State Treasurer, Wilder D. Stevens, Kent; Auditor General, Irving W. Conkey, Berrien; Land Commissioner, A. M. Tinker, Jackson; Attorney General, Cyrus E. Lathrop, Detroit; Superintendent of Public Instruction, William Heap, Muskegon; Member of State Board of Education, John S. Taggert, Shiawassee.

The following were named as presidential electors:

At large, John S. Farr of Kent and Samuel T. Douglas of Wayne; First District, R. W. Gillette, Wayne; Second District, John Strong, Monroe; Third District, H. H. Hamilton, Eaton; Fourth District, John E. Barnes, Berrien; Fifth District, John W. Champion, Kent; Sixth District, Joseph T. Titus, Livingstone; Seventh District, W. T. Mitchell, St. Clair; Eighth District, John Moore, Saginaw; Ninth District, Alex. D. Mann, Muskegon; Tenth District, C. J. Palethorp, Wayne; Eleventh District, Edward W. Hudnut, Mecosta; Twelfth District, A. L. Sawyer, Menominee.

MICHIGAN SILVER MEN

Name Charles R. Sligh as the Head of Their State Ticket.

The Michigan silver men in convention at Bay City late Wednesday night agreed upon a State ticket. It was announced in the Democratic convention shortly after 11 o'clock that Justin R. Whiting had withdrawn from the field in favor of Charles R. Sligh of Grand Rapids for Governor, who was thereupon nominated by acclamation. Mr. Whiting was then nominated by acclamation for Lieutenant Governor. For Treasurer, Otto E. Karste of Ironwood, a Democrat, was named; for Auditor General, Arthur E. Cole of Livingstone County, a Populist; for Attorney General, Alfred J. Murphy of Detroit, a Democrat; for Land Commissioner, Martin G. Loenecker of Jackson, a Populist; Superintendent of Public Instruction, David E. Haskins of Millsdale, a Democrat.

When the Democrats met Wednesday morning the Conference Committee reported that after a lengthy discussion of the claims of all parties to the agreement it had decided to recommend a union ticket, and first, that the ticket be headed by the word Democratic. Not a voice was raised in opposition to the report. The Conference Committee was instructed to report the action of the convention to the other parties, and the gathering then took a recess.

When the afternoon session opened the sergeant-at-arms announced that the People's party and Union Silver conventions were at the door. An order to admit them was given and as they entered the spacious auditorium the new arrivals were given an enthusiastic greeting. T. E. Tarsney, Dr. Nichols and Mr. Wilson of Jackson were appointed a committee on permanent organization and order of business. Nominating and seconding speeches were limited to five minutes. Mr. Watkins of Ionia nominated Mr. Sligh, who was seconded by a half-dozen speakers. When the Sixth District was reached T. R. Shields of Livingstone nominated Solomon R. Bignall of Fowlerville. O'Brien J. Atkinson of Port Huron nominated Mr. Whiting. Then followed a score of supports for both Mr. Whiting and Mr. Sligh, Mr. Bignall's name being withdrawn in favor of Mr. Whiting.

IOWA GOLD DEMOCRATS

Select Their Electoral Ticket and Cheer Cleveland's Name.

With cheers for President Cleveland, gold and "true democracy," as they see it, the Iowa gold Democratic State convention was called to order at the Des Moines Grand Opera House Wednesday morning by Henry Vollmer, State chairman. More than 700 delegates were present, ninety-three counties being represented. Each wore a badge of gold silk, and each mounted his chair and cheered with a will. Temporary Chairman Markley's speech, in which he arraigned Gen. Weaver, Tillman, Gov. Altgeld and the silver Democracy generally. He applauded the administration of Grover Cleveland, and declared that democracy, as an organization, had fallen into the hands of the enemy.

The electors at large, W. W. Witmer of Des Moines and J. E. E. Markley of Mason City, and all of the district electors were nominated with the understanding that they would enter upon a vigorous canvass which should last until election day. The platform was written by Henry Vollmer of Davenport and W. W. Baldwin of Burlington. It recognizes the value of party organization, but denies the right of the majority of a convention to adopt a platform at variance with the cardinal principles of the party. It denounces various undemocratic planks in the Chicago platform and adheres to the time-honored principles of the Democratic party. The convention gave no attention to State issues, and the fight this fall will be along national lines.

Opposed at Any Ratio.

The gold Democrats of Rhode Island Wednesday repudiated the Chicago convention and passed this resolution:

"We insist upon the maintenance of the present gold standard of money and oppose the free and independent coinage of silver at any ratio."

THE SILENT SHORE.

CHAPTER XXII.

The Schwarzweiss Pass, leading from the southeast of Switzerland to Italy, is one well known to mountaineers, because of the rapid manner in which they can cross from one country to another, and also because of the magnificent views that it presents to the traveler.

Moreover, it offers to them a choice either of making a passage over the snow-clad mountains that rise above it, and across the great Schwarzweiss glacier, or of keeping to the path that, while rising to the height at some places of 10,000 feet, is, except at the summit, perfectly passable in good weather.

It is true that he who, even while on the path, should turn giddy, or walk carelessly, would risk his life, for though above him only are the vast white "horns" and "Piz," below him there are still the ravines through which run the boiling torrents known respectively as the "Schwarz" and the "Weiss" rivers—rivers that carry with them huge boulder stones and pine trees wrenched from their roots; dry slopes that fall hundreds of feet down into the valley below; and also the Klein (or little) Schwarzweiss glacier, a name so given it, not because of its smallness—for it is two miles long, and in one place half a mile across—but to distinguish it from the Gross-Schwarzweiss glacier that hangs above on the other side of the pass.

It is a lonely and grim road, a road in which no bird is heard or seen from the time the village of St. Christoph is left behind on the Swiss side until the village of Santa Madre is reached on the Italian side; a road that winds at first, and at last, through fir-woods and pine trees, but that in the middle is nothing but a path, cut in some parts and blasted in others, along the granite sides of the rocks, and hanging in many places above the valley far below.

Patches of snow and pieces of rock that have fallen from above, alone relieve the view on the side of the path; on the opposite side of the ravine is nothing but a huge wall of granite that holds no snow, so slippery is it; but above which hangs, white and gray, like the face of a corpse, the glacier from which the pass derives its name.

A lonely and grim road even in the daytime, when a few rays of sunshine manage to penetrate it at midday, when occasionally a party of tourists may be met with, and when sometimes the voice of a goatherd calling his flocks rises from the valley below; but loneller and more grim, and more black and impenetrable at night, and rarely or ever then trod by human foot.

For he who should attempt the passage of the Schwarzweiss Pass at night, unless there were a brilliant moon to light him through its most dangerous parts, would take his life in his own hands.

Yet, on an August night of the year in which this tale is told, and when there was a moon that, being near its full, consequently rose late and shone till nearly daylight, a man was making his way across this pass to Italy.

Midnight was close at hand as, with weary steps, he descended a rough-hewn path in the rock—a path which, for safety, had a rude handrail of iron attached to the side from which it was cut—and reached a small plateau, the size, perhaps, of an ordinary room, and from which again the path went on.

From this plateau shelved down, for a hundred feet or more, an almost perpendicular moraine, or glacier bed, and at the foot of this lay the Klein-Schwarzweiss, with its crevasses glistening in the moonlight; for the moon had topped even the great mountains above by now, and lighted up the pass.

It was evidently considered a dangerous part of the route, since, between the edge of the plateau and the side of the moraine a wooden railing had been erected, consisting of two short, upright posts and a long cross one.

As the man reached this plateau, holding to the rail with one hand, while with the other he used his alpenstock as a walking stick, he perceived a stone—it may have been placed there for the purpose—large enough for a seat; and taking off his knapsack wearily, he sat down upon it.

"Time presses," he muttered to himself, "yet I must rest. Otherwise I shall not be at Santa Madre by eight o'clock to-morrow. I can go no farther without a rest."

There is an indefinite feeling of awfulness in being alone at night amongst the mountains, in knowing and feeling that for miles around there is no other creature in these vast, cold solitudes but ourselves; and this man had that feeling now.

"How still—how awful this pass is!" he said to himself, "with no sound but the creaking of that glacier below—with no human being here but me. Yet, I should be glad I am alone."

At this moment a few stones in the moraine slipped and fell into the glacier, and the man started at the distinct sound they made in that wilderness of silence.

Then, as he sat there gazing up at the moon and the snow above him, he continued his meditations.

"It is best," he thought, "that the poor old mother did not know when I said 'good-bye' to her this afternoon, and she bade me come back soon, that I should never come back, that I had a farther destination than Italy before me; best that my father did not know that we should never meet again. Never, never! Ah, it is a long word."

"Yet it must be done," he went on. "If I want to drag this miserable life out, I must do it elsewhere than in England. That sleuth-hound will surely find me there; it is possible that he will even track me to the antipodes. Yet, if I were sure that he is lying about—having seen my face before, I would go back and brave him. Where did he ever see it?—where?—where? To my knowledge I have never seen him."

He rose and walked to the railing above the moraine, and looked down at the glacier, and listened to the cracking made by the seracs.

"I might make an end of it now," he thought. "If I threw myself down there, it would be looked upon as an ordinary Alpine accident. But no! that is the coward's resource. I have blasted my life forever by one foul deed; let me endure it as a reparation for my crime. But what is my future to be? Am I to live a miserable existence for years in some distant country, frightened at every strange face, dreading to read every newspaper that reaches me for fear that I shall see myself denounced in it, and never knowing a moment's peace or tranquility? Ah, Gervase! I wonder what you would say if you knew that, for your sake, I have sacrificed every hope of happiness in this world and all my chances of salvation in the next."

He went back to the big stone after uttering these thoughts and sat down wearily upon it.

"If I could know that that Spaniard was baffled at last and had lost all track of me, I could make my arrangements more calmly for leaving Europe, might even look forward to returning to England some day, and spending my life there while expiating my crime. But, while I know nothing, I must go on and on till at last I reach some place where I may feel safe."

He looked at his watch as he spoke to himself, and saw that the night was passing.

"Another five minutes' rest," he said, "and I will start again across the pass."

As he sat there, taking those last five minutes of rest, it seemed to him that there was some other slight sound breaking the stillness of the night, something else besides the occasional cracking noise made by the glacier below and the subdued roar of the torrents in the valley.

A light, regular sound, that nowhere else but in a solitude like this would, perhaps, be heard, but that here was perfectly distinct.

It came nearer and nearer, and once, as it approached, some small stones were dislodged and rattled down from above, and fell with a plunge on to the glacier below; and then, as it came closer, he knew that it was made by the footsteps of a man.

And, looking up, he saw a human figure descending the path to the plateau by which he had come, and standing out clearly defined against the moonlight.

"It is some guide going home," he said to himself, "or starting out upon an early ascent. How firmly he descends the path."

The man advanced, and he watched him curiously, noticing the easy way in which he came down the rough-hewn steps, scarcely touching the hand-rail or using the heavy pointed stick he carried in place of the usual alpen-stock.

And he noticed that, besides his knapsack, he carried the heavy coil of rope that guides use in their ascents.

At last the newcomer reached the plateau, and, as he took the last two or three steps that led on to it, he saw that there was another man upon it, and stopped.

Stopped to gaze for one moment at the previous occupant, and then to advance toward him and to stand towering above him as he sat upon the boulder stone.

"You are Philip Smerdon," he said in a voice that sounded deep and hollow in the other's ear.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Utterly astonished, and with another feeling that was not all astonishment, Smerdon rose and stood before him and said:

"I do not know of what importance my name can be to you."

"Your name is of no importance, but you are of the greatest to me. When I tell you my name you will understand why. It is Miguel Guffanta."

"Guffanta!" Smerdon exclaimed. "Guffanta!"

"Yes! the friend of Walter Cundall."

"What do you want with me?" the other asked, but as he asked he knew the answer that would come from the man before him.

"But one thing now, though ten minutes ago I wanted more. I wanted to see, then, if the man whom I sought for in London and at Occleve Chase, whom I have followed from place to place till I have found him here, was the same man I saw stab my friend to death in——"

"You saw it?"

"Yes, I saw it. And you are the man who did it!"

"It is false!"

"It is true! Do you dare to tell me I lie, you, a—— Bah, why should I cross words with a murderer—a thief!"

"I am no thief!" Smerdon said, his anger rising at this opprobrious term, even as he felt his guilt proclaimed.

"You are! You stole his watch and money because you thought to make his murder appear a common one. And so it was! You slew him because you feared he would dispossess your master of what he unrighteously held, because you thought that you would lose your place."

"Again I say it is false! I had no thought of self! I killed him—yes, I!—because I loved my friend, my master as you term him, because he threatened to come between him and the woman he loved. Had I known of Walter Cundall's noble nature, as I knew it afterwards, no power on earth could have induced me to do such a deed."

"It is infamy for such as you to speak of his nobility—but enough! Are you armed to-night, as you were on that night?"

"I have no arms about me. Why do you ask?"

"To tell you that no arms can avail you now. You must come with me."

"To where?"

"To the village prison at St. Christoph. There I will leave you until you can be taken to England."

"Senor Guffanta," he said, "you are very big and strong—it may well be stronger than I am. But you overrate your strength strangely if you think that any power you posses can make me go with you. I am a murderer—heaven help and pardon me! It is probable I shall be a double one before this night is over."

"You threaten me—you! You defy me!" Guffanta exclaimed, while his dark eyes gleamed ominously.

"Yes, I defy you! If my sin is to be punished, it shall not be by you, at least. Here, in this lonely place where for miles no other human creature is near, I defy you to do your worst. We are man to man; do you think I fear you?"

In a moment Guffanta had sprung at him, had seized him by the throat, and with the other arm had encircled his body.

"So be it," he hissed in Smerdon's ear; "it suits me better than a prolonged punishment of your crime would do."

For a moment they struggled locked together, and in that moment Smerdon knew that he was doomed; that he was about to expiate his crime.

The long, sinewy hand of the Spaniard that was round his throat was choking him; his own blows fell upon the other's body harmlessly.

And he was being dragged towards the edge of the moraine, already his back was against the wooden railing that alone stood between the plateau and destruction.

He could, even at this moment, hear it creaking with his weight; it would break in another instant!

"Will you yield, assassin, villain?" Guffanta muttered.

"Never! Do your worst!"

He felt one hand tighten round his throat more strongly, he felt the other arm of the Spaniard driving him back; in that moment of supreme agony he heard the breaking of the railing and felt it give under him, and then Guffanta's hands had loosed him, and, striking the moraine with his head, he fell down and down, till he lay a senseless mass upon the white bosom of the glacier.

And Guffanta, standing above, with his head bared to the stars and to the waning moon, exclaimed, as he lifted his hand to the heavens:

"Walter, you are avenged!"

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

A DEPARTMENT FOR LITTLE BOYS AND GIRLS.

Something that Will Interest the Juvenile Members of Every Household—Quaint Actions and Bright Sayings of Many Cute and Cunning Children.

A Narrow Escape.

Nan, Angeline, and Mary lay mournful in a row;
Despair and grief were in their hearts, and on their faces, woe;
For Saturday was moving day, and mother dear had said,
As she kissed them all and hugged them all and tucked them all in bed,

"That heap of broken dollies we'll leave upon the floor;
I'm sure you'll never miss them—I'll find you plenty more.
They're old and torn and battered up—not one of them's complete—
I think I wouldn't take them to the house on Pleasant street."

Nan, Angeline, and Mary went sadly off to sleep,
In happy dreams they soon forgot that melancholy heap;
But when at last in slumber sound their tired mother lay,
She heard a voice, a gentle voice, that sweetly seemed to say:

"Those children you're so fond of—'tis odd you cannot see,
They're really very far from what a perfect child should be!
There's many a pretty child in town in case you feel inclined
To choose some pretty new ones, and let these stay behind.

"For Mary broke her arm, you know, and Nan turns in her toes,
And Angeline has freckles on her funny little nose;
They bump their heads and tear their frocks—it's hard to keep them neat—
I think I wouldn't take them to the house on Pleasant street!"

That loving little mother, oh! she started up in fright,
She ran to all her babies, and she kissed and hugged them tight.
She put her little bonnet on, and bought a pot of glue,
And when they moved to Pleasant street, the dollies all went too!

Children's Room at the Library.

Detroit's public library was the first among the many public libraries of the country to establish a "children's room," where the young readers could have their own books by themselves, in a department of their own. Other public libraries have already adopted the idea, which originated with Librarian Utley, and it will not be long before the "children's room" will be a popular innovation in libraries everywhere.—Detroit Free Press.

Juvenile Reasoning.

A little boy, paying his first visit to the country, was taken to the barn to see some chickens just hatched. This was his first introduction to the process of incubation, and he looked with open eyes and mouth at the fluffy chicks while the hatching process was being explained to him, after which his mother was startled by his rushing into the house exclaiming, "Oh, mamma, mamma, come out to the barn quick! Uncle John has just set a hen and hatched out ten little Henrys!"

A Fiery Washtub.

Did you ever hear of a stove being used as a washtub? A clever inventor has made towels out of asbestos, or mineral wool. They are thick and soft and white, and when they have been used until they are soiled and greasy all that is necessary is to throw them into the stove where a hot fire is burning, and in a few moments all the dirt has burned away and they are nice and clean. As you probably know, asbestos is mined just like iron. Its fibers are then beaten out and woven into cloth.

Move Your Eyes If You Can.

A curious and slightly known fact is, that it is impossible to move the eye while looking at its reflection in the mirror. The eye is the most movable part of the face, yet if you try to look at it and move it a thousandth part of an inch you will be balked in your purpose. The moment you endeavor to perceive the motion of the eye it becomes fixed. That is why a person's expression as he sees himself in the glass is entirely different from the one by which his friends recognize him, says the Atlanta Constitution.

Waiting for My Boy.

A few years ago, in one of the growing cities of New York State, there was a home into which the great sorrow of a father's death had entered. The sons, of whom there were several, were of a nervous temperament, full of animation, and exposed to many temptations which endanger the young in large cities.

The widowed mother realized the vast importance of her responsibility, and many a time did she look upward toward the Heavenly Father for divine aid in the guidance of her fatherless boys. She made it a rule never to retire for rest at night until all her sons were at home. But as the boys grew older this became a severe tax both on her time and health, often keeping the faithful mother watching until the midnight hour.

One of the boys displayed a talent for music, and became a skillful violinist. He drifted among the wrong class of people, and was soon at balls and parties that seldom dispersed until the early hours of day. Upon one occasion it was nearly 7 o'clock in the morning before he went to his home. Entering the house and opening the door of the sitting room, he saw a sight that can never be effaced from his memory.

In the old rocking chair sat his aged mother fast asleep, but evidently she had been weeping. Her frilled cap, as white as the snow, covered her gray hair; the knitting had fallen from her hands, while the tallow from the candle had run over the candlestick and down her dress.

Going up to her, the young man exclaimed:

"Why, mother! what are you doing here?" His voice startled her, and upon the question being repeated she attempted to rise, and piteously, but oh! so tenderly, looking up into his face, said, "I am waiting for my boy."

The sad look and those words, so expressive of that long night's anxiety, quite overcame the lad, and throwing his arms around her, he said, "Dear mother, you shall never wait again like this for me." That resolution has never been broken. But since then that mother has passed into the world beyond, where she still watches and waits, but not in sorrow for her boy.—Union Mission Lantern.

What Was She Doing?

Mr. and Mrs. Baxter were going out together the other evening, and he said as he sat with his cigar in his mouth reading the evening paper:

"Now, we mustn't be late, Maria. I'm about ready, but will you just brush my hat a little?"

"Yes, dear—as soon as I get the baby to sleep."

"All right. And will you just sponge that spot out of my vest—something I got on it at dinner."

"Yes, after I attend to the baby."

"And will you lay out a clean collar for me and my evening necktie?"

"Yes, dear," and when she brings the collar he says:

"Just fasten it on in the back, please. I want to finish this account of that murder trial. Put on my tie for me too, won't you?"

When this is done he says: "Just put a clean handkerchief in the pocket of my coat, won't you? And, oh, I forgot, but I twisted a button off my overcoat to-day. The button is in one of the pockets. Can't you sew it on before we go? It will take but a minute."

It takes nearer ten minutes for her to find needle, thread, scissors and the missing button, and while she is sewing on the button he says:

"Won't you please put the sleeve buttons in my clean cuffs?"

"I can't find but one button, Henry."

"Oh, well, things are always getting lost in this house. Look around and I guess you'll find it."

She is down on her knees, peering under the various articles of furniture for the button, when he says:

"Oh, here it is. I forgot and slipped it into my pocket. Now, if you'll just—Great Scott! look at that clock, Maria! We ought to have been off five minutes ago! What have you been doing? How many hours does it take a woman to dress? Here I'm all ready, and you haven't even got your dress on. What have you been doing the last half hour? I'd like to know that! It's always the way when we try to go anywhere! I'm always ready hours before you begin!"—Detroit Free Press.

A Colossal Bribe.

It is an 8-year-old boy who succeeds to the earldom of Macclesfield, created at the beginning of the last century in behalf of Thomas Parker. Parker was deprived of his office of Lord Chancellor of the realm in consequence of a discovery that he had accepted a bribe to the amount of $200,000. The little earl is the grandson of the late peer, and lost his father in a very sudden manner about a year ago. Viscount Parker had gone to bed one evening in perfect health and was found by his wife dead on the following morning, with his head upon her shoulder. The estates to which he succeeds comprise Shirbourne castle, a very ancient and picturesque pile, which figures in history as having been surrendered to King Stephen's daughter, the German Empress Maud, as far back as the year 1041. It underwent a siege at the time of Cromwell, and was stormed by Gen. Lord Fairfax, of the parliamentary army, whose descendant, the present Lord Fairfax, is now in this country, engaged in medical practice in Maryland. The castle is surrounded by a grand moat, and there is a tradition that when the great Lisbon earthquake took place in 1721 the ordinarily calm waters of the moat sunk and rose in the most unaccountable manner, before rushing with such force against the walls of the castle as to send the spray almost as high as the battlements.—Chicago Record.

By Any Other Name.

Oberlin, the French philanthropist, was once traveling in the depth of winter amongst the mountains of Alsace. The cold was intense, the snow lay thickly upon the ground, and ere the half of his journey was over he felt himself yielding to fatigue and sleep. He knew if he gave way to sleep he would wake no more; but in spite of this knowledge, desire for sleep overcame him and he lost consciousness. When he came to again, a wagoner in a blue blouse was standing over him, urging him to take wine and food. By and by his strength revived, he was able to walk to the wagon, and was soon driven to the nearest village. His rescuer refused money, saying it was his duty to assist one in distress. Oberlin begged to know his name, that he might remember him in his prayers. "I see," replied the wagoner; "you are a preacher. Tell me the name of the Good Samaritan." "I cannot," answered Oberlin, "for it is not recorded." "Ah, well," said the wagoner, "when you can tell me his name, I will then tell you mine." And so he went away.

Military Pride.

Looked at from a soldierly point of view, the following little anecdote of the battle of Alma is worth quoting from Sir John Adye's "Recollections of a Military Life." "The battle ended about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, the headquarters camp being pitched near the river; and Lord Raglan then went in search of his orderly officer, Lieut. Tom Leslie, and, with the help of some Guardsmen, with a stretcher, brought him to his tent. Lord Raglan asked me," writes Sir John, "if I knew Tom's mother; and on my replying in the negative, he said, 'A charming woman. I must write to her. How proud she will be to hear that he has a bullet in his shoulder!'"

THE VATICAN MUSEUM.

One Can There See Rome at Its Best and at Its Worst.

The walk through the museum is certainly one of the most wonderful in the world. There are more masterpieces, perhaps, in Florence; possibly objects of greater value may be accumulated in the British Museum, though that is doubtful; but nowhere in the world are statues and antiquities so well arranged as in the Vatican, and perhaps the orderly beauty of arrangement has as much to do as anything else with the charm that pervades the whole. One is brought into direct communication with Rome at its best, brilliant with the last reflections of Hellenic light; and again one is brought into contact with Rome at its worst, and beyond its worst, in its decay and destruction. Amid the ruin, too, there is the visible sign of a new growth in the beginnings of Christianity, from which a new power, a new history, a new literature, and a new art were to spring up and blossom, and in the rude sculpture of the Shepherd, the Lamb and the Fishes, lies the origin of Michael Angelo's "Moses" and "Pieta."

There, too, one may read, as in a book, the whole history of death in Rome, graven in the long lines of ancient inscriptions, the tale of death when there was no hope, and its story when hope had begun in the belief in the resurrection of the dead. There the sadness of the sorrowing Roman contrasts with the gentle hopefulness of the bereaved Christian, and the sentiment and sentimentality of mankind during the greatest of the world's developments are told in the very words which men and women dictated to the stonecutter. To those who can read the inscriptions the impression of direct communication with antiquity is very strong. For those who cannot there is still a special charm in the long succession of corridors, in the occasional glimpses of the gardens, in the cool magnificence of the decorations, as well as in the statues and fragments which line the endless straight walls.

One returns at last to the halls, one lingers here and there, to look again at something one has liked, and in the end one goes out, remembering the place rather than the objects it contains, and desiring to return again for the sake of the whole sensation one has had rather than for any defined purpose.—Century.

Where's Crusoe's Isle?

We have had, in the last five years, a recrudescence of Columbus, of Napoleon and things Napoleonic; now, it appears, there may be an infection of Robinson Crusoe. A learned society in London, England, has come to the conclusion that readers of De Foe's charming fiction have all along been misled as to the island on which their hero was landed when he experienced shipwreck.

It has been hitherto assumed, much to De Foe's discredit, that he stole (or "appropriated") the story of one Alexander Selkirk, who passed several years on the Island of Juan Fernandez, in the Pacific Ocean. But members of this society declare they have discovered that the novelist did not steal his narrative at all; and moreover, that the island where the original Robinson was wrecked lies, not in the Pacific, but in the Atlantic. They are going to send out an expedition next winter, as soon as the sickly season closes, to ascertain beyond all peradventure just where this island is located.

In the interest of all true narratives (of fiction) and for the benefit of all lovers of Crusoe, it is to be hoped that their mission will be a success.

The true island, they say, is situated somewhere off the north coast of South America, not far distant from the mouth of the Orinoco; for Crusoe himself says in his journal that the last recorded observation, taken just before his shipwreck, was in latitude 11 degrees north, between the islands of Barbadoes and Trinidad.—New York Press.

Taught by a President's Sister.

Senator Tillman was at one time taught by Miss Annie Arthur, a sister of President Arthur, who was governess in the Tillman family when the Senator was a boy. During President Arthur's administration this lady revisited the scenes of her early days in South Carolina and spent several weeks with the family of then "Farmer" Tillman at the old estate.

This estate lies at about thirteen miles distance from Augusta, Ga. Here Senator Tillman was born fifty years ago, and has lived ever since, excepting two years spent in Florida. His father was a slave and land owner, and the family lived in the lap of luxury before the war. After the war, however, the family, like the majority of others in the South, became "land poor." The great-great-grandfather of the Senator came from near Strasburg, Germany, and so was German. The name was then spelled "Tilghman." There is furniture still in the family that came from Strasburg. The Senator's great-grandmother was Irish. He has also Huguenot blood in his veins.—Springfield Republican.

Corn Started in Flower Pots.

Isaac S. Long, who owns 600 acres of farming land in the Lebanon valley, has made an experiment in corn-planting which will undoubtedly prove of interest to agriculturists at large. In planting corn he is very precise, putting exactly the same number of stalks in each row, and for years he had the finest corn fields in the Lebanon valley. Some months ago he came to the conclusion that if he planted corn in flower pots and raised the plants in that way there would be no delay in their growth in case any of the corn had to be replanted in his fields. So he purchased 5,000 flower pots, placed them in his garden this spring, and planted a seed of corn in each. Several weeks ago, when it became necessary to replant the corn fields, a hole was dug wherever there was a stalk missing, and one of the tender corn stalks was transplanted from the pots. The potted stalks grew well, and are just as large as those planted in the field in the spring. This experiment was made on Mr. Long's farm, near Myerstown, Pa. Mr. Long is a member of a firm of commission merchants in New York City, and divides his time between the management of his business there and his fine farms.—Philadelphia Ledger.

BOOK REVIEWS

The Earl of Lovelace, a direct descendant of the poet, is to edit a new edition of Byron.

Henry Norman's long-heralded volume, "The Near East," is not to appear until autumn.

Sweden appears to be a good country for newspaper men. The Storthing has voted two State grants of 1,000 kroner each to enable young journalists to get foreign experience, and all editors are hereafter to have free use of the railways when traveling in the exercise of their profession.

R. D. Blackmore, whose novel, "Dariel," is expected to commence in Blackwood's this autumn, is one of the oldest living English novelists, having just passed his 71st birthday. George Macdonald is one year in advance of this, but his nearest younger rival in this matter is George Meredith, who confesses to 68 years.

William Le Queux bitterly resents the action of an American publishing house in pirating one of his early novels, "Guilty Bonds," and announcing it as the latest work of the author. This sort of robbery not only injures the author but also prejudices the sale of his really latest work by an honest American publisher, who respects the laws of copyright and of decency.

Kenneth Grahame, the clever delineator of child life and character, says he left Scotland at the age of 7, carrying with him a kilt and a Scotch accent. "The latter," he adds, "I imprudently took with me to boarding school, but after being severely kicked for it, I concluded it was a luxury I could not afford to keep up. The kilt I cherished secretly for years, till I discovered that my legs came to far through for English prejudices."

The inveterate insularity of that literary thunderer, the London Athenaeum, has never been more strikingly exhibited than in its review of F. Hopkinson Smith's "Tom Grogan," which it exhausts the dictionary of academic billingsgate in denouncing as vacuous rubbish. The London Literary World, on the other hand, calls it a strong and original story, entertaining from cover to cover—a verdict which American readers confirm by their purchases. Last month "Tom Grogan" was second only to Richard Harding Davis' "Cinderella" in the number of copies sold in Chicago.

Served Him Right.

The other evening four ladies going eastwards entered a 'bus near the bank, says London Answers. There were only three vacant seats. A gentleman instantly rose to allow the fourth lady to sit down. An elderly over-dressed man sitting close to the door began to complain that the 'bus was overcrowded, and pestered the conductor with ill-natured remarks.

The conductor, having collected all fares from those inside, went to look after outside passengers. Seeing this, the grumbler got out of the 'bus to obtain the services of a policeman, for the purpose of removing the thirteenth passenger. Presently he returned with an officer of the law. The constable carefully counted the passengers and declined to interfere, as the number was not in excess of that allowed.

The man, hearing this, became very angry, and getting again into the 'bus, called out:

"I'm the thirteenth, constable; I'm the thirteenth."

"In that case," quietly replied the constable, "you must get out, as the 'bus is licensed to carry only twelve inside." And, in spite of the man's remonstrances, he was removed, amid roars of laughter from the other passengers.

Servant Girls in Australia.

Many good things come out of Australia besides systems of voting and kangaroo skins for boots. All servant girls will certainly think so if the plans now being laid in that country are brought to success and hence to adoption by the world. It is proposed to call domestic servants "household employes," and to arrange for their having meals in the dining-room by themselves at regulated hours. No more talk of "the girl" will be allowed, and Bridget will no longer "snatch a bite and a sup" from the pan in which the eggs for master's breakfast are poaching. Better still, "household employes" will not be at the beck and call of the mistress. There will two shifts of employes, one to work from 6 a. m. until 2 p. m., the other from 2 p. m. to 8 or 9 p. m. It would seem as if both Biddy and "Missus" would enjoy such an arrangement, if only some plan could be made for curing the morning girl of what would probably become a propensity on her part to save up all the disagreeable work for the afternoon girl to do. Girls will be girls, even when they are "household employes."—Boston Home Journal.

Working in High Buildings.

Some of the men who spend half a dozen hours or more a day in rooms on top floors of sky-scraping office buildings are talking about a new ailment that they allege is the result of doing business so far from the ground.

"I never was troubled with headaches or dizziness," said one of these men, "until I moved into my present offices. Then I noticed that about an hour after I had settled down to business my head would feel heavy, and at times I would be slightly dizzy. These feelings, on certain days, increased the longer I remained in my office, and half an hour after I had descended to the street they would disappear. Several other men who are on the top floors of big office buildings have complained of similar symptoms, and on comparison we have come to the conclusion that they were produced by the same causes. Possibly the fact that the air is slightly more rarified at the altitude at which we work may account for this feeling of uneasiness."—New York Sun.

The Toothpick Industry.

In Harbor Springs, Mich., there is a large and flourishing wood toothpick industry. White birch is exclusively used in the manufacture of the toothpicks, and about 7,500,000 are turned out daily.

"UNCLE DAVE'S" SCHEME.

He Enjoys a Siesta While Neighbors Dig His Well.

Blairstown, N. J., has a clever old farmer, who has evidently read the story of how Tom Sawyer cajoled his friends into whitewashing the front fence for him. Blairstown's man of genius, however, made his friends dig his well gratis. His name is David Hennion, or "Uncle Dave," as he is familiarly known.

A few days ago he decided to sink a well, and, determining not to have further trouble in obtaining water, made the well large and deep. He bought a windmill and then started to excavate. He went down and down, although the job was a slow and tedious one. Finally he struck a splendid stream of water and prepared to line the well with stone. He carried a large quantity of stone to the well side and dumped it. The weight of the stones or something else caused the sides of the well to cave in.

"Uncle Dave" viewed the collapse with chagrin and disappointment, for it meant much more hard work on his part to clear the well again. Finally he struck an idea and proceeded to carry it into effect. He obtained his coat and placed it near the excavation, then he placed his hat on top of his coat. This done he sought the hay loft of his barn and secreted himself. The neighbors had taken considerable interest in the well, and it was not long before one of them came along to see how the work was progressing. He saw the half-filled well and the hat and coat close by. Believing the walls had fallen in on him, he rushed to the house and asked where "Uncle Dave" was. Mrs. Hennion had not seen him and a search of the farm did not bring him to light. The conclusion was he was buried under the earth and stones in the well.

The neighbors for a great distance around were alarmed, and within a couple of hours twenty men were at work digging to clear the well and rescue the body of their neighbor.

By morning they had the well cleared to the bottom, but found no trace of "Uncle Dave." The men, when they found they had nothing for their pains except a cleared well, went away weary and startled. When the coast was clear, "Uncle Dave" emerged from his hiding place to find his wife sitting beside the well hole, dazed and mystified. She was as much puzzled as any one. "Uncle Dave's" first greeting to her was: "Golly, Sally, I'm most starved; get me something to eat; but didn't those fellows work hard?"

How Bicycle Tubing Is Made.

Solid draw steel tubes have been made for years for boilers and general use, but the great demand arose when the safety type of bicycle came into vogue, the diamond frame requiring the use of a greater length of tubing and necessitating that this should be as light as possible. There are variations in the methods for producing a cold drawn steel tube, but the principle of all is practically the same. Only a very high class of steel is suitable for the purpose, and that hitherto employed has been chiefly Swedish charcoal steel, containing a certain proportion of carbon. The steel is taken in the form of a billet two feet long and about six inches in diameter. A hole is bored through the center and it is heated, annealed and rolled into the form of a tube about 1¾ inches in diameter, with walls of about 10 gauge. This is then drawn through a die and over a mandrel by means of a draw-bench, until about 800 feet long, beautifully smooth and bright both within and without. This is not drawn at once, but in a number of operations, and between each of them the metal has to be repickled and reannealed to prevent the crystallization to which the drawing process tends to give rise. The first drawings of the tube leave it about three-eighths of an inch thick, but this gradually decreases until a tube is produced which is of the thickness of stout writing paper. This is the class of tube employed in bicycles and that imparts a strength and rigidity out of all proportion to its lightness.—Boston Transcript.

Telling Time in India.

The Hindus look upon our clocks as ornaments and curiosities. Many are found in India, but they are not employed as timepieces. They are the luxury of the rich. The old-fashioned way of telling the hour of the day in India by calculating the number of bamboo lengths the sun has traveled above the horizon is entirely satisfactory to the natives. In the country police stations in India, where the European division of the hours is observed, time is measured by placing in a tub of water a copper pot in which a small hole has been bored. It is supposed that it will take one hour for the water to leak into the pot so as to fill it and sink it. When the policeman sees that the pot has disappeared he strikes the hour on a bell-like gong. If he is smoking or dozing the copper pot may have disappeared several minutes before he discovers the fact, but the hour is when he strikes the gong.

Vitality of Toads.

We have all read of the discovery of toads "in solid strata of stone," where food and air sufficient to sustain life could not have possibly been had. We have not only read these stories, but the majority of us have put them down as Mulhatton yarns, which were written by someone who did not expect them to be believed. Now comes the scientist M. Victor Lagroche, who says that he has imprisoned toads in masses of mixed plaster of Paris and found them "well, fat and hearty after a lapse of eight years.' He argues that if such creatures can live for years without air or light they "can continue to live on indefinitely."

Rival Artists.

Joseph Gillott, the manufacturer of pens, once visited the artist, Turner. "I have come to swap some of my pictures for yours," said he.

"What do you mean?" exclaimed Turner. "You do not paint!"

"No, I do not, but I draw," said Gillott, unfolding a roll of Bank of England notes, "and here are some of my pictures."

THE AUBURN COURIER

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana office as second-class matter.

THURSDAY,....SEPTEMBER 3, 1896

Political Notice.

Democratic Commiteemen are notified that George Lanning, Auburn is ready to supply them with speakers at any date or place they may desire Dont be backward in calling on him as he has plenty of them and good ones at his command.

Fusion.

There is not often a political year when parties would unite or "fuse" as it is called, on a common principle, though after differing in many other points. This year, the fusion is mainly between democrats, populists and free silver republicans, who all earnestly believe in the free coinage of silver. And they all realize that it is only by uniting that anything can be accomplished. And it is these fusion tickets that will carry the most states. We note a few.

IN INDIANA.

Democratic and populist state committee have met and agreed to divide the electoral ticket between the two parties so that only one set would go on the printed ballots, but the names decided on by either party have not been announced. In consideration for this divide, the populists will probably not run any state ticket nor legislative. This will give the state to the democrats and to the Bryan and Sewall electors, as well as members of congress and the legislature.

IN ILLINOIS.

The democrats have twenty candidates on the electoral ticket and the populists four. They are all for Bryan but the populists may vote for Watson for vice-president. There is a good chance they will carry the state.

MICHIGAN.

The Democrats have united with the populists and free silver republicans on an electoral ticket, made up of ten democrats, three populists and one silverite. All are for both Bryan and Sewall.

NEBRVSKA.

A letter to the COURIER from a man in Nebraska, who is well posted says there is complete and satisfactory fusion all over the state between the democrats and populists. He says those eastern people who call Bryan a boy, will change their minds if they get into a discussion with him, and will conclude he is 75 feet high and 700 years old before they are done with him. The fusion will probably be completed this week, by a division of electors, state officers and congressmen. But all will be for Bryan and Sewall.

IOWA.

The electoral, state and congressional nominations are divided between the democrats, populists and free silver republicans and the fusion is completed.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

The populists have no ticket but will act with the democrats, insuring a heavy democratic majority.

OREGON.

The arrangement so far talked np is to give the silver republicans one elector, and the rest be divided between the democrats and populists. Not decided yet.

OHIO.

The populists get five on the electoral ticket and the democrats eighteen, with a division of the state ticket. But as there are many gold democrats in the state, there is little hope for success.

TEXAS.

The populists, republicans and gold democrats have fused, and will likely make the state close. It may go for McKinley.

IDAHO.

The democrats, populists and free silver men have united fully on one electoral ticket, and will carry the state.

OTHERS.

There is more or less talk of fusion in many other states, but up to this date, but little has been alone.

Gold Democrats

At the meeting of the gold democrats in Fort Wayne yesterday there were present some forty or fifty, two, Chas. McClellan and S. D. Hanna being delegates from Auburn. The meeting was called to order by Perry Randall and they proceeded to elect delegates to the national convention at Indianapolis. E. H. McDonald of Ft. Wayne and Judge McClellan of this place were chosen, with P. S. O'Rourke and S. M. Foster as alternates. J. F. W. Myers. was made presidential elector, for this district and A. E. Hoffman contingent elector.

A Little Off.

McKinley said the other day that he feared free trade, and also feared there would be no reciprocity unless the people elected him president. But people may rest assured that McKinley will never help make another top-notch tariff law. It defeated his party within a month after it went into effect, and snowed them under again two years later. Those who look for better times under a McKinley tariff may as well give it up. It will never be reenacted, and cannot possibly bring good times if it is.

Three Pleas.

Several republican papers have got hold of a neat phrase "money protection, and reciprocity." It is strange they never can understand that reciprocity is free trade with the particular country that accepts it, and is as far as it applies, much nearer the unlimited free trade than any plan the democrats ever had. But they look on the democratic plan as purely bad. As for "protection," that policy has already proved disastrous and unpopular. But when it comes to "money," all are in favor of more money and it will be "good money" in spite of the silly scare crow of "cheap money" they are trying to scare voters with.

At Waterloo

James H. Teller was greeted by a good audience at Waterloo this afternoon, and delivered one of the best speeches we have heard this campaign. There were full as many present as at Mr. Robinson's speech in Auburn. After Mr. Teller concluded, Mr. Shontz, of LaOtto, made the formal announcement to Mr. Robinson, that the populists had endorsed him. H. D. Boozer introduced Mr. Teller, in a neat little speech, and there was great enthusiasm shown. There was to be a speech that evening, but we have no report of it.

Highly Esteemed

In a recent letter to the manufacturers Mr. W. F. Benjamin, editor of the Spectator, Rushford, N. Y., says: 'It may be a pleasure to you to know the high esteem in which Chamberlain's medicines are held by the people of your own state, where they must be best known. An aunt of mine, who resides at Dexter, Iowa, was about to visit me a few years since, and before leaving home wrote me, asking if they were sold here, stating if they were not she would bring a quantity with her, as she did not like to be without them." The medicines referred to are Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, famous for its cures of colds and croup; Chamberlain's Pain Balm for rheumatism, lame back, pains in the side and chest, and chamberlains, Colic, Cholera and Diarrœha Remedy for bowel complaints. These medicines have been in constant use in Iowa for almost a quarter of a century. The people have learned that they are articles of great worth and merit, and unequaled by any other. THE FARMER.

As He Was and as He Is.

HOW HE IS ROBBED.

Stupendous Decline in Farm Products.

A PERNICIOUS FINANCIAL POLICY.

Evils of Contraction—The Concentration of Wealth—Rise and Fall of Gold—The Effect of the Free Coinage of Silver. What Gold Monometallism Stands For. An Honest Payment of Debts—The Help Offered by the Ballot.

By JOHN H. BEADLE.

The accompanying illustrations are from New York newspapers of recent date. They are published to show the popular idea of the personality of the American farmer in the gold stronghold of the country.

I will invite your attention to two pictures.

Twenty-five years ago the American farmer was a king. Poets sang about him. Orators praised him.

Edward Everett held up an ear of golden corn before his audience and eulogized the grower in such eloquent words that storms of applause shook the hall. We loved to read and quote the old stirring lines telling how "the embattled farmers stood" at Lexington and Concord, and it was universally agreed that they were the salvation of the land. They were the hardy yeomanry, the free and independent workers, and even such foreign visitors as De Tocqueville went out of their way to describe the happy condition of the landowning farmer in this country.

Truth.

Washington gloried in being a farmer. Our greatest statesmen passed their vacations on their own farms, among their horses and cattle. They delighted in rural pleasure, they worked and personally directed their employees, and from a season of this kind of life and close contact with the people they came back to Washington wonderfully freshened by having lived close to the heart of nature, more American and more democratic and more in love with their own land. Their names were coupled in the popular lore with the names of their estates. It was Washington of Mount Vernon, Jefferson of Monticello, Clay of Ashland, Webster of Marshfield and Jackson of The Hermitage.

N. Y. World.

Where is that farmer now?

The Vilification.

He is the gibe and the sneer of every clown who can get on the city stage in spotted breeches. He is the butt of vile jokes in the city saloons. He shares with the mule and the mother-in-law, the plantation darky, the rusty stovepipe and the tramp as the stock material for cheap paragraphers. He is brought on the stage of every low theater as the stock victim of all the stale old practical jokes. "Hayseed" and "Wayback" and "Jay" are his regular titles, even among cultivated people, and in the slums "farmer" is one of the vile epithets which provoke a fight. He figures in the illustrated comics as a half savage. Look at the pictures of the typical farmer in the New York papers and see something like this: A long, lean, lank monstrosity, with bones showing horribly prominent through his clothes, a face like a pointed Gothic front, a nose that describes an irregular arc from the lowest point between the eyes down over the mouth, and on his chin what is supposed to be a whisker, but looks like a wisp of weather beaten hay.

Puck.

N. Y. Press.

This is the farmer of today as the people of the cities are taught to consider him.

And why this change? It is because he has been systematically robbed for 80 years and has submitted to the robbery and voted for more of it. He is despised because he has consented to his own degradation.

Puck.

His very virtues have been made the means of his degradation. The farmers, and especially the men who till their own acres, are our great conservative class. They dread revolution. They love their country with an impassioned ardor born of close contact with the soil—an ardor of patriotism which some writers have thought impossible in men reared in cities. Naturally, therefore, the northern farmers stood by their government in the great civil war. The Republican party was in power and acquired an immense prestige by the successful issue of the conflict. Naturally again, therefore, the great majority of farmers credited all good things to that party. They could not believe that the party of Lincoln and Sumner and other friends of humanity would do aught of injustice.

N. Y. Herald.

The Robbery.

The war tariff was prolonged in time of peace despite solemn promises to the contrary. Empires of land and hundreds of millions of money were given to great corporations. Credit Mobilier, the Indian ring, the whisky ring, the star route ring and scores of others followed in rapid succession, but though the farmers murmured they did not revolt. They overlooked the fact that parties are composed of men and therefore subject to change. They were slow to believe that the grand old party could contain schemers.

Puck.

On top of all the rest comes a financial system which has added 80 per cent to the value of money and depreciated the price of the farmer's products in like proportion, and at the least signs of a revolt on his part he is denounced as a traitor. It is assumed as a matter of course that Wall street should strive for a rise in stocks, that manufacturers should lobby for a higher tariff, that the Pacific Railway companies should evade payment of their debt. All other men can vote and lobby to raise the price of what they own and be good Christians, but at the bare hint that the farmer is to vote for restoring silver to get a little better price for his crops, the country rings with frantic cries of rage and denunciation. The farmer has submitted too long. He has lost the respect of those who have robbed him, and it is much to be feared that in great part he has lost his own self respect. His poverty has become is reproach.

N. Y. World.

The Affliction of Abundance.

"But there has been so great an increase in production. Now, why should the farmer complain that prices go down as the size of the crop goes up? And how can you prove that elevating the condition of the farmer will elevate that of other laborers?"

Life.

It is impossible to raise the agricultural class of any country without raising all the other classes who depend on labor for a living. It is not absolutely impossible to press down the agricultural laborer and yet leave the city laborer unaffected, but it is very unlikely. The farmer, however, does not complain that he gets less per pound or per bushel when the crop is big than when it is small. What he does complain of, and what he has a right to complain of, is that prices have fallen so fast that he gets very much less money for a very big crop than he formerly got for a small one. Thus the bounties of Providence are turned into curses and he is coming to look upon abundance as an affliction. Let me call your attention to some figures. In 1881 the farmers produced 416,481,000 bushels of oats and received therefor $193,198,970; in 1883 they produced 571,302,400 bushels and received for it $187,040,264; in 1889 they produced 751,515,000 bushels and received $171,781,008, and so on down, the amount received for it fell, till 1895, when they produced 824,443,537 bushels of oats and received therefor $163,655,068. And the population has increased 70 per cent. In 1870 we produced 1,094,225,000 bushels of corn, worth $601,839,030; in 1893 1,619,496,131 bushels, worth $591,625,627, and in 1895 2,151,138,580 bushels, worth $567,509,106. Overproduction, you say, but divide the bushels by the population each year, and you will find that per capita the increase was quite small, and in such years as 1890 and 1894, when the crop was very short and the number of bushels per capita very much less than the average of sever l years ago, the price per bushel was still low.

Judge.

The Decline In Value.

Since 1870 the production of hay in the United States has increased in almost exact parallelism with the increase of population, and yet the average value per ton has declined from $13.82 to $8.35. This last is the farm price as reported by the agricultural department for July; nevertheless, on the day I write this hay is selling in New York city by retail at $18 per ton, which is a beautiful illustration of how your city consumer "profits" by the loss of the farmer. Wheat is supposed to be an exception because our rivals in other countries are producing so much, and yet the figures are significant. In 1881, for instance, 383 280,090 bushels were valued at $456,880,427, and in 1895, 467,102,947 bushels at $237,938,998. And yet the world has not as much wheat as it wants, and not much more than half as much as it would buy if it had the wherewith. There is evidently something the matter that cannot be explained by that handy phrase "overproduction."

Judge.

N. Y. Press.

Has there been any overproduction of fat hogs? Every farmer knows that there is just now a great scarcity, almost a hog famine. And yet fat hogs in the central region of the west are selling at 3 cents a pound or less, when but a few years ago they sold at 6. Has there been any overproduction in milk cows? The census will show you they are less numerous in proportion to population than they were, and yet the price is going steadily downward. Is there an overproduction of land? In two-thirds of the country east of Illinois you can today buy thousands of splendid farms at what they were assessed for in 1870, and in some of the finest parts of New York state they will sell you good farms at the assessment of 1860. Farmers do not complain at reduced prices for products of which there has been a very great production, but the figures show a decline, though not so great, in articles of which there is an admitted scarcity and that the general decline is very much greater than can be accounted for by the amount produced.

THE NEW UNCLE SAM.
N. Y. Herald.

Starving Midst Plenty.

But as a matter of fact is there any overproduction? Have mankind more breadstuffs than they can eat and more cotton than they can wear and more pork and beef than they want or more shoes than they need? Why, the largest wheat crop ever raised only amounted to three bushels per capita for the people of the civilized world, and, deducting seed and that made into whisky, little over two bushels per capita was left for bread. It has been repeatedly shown that the world's cotton crop is still 8,000,000 bales short of the world's consumptive demand. Our own agricul-

Obituary

The subject of this sketch, Mrs. Roxana (Coburn) Ackley, was born in Bezetta, Trumbull County, Ohio, August 8, 1829, died August 6, 1896, aged 69 years, 11 months and 28 days. She removed with her parents, Asher and Hannah Coburn, to this county sixty years ago, and bravely withstood all the privations and hardships of pioneer life.

She was married to Harvey Ackley April 30, 1848. To this union were born five children, one son and four daughters, the oldest daughter Esther, died February 1885; the husband having died in the service of his country, April 19, 1863, left the entire care of a family small children to her, and nobly did she carry out his last request "Take good care of the children." Through the never tiring efforts of a devoted mother she left a family who are known for their intelligence and industry, and rank among the most enterprising people where they reside. Mother Ackley was never idle and her time was always spent in some useful employment, with the cares at home, visiting the sick or helping the needy. And in the language of another, "If every one to whom she had shown a kindness were present to bestow a tribute she would sleep to-day beneath a wilderness of flowers." Her funeral was attended by a large concourse of friends who feel the loss of so worthy a citizen. The text used for the occasion was of her own selection, Second Kings 20-1, "Set thine house in order for thou shalt die and not live" as her last exhortation to all the people. Her daily comfort was the Bible, and ever an earnest desire for the spread of the gospel. She had been a consistent member of the Christain church for more than fifty years.

Surprised Him.

Saturday John Steffen was of age, the lucky number of 21 having been rounded out for him. So about 125 of his friends marched in on him and gave him a surprise. They brought plenty of lunch, and had a right nice time which will leave a pleasant memory with all and especially with John himself.

Telephone News.

The Home Telephone Co. have completed their exchange in Fort Wayne as will be seen by the following report of the city council. Their toll lines are also nearly completed between Auburn and that city:

The Home Telephone company made application to the board of public works yesterday afternoon for the return of $2,000 which was deposited as a guarantee of the company's good faith. When the company received its franchise the board stipulated that the above named sum be deposited as a pledge that the lines should be in working order on or before August 29. The lines are now connected, and a large part of the system is in operation. The board consequently granted the permission, and a notice was ordered sent to the comptroller, asking for the refunding of the money.

Sherman In 1878.

It does the ordinary, man good to get a hit at John Sherman, the great overestimated. Now John is for a single gold standard, but in 1878, he sang a different song; read well the following letter that he sent to Hon. W. S. Grosbeck, a friend of his at Cincinnati.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, July 15, 1878

Dear Sir: To that part of your letter of the 12th inst., in which you ask my views of the matter confided in the monetary commission, I have some delicacy in replying very fully. During the monetary conference in Paris, when silver in our country was excluded from circulation by being undervalued, I was strongly in favor of the single standard of gold, and wrote a letter which you will find in the proceedings of that conference, stating briefly my view. At that time the wisest of us did not anticipate the sudden fall of silver or the rise of gold that has occurred. This uncertainty of the relation between the two metals is one of the chief arguments in favor of a monometallic system, but other arguments, showing the dangerous effect upon industry by dropping one of the precious metals from the standard of value, outweigh in my mind all theoretical objections to the bimetallic system. I am thoroughly convinced that if were possible for the leading commercial nations to fix by agreement an arbitrary relation between silver and gold, even though the market value might vary somewhat from time to time, it would be a measure of the greatest good to all nations. My earnest desire is that you may succeed in doing this.

You are so well informed upon this subject that it is not worth while for me to enlarge upon it. The statements and documents sent you by the director of the mint will give in authentic form most of the material facts which bear upon the question, and your own investigatoin on the silver commission will, I am quite sure, supply any deficiency.

Very truly yours,

JOHN SHERMAN,
Seretary.

—Simon McEnterfer, of Russel, Kansas, reached here Friday, and after remaining a day or two with the relatives, Mr. Pommert, Mr. Stroh, and Ex-Sheriff St. Clair, will go up to Waterloo for a visit with the old neighbors. He is looking well, but had the misfortune to lose his wife a few years ago. His sons are near him, two being engaged in the hardware business, and the rest in farming. Business is rather dull there, and politics quiet though the prevailing sentiment is for free silver.

For the evening service an excellent program has been prepared, consisting of songs and recitations. To these services we invite all to come.

—L. D. Robbins, on the old A. D. Goelschins place, south of town, is a hustler. He is putting in this season raising and selling small fruit and garden truck, and though prices low we judge he is doing much better than raising 60 cent wheat. Yesterday he gathered about twenty-five bushels of cucumbers suitable for pickling and these he finds sale for in town. Lately he made a specialty of wild plums which are always popular. He did not have them on his land, but paid his neighbors who did have, for the privilege of gathering them. People came to him at once, to get their supply of plums as soon as they knew he had them. A great deal depends on hustling and on knowing how and when to hustle.

A number of the farmers in this vicinity, are making a profitable crop of clover hay from seed sown last spring, a crop of wheat or rye having been cut from the same ground this year. Meadows in some instances have produced a very fair second crop.

Corn is being cut in many places. This is something rare for August. The writer recalls but a single former instance of corn being cut in August, and that was but a small piece on sand.

A very painful and fatal accident occurred on the south side last Thursday evening. Mrs. Collins aged about sixty-five years, but in full vigor of life for one so old, was in the act of filling the reservoir of a gasoline stove without extinguishing the jets, when the inflamable fluid ignited enveloping her in flames. She ran screaming from the house calling for help, but before it reached she sank to the ground, kind friends extinguished her burning clothes, carried her in the house, where she lingered in great agony until Saturday morning when death ended her suffering. Funeral services were held at her residence last Monday evening, conducted by Rev. Disbro, of the M. E. church of which she was life-long member. Her remains were taken to Peru for interment.

Foreign medical students in France have had their position defined by the minister of public instruction. For a long time Parisians have been spared the spectacle of persons throwing themselves from the tops of the high monuments, such as the Vendome and Bastile columns. Now this craze of suicides has started afresh. Some days ago a young woman mounted to the platform between the towers of Notre Dame, deliberately climbed the parapet and threw herself over. Death was instantaneous.

A Solomon has risen in judgment in Germany who declares that hotel proprietors are responsible for valuables stolen from their lodgers' rooms, in spite of the placards posted in the rooms disowning irresponsibility. Especially in the case of foreigners who cannot read German, the proprietor must take pains to specially inform them that he limits his liability. The decision was given in a Berlin court.

St. Petersburg had 1,135 arrests for drunkenness in one week recently and 1,000 arrests the week before. The persons arrested are locked up until they are sober again and are then sent home without further punishment unless they have disturbed the peace. Policemen in Paris now carry clubs, beautifully decorated. They are pure white, with yellow handles. Around the middle is painted a double blue ribbon, with the city arms at the point where the ends of the ribbon cross. Dave Potter, a Carson, Nev., veteran, committed suicide recently. He sat down, leaned up against a shed, laid his hat on one side, took off his boots, attached a string to a trigger of the musket and to one of his toes, placed the musket to his left breast, and by means of the string fired the fatal shot. When he took the musket it was loaded only with powder, and he had found a bit of brass, somewhat similar to a bicycle valve, weighing, perhaps, three-fourths of an ounce, and this he used in lieu of a bullet. This queer missile passed through his right lung, and coming out of his back, passed through the wall behind him and was found imbedded in the opposite wall.

Dr. P. Penta, an Italian criminologist, has discovered a new feature of criminal anthropology, which goes to confirm still farther the views of Prof. Lombrosso. Dr. Penta has studied the fingers and toes of 4,500 criminals, and finds a deficiency in the number as well as prehensile toes, marked by a wide space between the great toe and the second toe; also a webbed condition of the toes, an approximation to the toeless feet of some savages. He found the little toe rudimentary in many cases, showing a tendency toward the four-toed animal foot. The most common of all the abnormalities was the webbed condition of the toes. The criminal is truly a degenerate type.

GREAT MEN AS LOVERS.

Not a Whit Less Silly than Their Intellectual Inferiors.

When Hume fell in love his friends became aware of the act by his sporting a rose in his buttonhole.

Sheridan fell in love with Miss Linley and told the story in "The Rivals," which is a true account of his courtship.

When Farquhar was in love with Mrs. Oldfield, the actress, he told her, "My head and my heart are at fisticuffs about you."

Addison fell in love with the Countess Dowager of Warwick, but she did all the courting and gave him no trouble in that regard.

When Heine was in love, he was so jealous that he poisoned a parrot belonging to his mistress, for fear it would claim too much of her affection.

Byron was crazily jealous over every woman he ever loved. His loves were almost innumerable, and sooner or later he made every one miserable.

Thomas Moore was always in love. The names of no less than fourteen different ladies to whom he vowed eternal fidelity are to be found in his poems.

Waller wrote his most pleasing poetry of Saccharissa. After she rejected him, he, in a letter to a friend, said, "She is only a red-headed drab, anyhow."

Alfred de Musset fell in love with George Sand, and when she tired of him, as she did of every one else, he took to absinthe, and soon succeeded in drinking himself to death.

Israel Putnam, the sturdy American hero, fell in love with a young girl at a festival in which the paring of apples for drying was the leading employment. He tossed one long peeling over his shoulder, after the manner of the fortune-telling then common, and it fell in the shape of the initial of her name.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Making Money.

"Judge Denny of Lexington had a peculiar experience in Menifee County, Ky.," said a man from the Blue Grass State to a Star reporter. "The judge is one of the most eloquent stump speakers in the Republican party, and no one can make a stronger tariff argument. He was charging the administration with the financial depression in an outdoor meeting near Frenchburg. 'Who,' he asked, 'is making any money? If any one is I would like to see him.'

"After the meeting closed, a man came up, and, taking the judge to one side, said: 'I'm the man yo' axed for in meetin'. 'Course I couldn' make no sign in thet crowd, but I am ready to do business.'

"'You are what man?' asked the astonished orator.

"'The man that's makin' th' money out hyar you talked 'bout.'

"'Oh,' replied the judge. 'Well, what are you making?'

"'Nothin' but half dollars, but I hev a brother in Bell County who makes dollars, an' I reckon I could git yo' some. Yo' hev a pow'ful chance ter pass 'em goin' 'roun', but I never would a thought to spoke if yo' hadn't axed fer me.'

"The rather startled statesman could do nothing but make an appointment with the man, and then leave the county as quickly as possible."

ABOUT CHEAP DOLLARS.

We hear a good deal from the McKinleyites about the wickedness of paying debts in 53-cent dollars, as if the Democratic party really proposed doing such a thing. That the bullion in the present silver dollar is worth only about 53 cents measured in gold is true enough, but the whole silver contention is that the price has been forced down by the demonetization of the white metal by act of Congress in 1873. In that year the silver in a dollar was worth one dollar and three cents in gold, and it has gone down to its present value steadily since The hope and the expectation of the silver men is that when silver can be again taken to the mints and coined as it was before 1873 the price will again go up to near, if not quite, where it was.

Silver has been mined in greater abundance of late years than it was formerly, but in nothing like the quantity to justify the fall in its value as compared with gold. Twenty years ago there were produced in all the world 67,000,000 ounces of silver, while last year the total was about 160,000,000 ounces—considerably more than double. Gold production has increased also, however, from 5,000,000 ounces in 1876 to probably close on to 7,000,000 ounces this year. This is not so great an increase as the increase in silver production, but it is much more valuable and goes a greater way.

By ceasing to use silver on an equality with gold as money, this country alone has decreased the demand for silver by many millions of ounces which, of course, had to be sold in the world's markets and which forced the price down to its present figure. Let the demand be restored and the price is sure to go up again, and money will be more plentiful, for we shall not have to depend entirely on our gold supply to keep our credit good.

What Their Grievance Is.

The real reason for the Bourke Cockran meeting in New York City, for the Indianapolis gathering, and for the defection of a few newspapers from the Democratic party, may probably be recognized in the following resolutions, which are part of the Chicago platform upon which Mr. Bryan stands before the American people:

We are opposed to the policy and practice of surrendering to the holders of the obligations of the United States the option reserved by law to the Government of redeeming such obligations in either silver or gold coin.

We are opposed to the issuing of interest-bearing bonds of the United States in time of peace, and condemn the trafficking with banking syndicates which, in exchange for bonds, and at an enormous profit to themselves, supply the Federal Treasury with gold to maintain the policy of gold monometallism.

Congress alone has the power to coin and issue money, and President Jackson declared that this power could not be delegated to corporations or individuals. We therefore demand that the power to issue notes to circulate as money be taken from the national banks, and that all paper money shall be issued directly by the Treasury Department, be redeemable in coin and receivable for all debts, public and private.

This, it will be perceived, is pure Jeffersonian doctrine. It is a demand for the preservation of their rights to the people, instead of the wholesale bestowal of them upon money lenders and rag barons. It is a claim of government for the benefit of the masses, and a denial of the trafficking in legislation by which corporations and individuals grow rich, and the people grow poor. At the Madison Square Garden oration of Mr. Cockran there were two thousand bankers and money lenders present. They were there to join in the protest against purity in government, and against the rights of the people!—New York News.

Belongs to John G.

A correspondent asks the New York Recorder: "Who first invented the phrases, 'Crime of 1873' and 'Conspiracy against silver'?" We cannot say positively, but we think the honor belongs to Hon. John G. Carlisle, the present Secretary of the Treasury. Speaking in Congress in 1878, Mr. Carlisle denounced the movement to destroy silver money as "a conspiracy," and, further, as "the most gigantic crime of this or any other age." We know of no earlier use of these pet phrases of the free silver men, and believe Mr. Carlisle first put them in circulation.

American Silver in Canada.

The opponents of silver are making much of a recent order of the Montreal street railway companies against the acceptance of United States silver coins in the payment of fares. This order, however, cannot be construed as an attack upon the credit of this country. Our own railways and postoffices have long refused to receive Canadian silver coins, not because of any doubt that the Dominion Government would redeem them at their face value, but because of the trouble and expense attendant upon sending them home for redemption. So with the Montreal railways. A large amount of United States coin is taken into Canada by tourists, and the reason above given sufficiently accounts for the recent order.—Youngstown Vindicator.

Silence Is Golden.

It is announced by Mr. Hanna that Major McKinley will not speak again during this campaign. The gentleman shows good judgment. In the speech which he recently made he passed over the subject of silver and devoted himself to the tariff—as to which he observed that were it amended so as to accord more closely with the McKinley act, it would raise the price of all commodities. This is the cold idea that a true American, if he put his soul in the work, can lift himself up by the waistband of his breeches. No wonder Mr. Hanna put a seal on the Major's mouth.

In order to conciliate the manufacturers, whose contributions to the campaign fund are essential, a plank was put in the platform at St. Louis indorsing protection. But practical politicians knew that this was merely pro forma. It would be impossible to-day to get an audience to listen to a speech in favor of Republican protection. That gabble has had its day. Time was when it helped to carry elections, but that time has passed. Every intelligent American now understands that the revision of the tariff is a scientific question to be effected according to the rules of economical science, without regard to the exigencies of party.

When Congress has the leisure and is in the humor to recast the tariff in a shape which shall be a finality and shall impart stability to trade, the subject will be intrusted to a committee embracing members of all parties, distinguished for their familiarity with economical problems. The report of such a committee would probably provoke little controversy, and the propositions embraced in it would not be considered party questions.—San Francisco Examiner.

To Use the Government's Option.

William Jennings Bryan will not have been in the presidential office a week before he will have issued an order directing the executive departments to use the option resting with the Government to redeem bonds and Government paper in silver or gold. Thus with one blow will be dispatched the gold bond python that is crushing the life out of the country's credit.—Wheeling Register.

Hanna's Third Ticket Scheme.

It is hardly necessary for Mr. Hanna to announce that he is in favor of the third ticket movement, which some have started. It does not need a Yankee to guess as much. Anybody can see that it is a little device to help McKinley and the syndicate to which he belongs. Hanna need neither tell anybody that he proposes to use some of the syndicate's money to help along this third ticket scheme, nor need he take the trouble of denying that he is doing so. The people understand his relations to it quite well. No true Democrat will be deceived by this third ticket scheme, and Hanna presumably does not expect that anyone can be. He doubtless merely intends to give employment to the professional orators who are always willing to espouse the cause of the highest bidder, but whom he cannot very well employ to talk for McKinley direct. His plan is to keep these gentlemen under his thumb, and if they can keep the Bryan and Sewall vote down even a little bit, so much the better.

Not Fair Play and Bad Politics.

The efforts of certain New York papers to drag Mrs. Bryan into politics, as bossing her husband's views and utterances, is discreditable to fair pray, and decidedly bad politics.—Philadelphia Item.

Hanna Ought to Blush.

So they are "frying the fat" out of the poor day laborers in B. F. Jones' iron works. With millions on millions to draw on, even Hanna ought to blush at that.—Winona Herald.

Is the Major Afraid?

So Major McKinley proposes to do all his speech making in his own front yard. Can it be that he is afraid to go away from home and Hanna?—Boston Globe.

Small Shot.

Bleeding Kansas refuses to be bled for Wall street any longer.

Eckels is for McKinley. Thus do the hopes of little Napoleon fade day by day.

Dick Bland says Bryan's New York speech was a winner and what he says goes.

Some of the Chicago bicyclists are forming McKinley clubs. It's a bad case of wheels.

Chicago is a good storm center. Besides, Governor Altgeld lives there, and in an emergency he is worth several ordinary men.

Mr. Thurston might learn a valuable lesson from his compatriot, J. Pound Sterling Morton. Morton hasn't said anything for several days.

The single standard people are fast reaching that point of forgetfulness where they refer to 1892 as a year when the land flowed with milk and honey.

McKinley will never undertake a joint debate with Bryan. It's all very well to say his friends won't let him. None of them are holding off any harder than he is.

If the Wall street bankers can keep the gold reserve up for nothing during a Presidential campaign, why should they receive $20,000,000 for the same service at other times?

Judging from the columns devoted to showing that Mr Bryan's Madison Square speech was no good, we judge that it was one of the most effective addresses ever delivered.

The American people don't like a campaign of cowardly insinuation. They will make it react against its originator. Consequently we hope Mr. Thurston will keep on talking about Bryan.

The New York World says Bryan has made it clear "he stands squarely on the Chicago platform." He is the kind of man the people have been looking for. They know where to find him.

SAVED BY HIS DOG.

It Kept the Big Buffalo Bull from Killing Henry Hohlt.

The next time Henry Hohlt goes out to interview his herd of buffaloes at Lincoln Park he will probably gaze at it through the cracks of the fence and not run the risk of having his epidermis perforated by a pair of bovine horns. The other afternoon he donned a suit of cowboy clothes cut by a pattern approved by Texas Jack Crawford when he was here. Then he mounted a fiery mustang and entered the inclosure where his buffaloes are kept to drive them into a corral. They objected vigorously, but Henry was not to be bluffed. One old bull was particularly pugnacious, and insisted upon making life a burden for the mustang. Several vigorous lunges at the mustang were avoided by the sensible animal with dispatch.

A bulldog belonging to Mr. Hohlt had been viewing the trouble from afar. Finally he seemed to have decided to take a hand; so, with a run only paralleled by that celebrated spurt made by Salisbury last fall at the same park, he caught the bull by the nose and performed a few revolutions around his head as the old fellow gave it a twirl or two for luck. Having shaken the dog loose, the animal made a wild dive for him. He missed his prey and then started for the horse. The latter stumbled and fell, precipitating his rider to the ground and rendering him unconscious. The bull then attacked the horse and killed him.

The dog appeared to realize the position occupied by his unconscious master. He attacked the bull in front and rear so persistently that the animal turned his attention from the horse to the dog. A wild chase followed, in which the dog gave one of the prettiest exhibitions of racing ever witnessed. While the bull was engaged in following his little tormentor some assistants of Mr. Hohlt saw his predicament and hastened to his rescue. He was still unconscious, and they were compelled to pick him up and carry him to the park house. After restoratives had been applied he was brought to the city. He is at his home on South Eleventh street under the care of a physician. Fortunately no bones were broken, but he has some large and painful bruises on his person which will keep him in bed for several days. He was so sore last night that he was unable to lift a cup of coffee to his lips.

Mr. Hohlt attributes his escape to the fidelity of his dog, which made it so interesting for the buffalo that he was unable to dispatch the master when he had him down.—Nebraska State Journal.

The Science of Smiles.

The gentle art of smiling is the latest thing which science has been meddling with, tracing back to its very beginning, and pointing out with something like a sneer how this facial expression first came to adorn the face of primeval man.

Mr. Edward Cuyer, in a recent lecture in Paris before the Societe d'Anthropologie, stated that our smiles, however winning to outward seeming, are simply records of our very remote ancestors' selfishness, greediness and pugnacity.

The passion that dominated all others in primitive man was the desire for food. The animals of those days were huge and fierce, and the implements of hunting few and crude. The naked hunter therefore was forced to go oftentimes with an empty stomach, but when he made a kill he gorged himself with meat. The anticipation of the approaching satisfaction of his hunger caused him to open his mouth and show his teeth partly through pleasure, and partly through an instinctive impulse to get himself in readiness for the immediate stowing away of his food.

With the progress of civilization, however, this facial contortion grew to be caused by other pleasurable things, and then came the sound of audible laughter.

The graceful smile of the hostess, therefore, as she receives her guests, is merely an inherited expression of satisfaction derived from a savage progenitor who anticipated a good time when he had people to dinner—or for dinner.

Again, the open smile of more open pleasure is simply a survival of the gaping mouth with which the semi-simian prepared to tackle roast grandmother.—New York Journal.

The Car-Wheel Puzzle.

Here is a question that frequently puzzles even railroad men to answer. The wheels of a car are firmly fastened to the axles, and the wheels cannot turn unless the axles turn. But the outer rail of the curve is longer than the inner rail. Does the outer wheel turn faster than the inner wheel, or does the latter slip? A railway expert thus explains the mystery: If you will examine closely, you will see that the wheels, instead of being perfectly flat on the rim, are beveled, making the outer circumference smaller than the inside circumference. When the car turns a curve it has a tendency to go off at a tangent, or, in other words, to jump the track, which it would do were it not for the flange on the inside of the outer wheel, which presses closely against the rail. The rail touches the inner wheel quite a distance from the flange. The result is that the diameter of the outer wheel, while it rests upon the rail, is greater than that of the inner wheel. This difference in diameter equalizes the difference in the length of the curved rails. Both wheels revolve with the same speed at their axles, but the outer wheel traverses a greater distance, because its diameter, from the axle to the point of contact with the rail, is greater.—Golden Days.

A Phosphorescent Tea.

A phosphorescent 5 o'clock tea was recently given in Paris at 8 o'clock in the evening, at which no lights were used, the light coming from the ceiling, carpets, chairs, pictures, teacups and flowers. The ladies wore phosphorescent dresses, and their faces, shoulders and arms gleamed with light. M. Henry of the Academie des Sciences has invented a phosphorescent starch, which was used on the occasion and which, employed as face powder, "lends a moonlight radiance very becoming to some."

It seems to us that people are having more troubles, and bigger ones, this year than ever before.

Old-Time Paris Prisons.

The officials of the department of the Seine have undertaken the complete reorganization of the Paris prisons, and many famous buildings of Paris are about to come down. The prison of La Petite Roquette, where children are now sent, is to be done away with, and the youthful prisoners are to be passed on to the Ecole de Montesson. This is a beautifully situated establishment on the borders of the Seine, in healthy air, where the children will be taught trades. Mazas, Ste. Pelagie, Grande Roquette and the big central prison infirmary are all to be established and the prisoners transferred to Fresnes, where a huge building is now being constructed with 2,000 cells.

A Queer Oregon Snake.

There is said to be a snake in Oregon called the stupefied snake, which is one of the most interesting species of the family. This snake has a head on each end and runs either way. One head is about one-fourth as large as the other. It is of a yellowish color. It generally lies in a loop, and is frequently observed sunning in an apparently stupefied condition on a rock or log.

Should Be Made a National Law.

ON THE STAGE.

In the rosy light of my day's fair morning,
Ere ever a storm-cloud darkened the west,
Ere ever a shadow of night gave warning,
When life seemed only a pleasure guest,
Why, then, all humor and comedy scorning,
I liked high tragedy best.

I liked the challenge, the fierce-fought duel,
With a death or a parting in every act,
I liked the villain to be more cruel
Than the basest villain could be, in fact,
For it fed the fires in my mind with fuel
Of the things that my life lacked.

But as time passed on and I met real sorrow,
And she played at night on the stage of my heart,
I found that I could not forget on the morrow
The pain I had felt in her tragic part;
And, alas! no longer I needed to borrow
My grief from the actor's art.

And as life grows older, and, therefore, sadder
(Yet sweeter, may be, in its autumn haze),
I find more pleasure in watching the gladder
And lighter order of humorous plays,
Where mirth is as mad, or may be madder
Than the mirth of my lost days.

I like to be forced to laugh and be merry,
Tho' the earth with sorrow is ripe and rife;
I like for an evening at least to bury
All thought of trouble, or pain, or strife.
In sooth, I like to be moved to the very Emotions I miss in life.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

HERO OF THE HALL BEDROOM.

When I told my wife about it she exclaimed: "How utterly absurd! Why, I think you should have understood him all along."

"Mrs. Dockboy," said I, severely, "how was I to believe all his stories—his tales of prowess in matters of love, in feats of strength? Perhaps he did knock out O'Sullivan, the champion middleweight; perhaps he was the greatest halfback that ever played on the Cad university eleven; perhaps he did leave the West on account of the importunities of three beautiful millionairesses; but even Lieutenant Swash doubted the story of his capture by Apaches and his subsequent release by the chief's daughter."

"Swash!" retorted my wife. "Why do you always quote that horrid old thing? I think that he is himself inclined to exaggeration at times, whether unconsciously or otherwise, I cannot judge."

I do not take my wife's view of the matter at all, and I cannot see why the lieutenant and myself should have acted otherwise than we did.

We were talking of Filkins—Filkins, who occupied the fourth floor rear hall bedroom in my old boarding house. In locating the man I have described him, for that particular room in every boarding house is inhabited, experience has taught me, by a peculiar genius—men of culture, but on their uppers, men whose long lines of distinguished ancestors have bequeathed to them some quarts of blue blood, but nothing with which to keep it in circulation, and an inherent idea that it ought to keep moving itself, without their descending to plebeian labor to supply the motive power. Just such a person was Filkins. His clean-cut features, his easy manners, his polite bearing, supported by his pretension to family. When preparatory to going out after dinner he donned the evening clothes of the medical student who occupied the second floor front, and you saw him, not a hair of his head or mustache out of place, not a wrinkle or a speck anywhere, you instinctively felt that he was a gentleman born.

And if, perchance, he was off to "that swell little affair at Mrs. Van Foam's that the papers have been talking so much of," and needed a quarter for car fare, his father having forgotten to send him his check for the month, it was willingly given, for he was a capital fellow. He drew on us occasionally, but we regarded that as only a slight compensation for his company.

Lieutenant Swash came into my room early one evening as Filkins and I were discussing things in general over our pipes, and announced that he had three tickets for a series of boxing bouts at the Olympic Athletic Club.

"There will be some bruising," he cried, enthusiastically, "and it will be worth seeing."

"Awfully sorry, old man, but I can't go," replied Filkins. "There is a certain man in New York who has been searching high and low for me for three weeks. He'll be there, I know, for he has been going to the bowwows and spends all his time about such places. I'm not afraid of him, but I deem it more discreet for a while to avoid him."

"Your tailor?" ventured the lieutenant.

"Dear me, no," replied Filkins, with great good humor. He seemed to enjoy the joke. "Would that he was and I was wearing a respectable-looking cause for him to pursue me, but I am not so lucky."

"Now, see here, Filkins, you've got to come," I said.

"To tell the truth, it would be awfully embarrassing for me to meet that fellow," he replied. "You'd be surprised if I'd tell you who he is. Everyone has heard of him—rich, great swell."

Swash looked at me and winked one of his knowing winks. Then, turning to Filkins, he asked:

"Well, what does he want with you?"

"A woman at the bottom of the whole thing," replied our companion, unruffled. "You'd be surprised if you knew who she was—great belle—piles of money in her own name. I met her at a dance. Three weeks ago she broke off the engagement, and since then he has been going to the bowwows—a perfect madman, the fellers say, and he has sworn to break my head on sight."

"And why should he bother about you?" sneered Swash, sitting down on the edge of the bed, a most contemptuous look on his face.

Filkins smiled and softly puffed up his pipe.

"Why should he bother about you?" repeated the lieutenant, more emphatically.

"Indeed, I don't know," was the quiet reply. "I never spoke to her more than three times." He was silent for a moment. Then he laughed: "And, by Jove! do you know, she sent me a note the other day that cost me a quarter—forgot to pay the messenger."

"Never mind your certain man. Come on!" cried the lieutenant, rising, buttoning his coat and drawing on his gloves.

Filkins sighed, knocked the ashes out of his pipe and arose.

"Very well, if you insist," he said. "But I know there will be trouble, and I am very rusty with my fists. Now, I would not care if I was like what I was when——"

"Hurry! We're late!" interrupted Swash. And as we were filing down the stairs he whispered:

"A million to one we don't see the certain man."

"I would be a fool to take you up," I replied, softly.

When we reached the gymnasium of the Olympic Club the first bout was over. Several hundred men, generally in their shirt sleeves, were seated on low benches about the ring, all smoking so vigorously that a thick haze filled the room, and from where we stood we could hardly distinguish the faces of the two muscular fellows who were seated in their respective corners.

"There are three seats up front. Let's get there," said the lieutenant, indicating the place with his cane.

Filkins hung back.

"I'd rather not," he said, "I'll not be noticed here."

"Rot!" exclaimed the other, seizing his arm and literally dragging him through the crowd, until at length we were comfortably fixed in the front row. I could see everything then, and even heard the low tones of the referee as he rose and announced: "Six rounds between Harry Donohue of Boston and Kid Williams of New York. Then, with a nonchalant wave of the hand toward the right-hand corner, "Donahue;" toward the left, "Williams."

Donahue and Williams were two very respectable looking young men, with clear, pink faces, and splendid chests and muscles. Swash said that the latter was a middle weight and fought too low, but of that I knew nothing. In fact, I thought it was rather tame. My idea of prize fights had been drawn from comic and religious papers, but in these two active, athletic young men, who shook hands and then began to jump lithely about the ring, beating the air and at times striking each other with their gloved hands, I did not see a realization of my sanguine imaginings. To be sure, in the second round Williams landed villainously on Donohue's nose, causing it to bleed profusely, and received in turn an upper cut on the chin which brought from the crowd about us cries of "Good un!" "Now, another!" "Yer got 'im skeert." "Ah, pshaw! the Kid's too slow; jest see the chances he missed!" "He's fighting too low."

The affair was getting more interesting. Williams gave his opponent a body blow that sent him reeling against the ropes at one side, but the Boston lad regained himself in an instant and dealt the New-Yorker such a violent one on the cheek that the young man began to stagger stupidly about, holding his hands out to protect his face. Involuntarily I half rose and cried, "A good un!"

A sudden pull at my coat brought me back to my seat and Filkins whispered in my ear:

"There he is! What did I tell you?"

"Who?" said I, ruffled at the interruption.

"The man that I spoke of. Come, let us get out. He is moving this way."

Swash heard him, and, seizing him, he pulled him back into his seat, for he had made a motion to go.

"Leave at this point?" he cried. "Filkins, you're a fool."

I looked toward the person whom Filkins had pointed out, and although I had never before seen him, from a series of pictures of noted society men which a certain paper had published I knew him to be Archibald Van Peyster.

"Yes, Filkins," I said, "you're a fool."

"Call me what you choose," he retorted, "but mark my words, there will be trouble if we stay. Time has been called and I, at least, had better go."

"Nonsense!" laughed Swash. "We'll stand by you, old man, for I propose to see this thing out. It'll be hot the next round."

"Indeed, it will," said Filkins, grimly.

"Well, here comes the certain well-known man," I chuckled, for Van Peyster was moving around our way, and since Filkins had so boldly declared himself I determined to give him a few gentle thrusts. The opportunity was so good.

"I see him," he replied, quietly.

Swash began to laugh and used a rather strong expression, but hardly was it out of his mouth when I heard a stronger one, and looking up saw Archibald Van Peyster right in front of us, glaring down at our companion. There was a pause. Then he deliberately raised his cane and brought it down toward Filkins' head. I sprang from my place and put out my arm to arrest the blow, but Filkins was too quick for me. He caught it on his left wrist, and shot out his clenched right hand, landing neatly on his assailant's chin with such force as to send him groping against the ring platform.

In an instant the place was in an uproar; a dozen men sprang between the two new combatants; a hundred others gathered around us, filling the air with their excited cries and inquiries as to what had happened.

Van Peyster's execrations were something terrible. Inflamed with drink, maddened with jealousy and thirsting for revenge for the punishment he had received, he struggled to free himself from the grasp of those who held him. Filkins on the other hand coolly explained:

"The man is drunk, gentlemen. Someone had better find his name and address and send him home." Then in a lower tone he whispered to me: "Don't you think we had better go now?"

"I think we had," I said, and without another word Swash and I followed him out of the place and home to the boarding house, where he bid us good-night and retired to his fourth floor rear hall bedroom.

I saw Filkins the other day. He was driving toward the park in a handsome victoria, two neatly liveried men on the box. At his side sat a pretty girl whom I had never before seen, but knew from the pictures to have been the great belle, Miss Emily Carusher. And when I told my wife about it she said that I ought to have known it all along.

"But I judged him from his other stories," I expostulated.

"Perhaps they were true, too," said she.—New York Sun.

TREATMENT OF COLDS.

How They May Be Cured and Their After Consequences Averted.

Colds are probably the most common ailment in the world. They are always disagreeable and oftentimes dangerous. A person in good health, with fair play, easily resists cold, but when the health flags a little and liberties are taken with the stomach or with the nervous system a chill is easily taken, and, according to the weak spot of the individual, assumes the form of a cold or pneumonia, or it may be jaundice. Of all causes of "cold," probably fatigue is one of the most efficient. A jaded man, coming home at night from a long day's work, a growing youth losing two hours' sleep over evening parties two or three times a week, or a young lady heavily "doing the season," young children overfed and with short allowance of sleep, are common instances of the victims of "cold." Luxury is favorable to chill-taking; very hot rooms, feather beds, soft chairs, create a sensitiveness that leads to catarrhs. It is not, after all, the "cold" that is so much to be feared as the antecedent conditions that give the attack a chance of doing harm. Some of the worst "colds" happen to those who do not leave the house or even their beds, and those who are most invulnerable are often those who are most exposed to changes of temperature, and who by good sleep, cold bathing and regular habits preserve the tone of their nervous system and circulation. Probably many chills are contracted at night or at the fag end of the day, when tired people get the equilibrium of their circulation disturbed by either overheated sitting or underheated bed rooms and beds. This is specially the case with elderly people. In such cases the mischief is not always done instantaneously or in a single night. It often takes place insidiously, extending over days or even weeks.—London Lancet.

All Believe in Signs.

With the exception of gamblers there is no class of people in the world so prone to superstitious fancies as actors. Living, as they do, in a world of fancy and fiction, every incident of their lives is seized upon as a sign or omen that possesses either a beneficial influence upon their career or otherwise. To be sure there are many who by reason of a higher education and culture are above the petty superstitions of the class, but these are merely the exception which proves the rule. Yet, even this latter class has its peculiar vagaries, and the statement is made by the Washington Post, almost without fear of contradiction, that no member of the profession is absolutely free from the influence of signs, omens and the possession of talismans. From the star to the property man there is not a member of any combination who does not have a stock supply of signs, denoting either good or bad luck, which are as firmly believed in as the most devout savage believes in his fetiches and idols.

One would suppose that an actor so prominent in his profession as Joseph Jefferson would be free from such fancies, much less a believer in the efficacy of an old Irish potato as a symbol of healthfulness and a certain guarantee against attacks of rheumatism. Yet he is not, and if one sufficiently acquainted with him were to ask, he would be told an interesting story connected with a blackened, shriveled potato, nearly as hard as a stone, which the great actor invariably carries with him. Many years ago, when Jefferson had an unusually severe attack, some friend suggested the remedy, whereupon the actor procured a large-sized potato and has carried it ever since. The rheumatism left him and he has been entirely free from it since, due probably to his exceedingly temperate life and the many safeguards with which he surrounds his health, yet he is such a firm believer in the virtue of his talisman that he would not part with it under any circumstances.

The late William J. Florence also carried a triangular-shaped piece of brass inscribed with hieroglyphics, evidently an eastern coin, to which he attached great value, regarding it as the apple of his eye and as immunity against both physical and financial troubles.

Some Points Regarding Badgers.

"If you want a story," said the hunter, "I can give you one about a badger. Out in the West one day I saw a badger and went for him with a stone. I picked up a very large stone and dropped it on his back. He paid not the slightest attention to the stone but kept on running. I picked up another as big as a paving stone and dropped that on him, but he didn't seem to mind it, and still kept on. Hurt him? No. If I had he would have stopped. They are the toughest animals I ever saw, and we wanted to rid the country of them. In dropping the stones I stood so close over the badger that it was a wonder he did not turn and go for me. Fight? I should think so. A dog is no match for them. They always manage to get underneath and turn on their backs, and with their sharp claws often tear a dog inside out. Their teeth are sharp, but not so destructive as their claws. I have seen them within a few yards of a wolf and even of a coyote, but neither of these larger animals has made an attempt to molest them. When they will not attack an animal as small as a badger you may be sure there is some reason why. A coyote will attack a pack of dogs. The one I pelted with stones kept on to his hole, and there I hit him on the nose and killed him."

Taken Literally.

Rev. Dr. Newman Hall said every blade of grass was a sermon. The next day he was amusing himself by clipping his lawn, when a friend said: "That's right, doctor, cut your sermons short."

INDIANA INCIDENTS.

RECORD OF EVENTS OF THE PAST WEEK.

Alleged Piano Agents Fleece Many Farmers Around La Porte—Diphtheria Germs Active After Two Years—Terre Haute Cannery Very Busy.

Receipts Prove to Be Notes.

Two strangers, alleging to be representatives of a Chicago piano company, have been operating extensively in Northern Indiana, where their peculations are said to aggregate thousands of dollars. Paper in the form of negotiable notes has turned up in Warren County, where the plan of operation was to place a piano in a farmer's house with the understanding that the farmer was to advertise the merits of the instrument for a stated sum. Receipts were signed for the pianos, and his paper now turns up in notes of $480 each. Reports from other counties say the same swindle was practiced and no intelligent estimate can be made of the extent of the swindle.

Sixty Thousand Cans Daily.

The Terre Haute Packing Company has done the biggest business in its history this season. It has been idle but two days, and most of the time has been running nearly its full capacity of 60,000 cans per day. Even with this enormous output it is unable to supply the demand and was compelled this week to reject an order for 12,000 cases. The tomato season is now at its height, and 500 employes are kept busy until late every night. The pumpkin and bean crops also promise to be unusually heavy this year, and the plant will run a large force until late in the fall.

Fatal Germs in an Old Lounge.

In the winter of 1892 there was a fatal case of diphtheria in the family of S. C. Moore, of Kokomo. The lounge on which the child died was stored away and forgotten. A few days ago Mrs. Samuel Sipe, of Pittsburg, Pa., with her small children, came to visit Mr. and Mrs. Moore, her parents. The lounge was brought out for the children, and two of them are down with diphtheria, contracted from the infected lounge.

Frederick Honstrettor, near Seymour, kicked by a horse, is reported dying of lockjaw.

In a runaway accident, near Farmland, Roy Goings and his sister Lillie were thrown out, and the last-named was seriously hurt.

A family horse, 28 years old, belonging to Mrs. Elizabeth Hawkins, near Anderson, died of fright upon seeing an elephant in a circus parade.

I. H. Kellar, of Kokomo, has a pear tree that belongs in the list of freaks. The tree is full of white blooms, so thick on the branches as to completely hide a bushel or more of grown pears nearly ripe enough to pick. Apple trees have been known to bloom twice in that section, but this is the first instance of a pear tree wanting to raise two crops in one season.

An immense crowd attended the twenty-first anniversary of the Lake County Old Settlers' Association at Crown Point Wednesday. Addresses were delivered by Bartlett Wood and C. Dolton, of Dolton, Ill. J. Sander, of Lowell, was the oldest settler present. He is 95 years of age and has been in Lake County over sixty-five years. Mr. Sanders was well acquainted with Chicago when Fort Dearborn was the only building in the place. At the meeting there were ten old settlers who had been in Lake County over sixty years. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, W. A. Clark; Secretary, J. L. Hill; Historical Secretary, T. H. Ball; Treasurer, Bartlett Woods.

The village of Richland has had a sensational elopement. John Coffee, a contractor, since the death of his wife, one year ago, has been greatly smitten with the charms of Miss Mary Hobbs, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Hobbs, well-to-do farmers. Coffee is 45 years old, with four children. Miss Hobbs is but 17. Coffee's suit has been discountenanced by the girl's parents, who did all in their power to break up the coutrship. Clandestine meetings were held and an elopement planned for Sunday night. Miss Hobbs went to a neighbor's, presumably to spend the night, but after all had retired she stole out through a window and safely got away with her lover. They have not since been heard of.

A gang of whitecaps visited the home of William Ray, near Modesto, Monday night, broke into the house while he was asleep, and took him forcibly from the bed. He was hurried to a forest near the village, and, after being tied to a tree, was given an unmerciful whipping with a stirrup leather. After the beating he was covered with a coat of tar from head to foot and a bag of feathers was then emptied over his head. The whipping of Ray is alleged to have been caused by his neglect of his family for a woman who was whipped in the same neighborhood a month or more ago. Ray has a wife and three children. He was terribly bruised by the strap, and the tar placed upon the fresh cuts caused him intense pain.

John N. Clark died suddenly at Shelbyville Friday. He had been a resident of that city for sixteen years, was a reputable citizen and the head of a family. A local paper states that Clark has been leading a double life, and that his name was not Clark, but Peter Brooks. Monday morning Bartholomew D. Brooks, who asserts that he is a son of deceased, arrived from Indianapolis and disclosed the fact that he was Clark's son, and that his father had separated from his mother in Mattoon, Ill., twenty years ago without having secured a divorce. He states that his father went from Mattoon to Pana, Ill., and was there married again. Mr. Brooks, who is a well-to-do business man in Indianapolis, says he is Clark's only son, and will demand a share of the large estate left by the dead man.

James McCarthy, near Brownsville, committed suicide because of disappointment in love. His attentions had been rejected because of his dissipated habits.

It has just been learned that Clark Fielder, whose aged mother resides at Selma, six miles east of Muncie, was one of the victims in the St. Louis cyclone. He has been missing since the great storm, and after a careful description of him was sent to the authorities it was learned that he was among the unidentified dead. A tattoo on one of his arms was the means of identification.

An abandoned gas well on the James Kincaid farm, near Fortville, has developed into an oil producer.

Frank Barr, of Fort Wayne, fooled with a companion who was sharpening a pencil, and the blade of the knife cut an artery in his hand, from which he narrowly escaped bleeding to death.

At the last term of court at South Bend a few weeks ago Mrs. George H. Stover was given a divorce and $2,100 alimony, and allowed to resume her old name, because of incompatibility. Saturday the couple surprised every one by remarrying. Both are well known, the husband being a wealthy farmer. Both had been married before.

Dishonored Drafts.

When the stomach dishonors the drafts made upon it by the rest of the system, it is necessarily because its fund of strength is very low. Toned with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, it soon begins to pay out vigor in the shape of pure, rich blood, containing the elements of muscle, bone and brain. As a sequence of the new vigor afforded the stomach, the bowels perform their functions regularly, and the liver works like clock work. Malaria has no effect upon a system thus re-enforced.

Harder than Diamonds.

The experiments of M. Moissan with the electric furnace have led, it is stated, to the discovery of an important substance in the shape of a compound of boracic acid and carbon, which will even cut a diamond. The compound is said to be black, not unlike graphite or black lead, and can be produced in pieces of any required size. If the statements are verified, the new material will be very useful for rock boring, etc., if it can be put into proper shape for the diamond drills.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills, which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge, that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, laxatives or other remedies are then not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

The Institute.

Thursday's Daily.

We have not been able to give to the teachers' institute the attention we would like, but of course it has been and will be a success. The attendance is over 200.

Mr. Lamar gave an extra talk this forenoon relating to conditions in the southern states, and especially of the southern negroes It was very interesting and brimful of information.

Judge McClellan and Mrs McClellan and their daughter, Mrs. Garwood are in constant attendance. The latter is popular with all the lovers of good music, as she is always ready to go to the piano.

There are many familiar faces in attendance, but a great many more that are new.

The lessons given by Mrs. McRae are in the highest degree valuable, and she is an easy, clear and distinct speaker. Every one listens when she talks, and her instructions are practical. She is one of the strongest institute workers in the state.

Prof. C. O. Merica is still growing as an educator. The writer remembers him as a bright young farmer boy, when he and his brothers were the leaders of the school at Butler Center. Since then all three have been successful teachers. F. M. Merica is in charge of the Garrett schools, and Prof. Merica has the chair of History and Political Science at Lawrence University, Appleton, Wisconsin.

His work in the institute is able and brilliant. It pleases the COURIER to add Mr. Merica's name to the long list of prominent people who had their origin in DeKalb county. We doubt if a county in the state can go out into the Union and gather up so many of its sons and daughters who have attained places of prominence. Mr. Merica gives two lessons a day.

C. A. Woodcox led the singing this afternoon. He has a fine voice and is evidently an experienced instructor.

We would like to have some adept in mental science explain why two young ladies, when they arose to leave the room during a lecture, insisted on making five persons rise to let them out, when by going the other way only two would have been disturbed.

The Institute.

Friday's Daily.

The work yesterday afternoon was varied by a short time occupied by Norman W. Jones of Garrett, who is professer of Literature in the Southwestern Kansas University at Winfield, Kansas His excercise was along the line of "Interpretations and Impersonations of Hamlet," which was done in a fine, finished and scholarly way, showing him to be an accomplished elocutionist and impersonator. He had evidently given his subject a great deal of study. And we might here be allowed to add Mr. Jones to the long lists of talented young DeKalb people who have made brilliant records for themselves in some field of usefulness. We intend at an early date to make a full list of such.

The lecture of Jahu DeWitt Miller in the evening brought out a good house as he has spoken here before and all wanted to hear him again. It was excellent and as ever with him was brimful of brilliant ideas and strokes of wit as well as words of wisdom. Mr. Miller has a peculiar faculty of bringing out a bright idea by saying only a half of it. As for example he said "Benjamin Franklin wrote a treatise on the consumption of smoke and that treatise is still in existence in the library in Philadelphia." This was all he said but it left a long train of thought leading the hearer up through the long years of struggle to find a way to dispose of the nuisance of too much smoke. And within a year or two this has been widely discussed, especially in Chicago, where they have but lately succeeded in overcoming a part of the trouble.

At the beginning of the lecture last evening, Mr. Merica made a brief but feeling speech in which he thanked once for all, the many of all classes, who had assisted him for thirteen years to make the county institutes such a splendid success. He felt he could not close this line of his work without publicly showing how he appreciated their assistance.

Mrs. Coffinberry and Dr. Thompson and family, of Garrett have been over nearly every evening to attend the lectures.

All the school superintendents of the graded schools have been present a great part of the time. Mr. Coe of Butler, Mr. Keep and Mr. Bonnell of Waterloo, Mr. Provines of St. Joe, Mr. Merica of Garrett, and Mr. Eichholtz of Spencerville. We did not learn the name of the one in charge at Corunna, which is also a graded school.

because the weather happens to be warm. If you have a weak throat, a slight hacking cough, or some trouble with the bronchial tubes, summer is the best time to get rid of it. Building Association

Indianapolis News.

It looks as if the Union National Building Association were willing that the public and the state auditor, who has jurisdiction over building association accounts, should know its true financial condition. The experts appointed in the recent court proceeding did not agree in the facts they found. Now the state Auditor, responding to a request from the company, has appointed two well-known, and impartial men—John E. Cleland and George U. Bingham—to make an inquiry and report the facts.

The News has for a long time advocated some adequake building association legislation. We do not believe that the grosser evils of building associations were found in the recent case at trial. It was demonstrated that some mistakes had been made, but ex-Judge Elliott contended that these had been corrected. We are too much at sea in the building association business. It ought not to be possible, if the Union National is sound, to bring it into the notoriety that these recent proceedings have brought it. The whole court proceedings, whatever may be the condition of the association, have left a bad flavor in the community.

It is to be regretted that Judge Harvey did not himself hear this case. He was elected to hear cases. He is a judge that the people of this community chose. Why could not he attend to his duties? If it was in vacation, why could not the case have been postponed until term time? Why should he have appointed a comparatively obscure lawyer to try a case that concerns directly hundreds of shareholders, and indirectly many associations, with their vast interests; while it involved directly a half million of dollars? The appointment of judges is at best, it seems to us, a doubtful proceeding. The people declare whom they want to be their judges by their decision at the polls; but here, in a case of most extraordinary interest and of far-reaching effects, a lawyer is appointed who certainly has not won for himself a conspicuous position, and whose proceedings in the case seem to have been as unlooked for as his appointment.

What is to be thought of a judge who declares he will appoint a receiver for a concern before he has heard the defense, and immediately on hearing the defense does appoint a receiver, and with a bond, which certainly seems to an impartial sense, out of all proportion; a bond, too, that the judge accepted with an alacrity that contrasted with the petty objections that were allowed to delay the counter bond, offered by the company thus thrust in the hands of a receiver? These are but some of the incidents of the trial, which includes other incidents quite as curious.

They Watched Him.

Thursday's Daily.

It is always a pleasure to record the the honorable career of a public officer. It is a still higher pleasure to know that those with whom his work and all his duties lie, appreciate him. It is no less a pleasure to record the manner in which this appreciation is shown. Superintendent C. M. Merica, began his work in the difficult and delicate duties of his office in June 1883 and for over thirteen years has been a faithful public servant in season and out of season. For a county superintendent knows no seasons. To him storm and sunshine are alike. There are as many hours of some sort in one day as there are in another, and frequently, exactly the same work is to be done in a day of storm as in a day of sunshine. It is not needed that we say how well he has done his work, for his life and labors have been always in the public eye, and we are not afraid to leave the judgment in their hands. Thirteen years continuous service in one line of duty will try the powers of any man. Now, however, his service is drawing to a close. Next June, he will retire from the place he has so honorably filled, and give place to another. This county institute is the last he will hold, being his fourteenth. It makes in all seventy days of successful institute work he has controlled. It is a record of which anyone might feel proud. As the teachers thought yesterday, of these closing days, an idea took possession of their minds. They would give him a token of their esteem and affection. We do not know exactly with whom it originated, but among the first to mention the matter were Miss Maggie Morgan, Otto Widney, C. P. Hamman, J. H. Krontz, and Mrs. Alda Bemenderfer. While Trustee Eakright kept Mr. Merica busy at some other matter the question was called up, was hastily discussed, and it soon took form in a 25-cent collection and $30 was read in a few moments. A gold watch was found at D. A. Hodge's that just suited, and it was secured. The presentation speech was assigned to Mrs. Emma Mont McRae, and she made one of the happiest and most appropriate addresses ever conceived for such an occasion. The teachers are not yet done talking about it. Mr. Merica replied feelingly—as far as got—but he had lost his grip, so to speak. But all knew how grateful he was and how he appreciated the gift and the givers—a farewell token one might almost call it—of those with whom he had been so long and so intimately associated in a noble work. Then the affecting episode was over. And now, superintendent and teachers are not able to settle the question whether it is "more blessed to give than to receive."

Waterloo Court.

Tuesday there was quite a lively time in the J. P. court at Waterloo. It seems that Ab. Kelley and the merchant tailor, E. T. Rehfield, had a hot discussion on politics, for Ab. is a free silver man, and Rehfield a gold standard republican. Rehfield got wild and told Ab. that all who believed as Ab. did were hoodlums. This brought Ab. to a red heat and he swore some, and we are reliably informed, got very sassy. Rehfield had him arrested on a charge of "provoke." Ab. demanded a jury and then plead his own case. Will Leas was engaged to help Triple-X McDonald, the deputy prosecutor, to represent the state. The trial came off and the jury decided that Ab. had a right, as a free-born American citizen of Irish descent, to get mad and swear when any son of a Dutchman called him a hoodlum. So Ab. went free without a fine.

Populists Meet

And Nominate a Congressman For the Twelfth District.

The Populists of the Twelfth congressional district composed of the counties DeKalb, Steuben, Noble, Whitley, LaGrange and Allen met here to-day in the democratic club room over Bishop & Lackey's store and nominated a congressman to be voted for this fall, as well as a prosecutor for this, the 35th judicial circuit. In the forenoon, Joseph M. Butler was nominated by acclamation for prosecutor. At the afternoon meeting they unanimously endorsed Hon. James M. Robinson the democratic nominee, for congress. The meeting was very harmonious and enthusiastic, and altogether they made a wise choice.

Randolph Co. Republicans

The People Threatened with Death and Hell in Politics.

Indianapolis Sentinel.

To the Editor—Sir: Will you allow a man who was a soldier in the late war of the rebellion space in your paper to say a word in reference to the money question, a question and issue, to my mind of greater importance to the American people than any former issue ever brought before any civilized country on earth? First I want to ask what in God's name has come over a faction of the republican party? Can it be possible that there are in this glorious America men of brains and intelligence who would turn this country over to England by fastening upon this and all future generations the gold standard? Every reasonable and reasonably informed man must certainly see from an experience of twenty three years where we are drifting to. It certainly cannot be true that men are so tied and bound in party prejudice that they would prefer financial misery and ruin to the success of party. I admit that I have been, and to some extent yet, have my prejudices. I was born and grew up a republican, and I have seen many good things that the republican party has done, things that they have been and are still doing so far outnumbered the good things do that, above all organizations on earth they are the one most to be feared by all true and patriotic people of this glorious country. There are so many things that might be said on this line, pointing out errors and gross misdoings of this now misleading, and deceitful organization that one who has been raised in its folds and knows whereof he speaks, hardly knows where to begin or when to stop. I must, however, come to what I intended to speak of most viz: The demonetization of silver. Go back to the days of 1792 and look at the old heroes, when there were but 3,000,000 of free people, and see how heroically, after a long and bloody struggle, they proposed to run this government themselves and established the monetary system of a double standard, under which we grew and prospered from that time until the year 1873, when a cruel, wicked and designing republican congress of the united States struck down the silver money of this country, and by so doing have entailed bankruptcy, misery, ruin, hunger, nakedness, idleness, and woe upon millions in this country of plenty. Now this same republican party who committed this awful crime of the destruction of the money of the people have come before the American people on a platform of principles and ask the suffrage of this people to maintain and uphold a single gold standard the same identical system that has wrought all this misery and ruin. They ask this only, they say, until England consents to bimetallism. If the gold standard is the thing we want and need now, it is the thing we will want and need for all time to come. If it is a good thing and a true monetary system why ask for international bimetallism? Why did Lincoln, Blaine, Garfield, Sherman and hundreds of other statesmen of less note advocate the double standard if it is such an unholy thing now? I would call upon all men, and especially the old soldiers, to stand by the kind of money they were paid for in fighting for the defense of the union. I might write for hours, tracing the history of our money from 1792 to the present time, but more able writers will do this and I will leave that for them. I want to give one or two little incidents to show the desperate plight the gold bug party is in in old Randolph county and I close. When a party resorts to painting the following on the sidewalks of the city they are in a bad condition: "If you vote for Bryan and free silver you might as well vote for free burial, because free silver and Bryan will cause your death." It may be possible that this is a threat with death if any one votes that way.

Here is a sample of display cards in some of the business windows: "A brief political sermon. (1) Free trade; (2) free silver; (3) free hell. If you vote for the second you will get the third."

"I am for the largest use of silver in the currency of the country. I would not dishonor it: I would give it equal credit and honor with gold. I would make no discrimination. I would utilize both metals as money and discredit neither. I want the double standard."

ST. VITUS DANCE.

A Physician Prescribes Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine.

Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind.:

My daughter Mattie, aged 14, was afflicted last spring with St. Vitus dance and nervousness, her entire right side was numb and nearly paralyzed. We consulted a physician and he prescribed Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. She took three bottles before we saw any certain signs of improvement, but after that she began to improve very fast and I now think she is entirely cured. She has taken nine bottles of the Nervine, but no other medicine of any kind.

Harrison Jones.

Monday our older people were surprised to see an old man on our streets looking for familiar landmarks. Among other localities inspected he walked up North Main street and looked for Dr. Ford's old home. At about the point he remembered the Doctor used to live, he saw the Doctor himself sitting on the porch. He accosted him and asked if a Dr. Ford lived there. The Doctor answered, "I am the man." And the elderly stranger, asked "Do you know me?" The Doctor said he could not place him, "My name is Jones," said the stranger, and Dr. Ford then recognized Harrison Jones who has been absent since February 1865, over thirty-one years. It appears that Mr. Jones had served as a soldier in the Mexican war add got all the soldiering he cared for. So when the draft began to come thick and fast in the fall of 1864 and spring of 1865, he pulled out for California, in February, of '65 just before the last draft. He had spoken to Michael Kline and others, about going away, and wanted Mr. Kline to go with him. But Mr. Kline did not care to go, and staid, and both himself and Jones were caught by the draft. But Jones was safe away. Mr. Kline got a letter from him soon after he left, dated at Denver, and sent him, an answer. But Mr. Kline's letter did not reach him, and was returned through the dead letter office. Nothing certain was heard of him though rumors came back that a man answering his description had been killed in a fight near Denver, between a party of emigrants and some hostile Indians. It was even claimed that the grave was known. But this is all, even of rumors, till about a year, as noted at the time in the COURIER, Mrs. Jones applied for a pension as a Mexican war widow, and was informed that a man of that name, with same description, had applied for the same from Chicago. The two sons, John and Isaac went up to Chicago and found the man to be their father, but he did not return with them. Whether he has now come stay, we do not know. There is a proper amount of citicism on him for leaving a young family as he did to be supported and trained by the mother, who must care for them by her own exertions. And care for them she did, for they are all to-day, respected citizens, and we believe reasonably prosperous. It is rather a strange case, and his sudden advent to the vicinity he so unceremoniously left thirty-one years ago, has been the talk of the town for the last two days.

Tumble Weed.

There is little doubt but this queer and not very desirable prairie weed has invaded Indiana. We found several specimens lately, of a ragged looking plant growing among other weeds in cultivated fields, which in every way looked like the "tumble weed" found so abundantly over certain prairie districts from Texas to Dakota. It grows wild in those regions, and spreads out its numerous slender branches till it forms a head or top from a foot to two or three feet in diameter. In the fall, when the stalk has died, the one stem at the ground is easily broken off by the force of the wind, and when loosened the whole dry pile is carried up into the air and goes sailing away, generally to the eastward as the prevailing winds came this way. The bundle does not sail very far at a bound, unless the wind is strong, but it goes by jumps or bounds. When it strikes the ground, it may rest a minute or two before being thrown up again, or it may keep bounding for several miles, and fall at last into some depression of the ground and stay there in large collections. But a turn of the wind may even take them out of these. It is a queer sight when one sees a number of these for the first time. One may be looking over some rise of ground, when suddenly hundreds of these big bunches come into view bounding and hopping along like so many wild puff balls. The plant has small, slender, but stiff branches, full of seeds, and will probably spread rapidly. It has no particularly bad features about it, however, as far as we can see. It has no thorns and is rather a good looking weed. It will be easily killed, as the specimens we found, could be broken off at the ground by pulling sidewise at the tops, even, while growing. Still there is very little comfort in having even an innocent weed added to our already numerous list.

Russian Thistle

It is not very consoling to find specimens of this ill-looking pest, in the vicinity of Auburn, but we have them with us. Near Ober's mill north of the Lake Shore freight house, and near the railroad track, can be found a few of these weeds. They are ragged and prickly, growing in low bush-like form, and apparently very modest, but they are getting there all the same. Parties who desire can see a specimen at this office. Everbody who finds one of these troublesome pests, should see to it that they are thoroughly destroyed.

Trap And All

The editor has the best hunter cat in town. She keeps several adjoining premises free from rats and mice, and when these staple productions run low she takes charge of the crop of grasshoppers and bugs. Everything killable and eatable is welcome to her larder, and what she is not able to eat herself, she deals out to her family. It is a poor day that passes without her bringing home a rat or a mouse, and some days she brings in several. This morning, we were surprised to discover the end of a small chain with its ring, lying on the walk near the house, in the back yard. Following up this clue, at the other end of the chain, down on the ground, was a small steel trap, and fast in the jaws of the trap, were the pelt and tail of a good sized rat. All else had departed, and only these gloomy relics left to tell the tale of a once happy, but now wrecked and desolate home. The cat had evidently found the rat and trap some where, and made up her mind to have the rat. But as she could not get the rat out of the trap, she stole and brought home trap and all. The owner can have the trap without paying for this notice. Later. We stop the press to say it is Cook Ford's trap and he has it.

HELPFUL PEOPLE.

Journal and Messenger.

MRS. M. A. EHLERS.

Often they are quite unconscious of the balm they bring. They are the more welcome therefore. One such may serve in some respects, as the type of an unwritten multitude.

When I first saw Mrs. W. she was a middle aged woman whom one might meet once and again without mental comment, except perhaps to note the characteristic dialect of fatherland, and her lack of acquaintance with English grammar. Her presence at a local gathering would probably not have been reported by a personal mention, but included in the ambiguous "and others." However, as she did family washing in the neighborhood, and was a regular attendant at the village church and Sabbath school, little by little, one came to know something of her history. Her humble life began in one of the poorer homes of the German peasantry. Hard work and stern discipline were its features. Through rigid self-denial, she was able to reach America, and after a few years, owned a small home. At about the age of forty she became the wife of a man some twenty years younger than herself. There was no delusion by which she attached any romance to this alliance. She pitied his four motherless children, and regarded the offer of marriage as a providential call; to take upon herself the burden of their training, and help furnish them a home Do not blame her. Possibly marriages have been made for reasons not more worthy. In the new relation, she did her duty with the most unwavering fidelity, giving a mother's care to the children, who accepted the service as a matter of course. Had she expected a return, in appreciation or gratitude from husband or children, her disappointment would have been most bitter.

The washtub and ironing board were continued as a means of support, with the cheerful zeal of one who renders service to him who is all worthy. The years went on; when her husband was yet in the prime of manhood, she was old and broken. The children had gone out into other homes, and these two, with no mutual love nor affinity of sentiment were left alone. The unequal yoke became more galling. One could not be long in her presence, however, without the consciousness that she possessed a source of unfailing joy. In response to some word of sympathy, she would answer: "I have all what I need, Jesus is wid' me." No winter wind seemed too severe for her to come the long way to church. As we saw the approach of the brown woolen shawl, the white yarn mittens and the quilted hood that had done duty for many years, we felt the glow of sunshine her presence always brought. Sometimes at the prayer meeting she poured out her heart's petition. "Lovely Jesus, keep us fait'ful till we come where Dou art." Her words of testimony were heard with an intense interest. Those who were thus privileged. noted at such times a look other than of earth; they saw her face "as it had been the face of an angel," a fulfillment of the prayer: "Let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us." To the many infirmities of age, was added that of partial deafness.

But the pastor never had a more helpful auditor as she leaned forward to catch some word concerning her beloved, and responded to such, with glowing fervor. She once remarked: "I like to see a good sermon, if I can't hear it."

The divine prescription for spiritual health is clearly stated: "The liberal soul shall be made fat." From her meager income, Mrs. W. gave to the various missionary societies of her church, sums quite beyond the average of the membership. One of these offerings amounted to more than thirty dollars, all in small pieces. The agent who received it said: "I will send on your name for a certificate of life membership." "No! no! said she, pointing heavenward, it makes no different about the name, they keep the account up there."

Often, a little roll of butter, a few fresh vegetables, or other articles of food were quietly sent to some needy family. After she had passed her seventy-eighth year, one day there were sudden indications of heart trouble. "Do not send for a doctor" said she, "Jesus has come." In a few moments the trail body was left without its tenant.

Kind neighbors smoothed the thin gray hair, and folded the patient hands. A simple headstone marks her burial place. It will attract no stranger to read its brief record of name and date; but many whose lives have been made better and happier by her influence can say: "By her chastened spirit, her cheerful trust, and her unwavering faith in God, she helped me."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

NEWS IN BRIEF GUSTS

BLOWN IN FROM ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

John M. Palmer of Illinois, and Simon Bolivar Buckner of Kentucky, Nominated by the Gold Democrats—John R. Gentry Has Beaten All Records on the Race Track.

SUFFERING IN ONTONAGON.

Victims in a State of Barbarism, and Fight for Food.

Calumet (Mich.) special: So distressing has becoming the condition of the fire sufferers in Ontonagon that they have nearly returned to a condition of barbarism. The food contributed is away below the demand, and the strong and able-bodied attack the weak and take sustenance from them, leaving the weaker to starve. The authorities there have been unable to meet the conditions, and a squad of Company D, Fifth Regiment, left for the fire district. Gov. Rich will send all the State militia to the Upper Peninsula to guard the food if necessary. Thieves and pilagers will be shot down if necessary to protect the weak.

Palmer and Buckner.

Indianapolis special: John M. Palmer of Illinois, and Simon Bolivar Buckner of Kentucky, two white haired veterans of the war, rival commanders of the blue and the gray, were nominated by the gold Democratic convention for President and Vice President, on a brief platform which repudiates the doctrines of the Chicago convention, and endorsed President Cleveland and his administration in glowing terms; declare for a gold standard; a tariff for revenue only, liberal shipping laws, currency reform, civil service and economy in public expenditure.

Fastest on Record.

In the presence of 8,000 spectators at Fleetwook Park, New York City, Thursday, William Simpson's pacing stallion, John R. Gentry, defeated Robert J., Frank Agan and Star Pointer in the fastest harness race on record, the gallant little son of Ashland Wilkes stepping the first heat in 2:03¾, the second in 2:03¼ and the third in 2:03¼. All the finishes were very close and exciting and the contest was from every point of view a great one, surpassing in interest and importance any harness race of the present campaign.

A Liliputian Baby.

The 12-months-old baby of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Corman of Nicholasville, Ky., weighs one and three quarters pounds. Dr. T. R. Welch pronounced the little fellow in good health, but said he would never attain maturity. The child enjoys being carried in a small lunch basket, which is amply large to accommodate another of its size, although only four inches long. The child can speak distinctly and walk unaided.

Keeper Bound and Gagged.

The postoffice and general store of Charles Case, at Bernard, near Marysville, Ky., was broken open and robbed by five masked men, securing some money, a watch and two dollars worth of postage stamps. They battered down the door with a heavy stick of timber, and Mr. Case, who was asleep in the room, was bound and gagged. They left in the direction of Cincinnati.

Must Suffer Ten-Fold.

Bob Norman, who escaped from the Workhouse in Nicholasville, Kentucky, was captured at Elkhorn, Ky. Norman was imprisoned for refusing to pay a board bill, and although he had only twenty-eight days more to serve escaped. He will be made an example of the ten-fold law enacted by the City Council, which increases his punishment to 280 days

Steamer Sinks.

New York special: The steamer Rosedale, with 150 passengers on board, was struck off Broome street, East River, Thursday, by a Twenty-third street ferry boat, and she sank in about five minutes. The Rosedale was on her way from Bridgeport at the time. All the passengers, it is said, were picked up by a passing craft. They saved none of their effects.

One Woman's Crime.

New York special: An unknown woman, about thirty years old, leaped from the platform of the elevated station at 125th street and Third avenue, New York, and, landing on the track in front of an approaching train, was cut to pieces. Her unborn child, cut out of her body, fell from the track into the street.

Humbolt to Abdicate.

A special dispatch received in London from Rome says that it is rumored there that King Humbert will announce his abdication after the marriage of the Prince of Naples, the heir apparent, to Princess Helene of Montenegro.

Steel Works Shut Down.

The Edgar Thomson Steel Works, at Braddock, Pa., belonging to the Carnegie Steel Company, were closed down last Wednesday night for an indefinite period throwing 1,500 men out of work.

Robison Park Attractions.

September 7, Leon Family, Aerialists and Acrobats.

Opera House Fire.

The Welting Opera House Syracuse, N. Y., burned. The surrounding property was also damaged to considerable extent. The loss is estimated at $100,000. This is the third time that the Wieting Opera House has been burned. Insurance on the Opera House $75,000, and $150,000 on the block.

Swallowed a Burr.

Wolf Erhardt's 4-year old baby of South Bend, Ind., sucked a sand burr down her wind pipe causing death. This is the second case of the kind there.

Steamboat Line for Farmers.

A steamboat line on the Missouri River between Sioux City and Charles Mix County, South Dakota, may be established within the next few weeks. The plan is the outcome of agitation on the part of up-river farmers for some means of getting their crops to market.

Red Lion Inn is Burned Down.

The historic Red Lion Inn of Stockbridge, Mass., the most popular hotel in the Berkshire Hills, was totally destroyed by fire. Only the front wall, which dates from 1773, was left standing. The house was crowded, there being 189 guests, but no lives were lost.

GREAT NEWS FOR CUBA.

Philippine Islanders Rebel Against Spanish Rule.

An official dispatch received from Manila, capital of the Philippine Islands, announces that a revolutionary outbreak has occurred there and that a state of siege has been proclaimed. Next to Cuba the Philippine Islands are the chief colonial possession of Spain. The same greedy, tyrannous methods of government that have forced Cubans to revolt repeatedly have at last spurred the Philippine Islanders to revolution. This rebellion is the one thing which, more than all others, Spain has feared for more than a year past. It is the best possible news for Cuba, since it means that Spain's troops must be divided between two rebellious provinces instead of being concentrated on one. The Philippines are a group of large and small islands, more than 100 in number, lying directly southeast of the Chinese coast and northwest of New Guinea. The seat of the Spanish government of the islands is at Manila, in the southwestern part of the great island of Luzon, 41,000 square miles in extent. Manila has a population of 270,000. The islands altogether have 7,000,000 population, or nearly twice that of Cuba, on about 116,000 square miles of territory. The islands have been a very valuable colony for Spain, producing great quantities of sugar, hemp, tobacco, coffee and cocoa. The news of the rebellion in the Philippines will inspire the Cuban patriots to make still greater sacrifices for their liberty, as it so greatly enhances the prospects of their ultimate success.

FINE FAST MAIL.

One of the Best Trains to Be Found in the World.

"We now have the finest mail train in the United States, or elsewhere for that matter," said Chief Clerk P. M. Coates, of the Railway Mail Service, in charge of the Chicago and Omaha fast mail. The cars have nearly all been remodeled, renovated, and painted anew. The third set of cars is now in the Burlington company's shops undergoing treatment. All the old oil lamps have been removed and instead the entire train of five cars is lighted with Pintsch gas. There are seven lamps of four burners each to each car.

The cars have been furnished with new trucks, or the old ones taken apart and refitted piece by piece. All the most modern appliances in the matter of couplings and air brakes help to give the flyer the best possible equipment of any train extant.

The new fast mail engine, No. 590, built especially for service on trains Nos. 7 and 8, by which Uncle Sam's trains on the "Q" between Chicago and Omaha are known, has been trained into fine service, and others of the same pattern will soon be on the rails.

The Government's train now makes Omaha in eleven and one-half hours, running 500 miles between 3 a. m. and 2:30 p. m. Chief Clerk Coates says that he cannot remember of a single instance when Uncle Sam's flyer has been one minute late at the Union Pacific transfer this year.

GOLD IMPORTS TIMELY.

Put a New Phase on the Monetary Situation and Eases Strain in Commercial Circles.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says:

"Clearing-house certificates have not been issued, but instead gold is coming hither largely on the swiftest steamers, about $10,000,000 being already received. Higher lending rates bring it, notwithstanding foreign events which disturb London markets and growing confidence in the monetary future of the country help. Liabilities in failures for three weeks were $20,932,285, against $6,519,566 last year and $8,214,470 in 1894. The stoppage of Hilton, Hughes & Co. is not included in these figures. The stoppage of works also continues, including among other iron works the Illinois Steel plant at Hammond, Ind., and the Lakeside nail works there. Disruption of the tinplate association results from inability of many concerns to go on paying wages demanded, and will presumably be followed by the stoppage of some others. Iron works are getting light new business, many contracts having been deferred 'until after the election,' and there is so little doing that quotations are almost nominal."

CHARGED WITH TRAIN WRECKING.

Discharged Railroad Men of Lima, Ohio, in Serious Trouble.

Joseph Blucher, rear brakeman of the local freight on the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton Road when the north-bound passenger train recently crashed into it on the siding at Milton, Ohio, injuring a number of people, was arrested on a charge of train wrecking. He claimed he closed the switch, but officials thought differently and he was discharged. Since then he has threatened to take revenge on the company. Following his discharge an attempt was made to wreck three passenger trains at Milton. Blucher has just served a term in the Toledo workhouse for malicious destruction of property.

Cheering Commercial News.

New York dispatch: September will witness a perceptible change for the better in the commercial centers, and unless something unexpected happens there will be a gradual improvement from now on. This, at least, is the view that obtains among the highest authorities in Wall street. Eighteen millions of gold are now on their way to this country from Europe. Already trade shows signs of revival. J. Edward Simmons, president of the Fourth National Bank, a member of the clearing house committee on loans and the most representative banker in Wall street, says: "It is my sincere and honest belief that we are once more on the highway to prosperity. While the first flush does not indicate any marked changes for the better, nevertheless the improvement is none the less real. In the first place, there has been no call for clearing house certificates, although we had made provisions for such an emergency ten days ago. This shows that the banks are in a good condition and have passed through the tight money market in safety. There is now in transit to this country about $18,000,000 in gold. This will ease the money market and bring back a normal condition of affairs. It is due to perfectly natural causes. There is a very large export trade at present, principally of grain and cotton, and the imports are very small, owing to the recent stagnation in business. Hence Europe is obliged to send us her gold in order to pay for the goods she has bought. I am simply giving the reasons for the faith that is in me. Of course we cannot hope to gallop along until after the election, but nevertheless we are now moving slowly but surely along the path of prosperity."

Shock Felt for Twenty Miles.

By an explosion of powder in the wheelhouse of the Equitable Powder Company near Alton, Ill., three persons lost their lives and a number were injured. The shock of the explosion was felt for twenty miles, and in several buildings in East and Upper Alton every pane of glass was broken. The Equitable Powder Company's plant is located four and a half miles east of Alton, and is one of the biggest manufacturing plants in the country, employing a large number of men. At 3 o'clock Tuesday morning the works took fire, and for awhile it was feared the conflagration would reach the magazine, where a large quantity of blasting powder had been stored. All the extinguishing appliances and special lines of hose belonging to the plant were called into play, and after two hours' desperate work the fire was brought somewhat under control, and the men were about congratulating themselves on the success of their efforts, when the wheelhouse blew up with a tremendous report. Rickert, Rogers and Pepple, who were in the vicinity of the wheelhouse, were instantly killed. In Alton the shock was felt with terrific force. People rushed from their houses thinking there was an earthquake and for a time confusion prevailed which almost amounted to panic. A second explosion followed the first, but the shock was not so great.

COAL COMES FROM CHINA.

Sample Cargo from Tonquin—Cheap and of Fine Quality.

China has thrown down the gauntlet to the big coal miners of the United States. The American bark Colorado, which has arrived at San Francisco, brought a mixed sample cargo of anthracite and manufactured coal, mined and made in the Tonquin district. It was consigned to a San Francisco coal-dealing firm, which promises to push the Chinese fuel on the coast market at prices greatly below those which Pennsylvania and Welsh coal of the same character is now bringing. Examining experts have pronounced the Tonquin coal beds almost inexhaustible. The Chinese article is in the market to stay, it is said. Tonquin, since the Tonquin war, has been under the control of the French, and it is French capital that is now developing the mines, but the land is still populated by Chinese as before, and it is the cheap Chinese labor that is employed in the mines; hence the extremely low cost of production which enables the French owners of the Tonquin mines to undersell the coal producers of other countries where labor is better paid. The coal from the Orient is said to be of the finest quality, fully equal to the best Pennsylvania or Welsh coal.

NEW TRAIN RECORD.

Overland Flyer on the Union Pacific Exceeds Its Schedule.

The fast passenger train service record in the West was broken by the Union Pacific Overland Limited Monday night. The regular schedule time of the train is over fifty miles an hour, including stops—the fastest regular train across the continent. This was improved upon. The train was delayed one hour when Grand Island, Neb., was reached, 150 miles from Omaha. With sixteen coaches, the time was fully made up before the train reached Omaha. The officials are now figuring just what time the train can make across the continent.

Northern Millers Revolt.

Duluth and Superior millers have revolted against the present lake and rail rates on flour, and have formed an association to handle their own transportation. It will be known as the Commercial Transportation Company. The company will charter wild freight tonnage, engage handlers at both ends of the route, and charter canal boats. In this way they expect to effect quite a saving on the present rate of 9¾ cents per 100.

Bryan at Cleveland.

At Cleveland over 25,000 persons listened to speeches by Candidate Bryan, and the demonstrations in his honor were very enthusiastic. Two large meetings were held, the first in the Central Armory, where 16,000 men and women were packed; the second in Music Hall, which held 8,000, and afterward the Democratic leader spoke to a crowd from the balcony of the Hollenden Hotel.

LI HUNG CHANG HERE

AGED CHINESE STATESMAN GIVEN ROYAL WELCOME.

The Earl's Reception an Enthusiastic Affair—Met by General Ruger, the Official Representative of President Cleveland.

Warships Fire Noisy Salutes.

Li Hung Chang, China's Bismarck and greatest diplomat, arrived in New York City on the American Line steamship St. Louis Friday afternoon. He was accompanied by his son, adopted son and a suite of about forty persons, and landed at the American Line wharf, at the foot of Fulton street, North River. From the time the St. Louis was sighted off Fire Island at 9 o'clock until she arrived at her dock the Ambassador was made aware that he is a welcome guest in the United States. The residents of Fire Island saluted him with nineteen guns and flying flags. His arrival in the upper bay was followed by the booming of cannon on the White Fleet. On the way into port the dispatch boat Dolphin, having on board Gen. Ruger, Chinese Minister Yang and representatives of the State Department, ran alongside of the St. Louis. They were the first to formally welcome the Ambassador to the United States. Gen. Ruger, on behalf of the President, gave him the freedom of the country. On arriving at the dock the Ambassador was welcomed by eighty of his fellow-countrymen. They stood in a line three deep, surrounded by palms and facing a strip of red felt, placed for Li Hung Chang to walk upon. The Chinamen were in holiday attire and headed by Consuls General Sze, of New York City, and Wy Yu, of Cuba.

LI'S CARD.

Pleased with His Reception.

Earl Li, accustomed as he is to pomp and ostentatious ceremony, was evidently pleased with his reception. His mobile face assumed a placid, smiling expression and his manner, while dignified, was easy and unconventional. He looked well, too. While he is an aged man, time has not cut many marks on his strong face. He stood the voyage well and was not troubled with illness of any kind. Drawn up to receive the Emperor of China's representative were eighty blue jackets of the First Battalion, New York State Naval Reserve, under the command of Lieutenant Commander George E. Kent, Lieut. W. H. Staylor and Ensigns Macfarlane and Mouton. They formed a guard of honor from the steamship to the space on the wharf set apart and decorated for his reception. The amateur tars, the palms, the red decorations and bowing and bending mandarins in their gaudy silks of many colors made indeed an unusual and picturesque scene. The Ambassador passed the ordeal of the reception and, taking the elevator, ordinarily a baggage one, but decorated and carpeted for the occasion, was lowered to the dock below.

LI HUNG CHANG.

Saturday President Cleveland received the nation's visitor at the residence of William C. Whitney, after which Li returned to the Waldorf, where in the evening ex-Ministers to China gave a dinner in his honor. For Sunday was slated only one thing, that which Li asked for himself, a visit to the tomb of Gen. Grant, at Riverside. The Earl's offering at the tomb was a wreath of white, purple and yellow. It signified death and fame and the sunlight of imperial favor, and was the tribute of a great statesman to a great commander. Carrying the wreath in his hand, Li entered the tomb and for twenty minutes stood reverentially by the sarcophagus. He was, indeed, a sorrowing friend. It was a profound obeisance in which his forehead nearly touched the stone coffin in which Gen. Grant's remains rest. Then he placed the wreath upon it, and for ten minutes stood with his head bowed so low that his face was half obscured. Before leaving the temporary tomb he again bowed low toward the last home of the great, and as he turned to leave he said, through his interpreter: "I have looked forward to this as one of the most sacred of my obligations, and the most religious of my duties to your country."

PRINCE LOBANOFF DEAD.

Russian Foreign Minister Passes Away Very Suddenly.

A dispatch to the London Telegraph from Kieff says that Prince Lobanoff-Rostovsky, Russian Minister of Foreign Affairs, died suddenly while traveling from Vienna to that place. Prince Lobanoff-Rostovsky was in the company of the Czar at the time of his death, and his demise was wholly without warning.

The news of the death of Prince Lobanoff-Rostovsky, according to the dispatch to the Telegraph, caused great excitement throughout Russia, where the personality of the Minister of Foreign Affairs was considered to be second only to the Czar himself. Prince Lobanoff-Rostovsky pursued a strong foreign policy—a policy which was regarded in some quarters as threatening the peace of the world.

PRINCE LOBANOFF-ROSTOVSKY.

MADE GOOD TIME.

United States Cruiser Brooklyn Establishes a Fast Record.

The United States cruiser Brooklyn, on her official trial trip the other day, averaged 21.92 knots an hour, during a forced draught run of four hours, and earned a bonus of $350,000 for the Cramps, the requirement being 20 knots. The contract requirement of 11,000 horse power was exceeded by a thousand or more, and one stretch of the ship reached the surprising average of 22.9 knots an hour. This puts her in the commerce-destroying class. The trip was over a course 41½ knots and back, off Cape Ann. It was begun in a hazy atmosphere, against the tide. When about half way the ship ran into a rainstorm and fog. The end of the course was reached at an average of 21.71 knots. It was still foggy when the turn was made, but the tide was with the ship now, and the down trip was made at the rate of 22.12 knots an hour, or an average of 21.92 for the 83 knots. It was on this leg over a distance of seven knots that the top-knotch speed was attained. The sun broke through the clouds as the finish was being made. A broom was run up, flags were unfurled, and the great ship returned to harbor with the monster siren pulled wide open, while the tugs and boats answered back congratulations.

THE NEW UNITED STATES CRUISER BROOKLYN.

PILGRIMS FROM LABRADOR.

Come for the World's Fair, Now on the Return Trip.

Apili and his wife, Helene, whose pictures accompany this story, sailed from Brooklyn a few days ago for their home, near Davis Inlet, Labrador, which they left four years ago to form a part of the anthropological exhibit at the World's Fair, where they were domiciled in the Eskimo village. They have had varying fortune since the Chicago show closed They traveled a part of the time with Barnum's circus at a salary, as it is said, of $150 a week, yet they started for home with nothing except some articles of clothing, a few utensils that they have accumulated, some trinkets that they have picked up in their journeyings, and the necessary outfit which thoughtful friends in New York provided to enable Apili to go hunting with when he arrives in Labrador. Their passage was prepaid, and their safe conduct arranged for not only during the voyage to St. John's, but during their stay there, as well as on the second part of their journey, from there to their home.

APILI, WIFE AND GRANDDAUGHTER.

A dollar was all it was deemed safe to entrust them with in cash, and the chances are perhaps even that they will carry that with them to their destination, or part with it to the first nimble-witted talker with whom they meet. For the Eskimo who have come here do not seem to acquire cunning in their dealings with the whites, even after being swindled many times. The little girl pictured with Apili and Helene is their grandchild, and she goes back with them as a reminder of the World's Fair, where she was born, and of Mrs. Potter Palmer, after whom she was named Nancy Helene Columbia Palmer. She appears to be a half-breed, and her father is supposed to be in the Labrador settlement, where Apili lives.

TRACTION ENGINES COLLIDE.

Rival Wheat Threshers Indulge in a Novel Battle.

Near Lawrence, Kan., the other night the steam traction threshing machine engines owned by William Peat and J. Brooks came in collision at the entrance to the farm of Mr. Earhart. Peat had been engaged by Earhart to thrash, and, failing to come, Brooks was hired. The met met with the machines at the farmyard gate. A dispute followed, both wanting the work. One started to go in, when the other started his engine, and a collision followed. The engines met head on. One engine reared up on end and fell over on the other, and both were smashed. A fireman on Peat's engine was caught between the engine and water tank and received fatal injuries.

FLOAT THE GOLD FLAG

NATIONAL DEMOCRATS MEET IN INDIANAPOLIS.

Tomlinson Hall Thronged—Gen. Palmer Calls the Convention to Order, and Ex-Gov. Flower Is Introduced as Temporary Chairman.

Yellow Money Men.

The Gold Democratic national convention at Indianapolis was called to order by Senator Palmer of Illinois at 12:29 o'clock Wednesday afternoon. Bishop John Hazen White, of the diocese of Indiana, pronounced an invocation and Senator Caffery of Louisiana, who was afterward chosen permanent chairman, read the call under which the convention was assembled. Ex-Gov. Roswell P. Flower of New York was introduced as temporary chairman and made a long address defining the views of the gold Democrats.

GEN. JOHN M. PALMER.

Early in the morning the hotel corridors presented an animated appearance, and, contrary to expectations, there were many lively discussions aroused not pertaining to the selection of candiates, or adoption of a platform, but arguments with silver Democrats who chose to either ask or volunteer information. John Dewitt Warner of New York and ex-Congressman Charles D. Haines of Kinderhook were foremost among the gold champions, and vigorously proclaimed their faith. Haines, who is said to be a lieutenant and very close to Senators Hill and Murphy of New York, not only made arguments in the hotel corridors, but went out into the streets and obtained respectful hearing from about 400 people. Other orators started discussions in various parts of the hotel corridors, and all were surrounded by eager and curious groups of wisdom-seekers. The arrival of delegates from near-by and far Western States added to the general confusion and the bands kept up a merry round of enlivening music. There was a general lack of noisy demonstration, all of which strongly contrasted with the almost riotous scenes that marked the last two national conventions.

All but Four States Represented.

Up to the hour of assembling, all but about four States in the nation were found to be represented and with full delegations. This proved rather a source of wonderment to those who started the movement and who pointed to the short time which the project had lived and its apparent success as indicative of enthusiastic support. The largest estimate of a crowd in the morning was made by a railroad man who asserted that there were 6,000 people in the city, delegates and strangers. The roll of States showed that over 350 delegates were present, with their alternates. The convention was to be governed by the rules of the Democratic convention of 1892.

The Convention Hall.

Tomlinson Hall, in which the convention was held, is situated at Market and Delaware streets, in the center of the city, within easy reach of all the hotels. It is capable of seating comfortably about 4,000 people, and is admirably adapted for the purpose of a large public meeting. The interior and exterior of the building were handsomely draped with bunting in the national colors, interspersed with the stars and stripes and other patriotic and appropriate devices. The rear of the stage was ornamented with life-sized portraits of Jefferson, Jackson and Joseph McDonald on the one side, and Cleveland, Tilden and Hendricks on the other. In the center and over the head of the chairman was a large eagle with shield and flags. The rear of the stage was curtained off with red, white and blue bunting. To the right and left of the stage bunting was arranged to represent a sunburst with curtains made of immense national banners. Fan-shaped curtains of the same material extended from the right to the left of the stage overhead. The stage itself was raised some four feet above the general level of the floor so as to give the officers and the distinguished citizens and guests who ocupied the platform with them a conspicuous position for observation. The front of the stage was handsomely ornamented with palms, ferns and smilax. A conspicuous feature of all these decorations was the gilding of all the picture frames and shields and staves which ornament the hall. An immense vase containing golden rod, rested at the right hand of the presiding officer. Gold was everywhere on all the ornaments on which it could be appropriately placed.

Crowd Came Early.

Promptly at 11 o'clock the doors leading to Tomlinson Hall were opened, but admission was confined under strict orders to ticket holders. They arrived rather slowly at first. A band was located in the upper gallery at the rear of the hall.

Many of the early arrivals in the galleries were ladies. Mrs. Hendricks, the widow of the late Vice President, was one of the first of the distinguished personages to appear in the seats reserved in the rear of the stage. The arrival of the Alabama delegation with a huge purple banner was the signal for the first outburst of applause. On the banner was the State shield, beneath which were the words, "Here we rest," recalling the old legend of the Indian, who, driven piteously from the North, weary and footsore, finally settled in the territory, now Alabama, which, translated, gives the motto of the State. The Alabama Marching Club, which had already entered with a fanfare of trumpets, gave three cheers as their banners appeared. "Hurrah for Alabama!" they shouted, when from across the hall came the cry, "Why, what's the matter with old Kentucky?"

As the hands of the clock pointed to high noon Senator Palmer of Illinois, chairman of the national committee, made his way from the rear of the States' quarters to the platform. The galleries were then about half filled, and the main body of the delegates were in their seats. About 20 per cent. of those in the galleries were ladies. The appearance of the Florida delegation, headed by two negroes, one carrying a Cleveland banner and the other a gilded alligator, labeled "Florida goldbug," produced quite a flurry of enthusiasm, but was drowned in the thunderous applause which greeted the New York delegation. Headed by ex-Gov. Flower and Gen. Tracey, they marched to their seats, seventy-two strong, to continuous hand-clapping. Each delegate had in his buttonhole a spray of goldenrod.

THE SILENT SHORE.

By John Blundell Burton

CHAPTER XXIII.—(Continued.)

The day dawned upon the plateau; a few straggling rays of the sun illuminated the great glacier above and turned its dead gray snow and ice into a pure, warm white, while the mists rolled away from the high mountains keeping watch above; and below on the smaller glacier, and at the edge of a yawning crevasse, lay the body of Philip Smerdon.

Two guides, proceeding over the pass to meet a party of mountain climbers, reached the plateau at dawn, and sitting down upon the stone to eat a piece of bread and take a draught of cold coffee, saw his knapsack lying beside it.

"What does it mean?" the one said to the other.

"It means death," his companion replied, "the railing is broken! Some one has fallen."

Slowly and carefully, and each holding to one of the upright posts, they peered over and down on the glacier, and there they saw what was lying below.

A whispered word sufficed, a direction given by one to the other, and these hardy mountaineers were descending the moraine, digging their sticks deeply into the stones, and gradually working their way skillfully to the glacier.

"Is he dead, Carl?" the one asked of his friend, who stooped over the prostrate form and felt of his heart.

"No; he lives. How has he ever fallen here without instant death? But he must die! See, his bones are all broken!" and as he spoke he lifted Smerdon's arm and touched one of his legs.

"What shall we do with him?" the other asked.

"We must remove him. Even though he die on the road, it is better than to leave him here. Let us take him to the house of Father Neumann. It is but to the foot of the glacier."

Very gently these men lifted him in their arms, though not so gently but that they wrung a groan of agony from him as they did so, and bore him down the glacier to where it entered the valley; and then, having handed him to the priest, who lived in what was little better than a hut, they left him.

Late that afternoon the dying man opened his eyes, and looked around the room in which he lay.

At his bedside he saw a table with a cross laid upon it, and at the window of the room an aged priest sat reading a Breviary.

"Where am I?" he asked in English.

The priest rose and came to the bed, and then spoke to him in German.

"My son," he said, "what want of yours can I supply?"

"Tell me where I am," Smerdon answered in the same language, "and how long I have to live."

"You are in my house, the house of the Cure of Sastratz. For the span of your life none can answer but God. But, my son, I should do ill if I did not tell you that your hours are numbered. The doctor from St. Christoph has seen you."

"Give me paper and ink——"

"My son, you cannot write, and——"

"I will write," Smerdon said faintly, "even though I die in the attempt."

The Cure felt his right arm, which was not broken like the other, and then he brought him paper and ink, and holding the former up on his Breviary before the dying man, he put the pen in his hand. And slowly and painfully, and with eyes that occasionally closed, Smerdon wrote:

"I am dying at the house of the Cure of Sastratz, near the Schwarzweiss Pass; from a fall. Tell Gervase that I alone murdered Walter Cundall. If he will come to me and I am still alive, I will tell him all. PHILIP SMERDON."

Then he put the letter in an envelope and addressed it to Ida Raughton. And ere he once more lapsed into unconsciousness, he asked the priest to write another for him to his mother, and to address it to an hotel at Zurich.

"They will be sent at once?" he asked faintly.

"Surely, my son."

CHAPTER XXIV.

It was late on the evening of the fifth day after the letter had been sent to Ida Raughton, that a mule, bearing upon its back Lord Penlyn and escorted by a guide, stopped at the house of the Cure of Sastratz.

The young man had traveled from London as fast as the expresses could carry him, and had come straight to the village lying at the entrance of the Schwarzweiss Pass, to find that from there he could only continue his journey on foot or by mule.

He chose the latter as the swiftest and easiest course—for he was very tired and worn with traveling—and at last he arrived at his destination.

When the first feeling of horror had been upon him on reading the letter Smerdon had written, acknowledging that he was the murderer, he had told Ida Raughton that he would not go to see him even on his death bed; that his revulsion of feeling would be such that he should be only able to curse him for his crime.

But she, with that gentleness of heart that never failed her, pleaded so with him to have pity on the man, who, however deep in sin, had sinned alone for him, that she induced him to go.

"Remember," she said, "that even though he has done this awful deed, he did it for your sake; it was not done to benefit himself. Bad and wicked as it was, at least that can be pleaded for him."

"Yes," her lover answered, "I see his reason now. He thought that Walter had come between my happiness and me forever, and in a moment of pity for me he did the deed. How little he knew me, if he thought I wished him dead!"

But even as he spoke he remembered that he had once cursed his brother, and had used the very words "I wish he were dead!"

If it was upon this hasty expression that Smerdon had acted, then he, too, was a murderer.

He left Belmont an hour after the letter had arrived, and so, traveling as above described, stood outside Father Neumann's house on the night of the fifth day.

The priest answered the door himself, and as he did so he put his finger upon his lip.

"Are you the friend from England that is expected?" he asked.

"Yes," Penlyn said, speaking low in answer to the sign for silence. "He still lives?"

"He lives; but his hours draw to a close. Had you not come now you would not have found him alive."

"Let me see him at once."

"Come. His mother is with him."

He followed the Cure into a room sparsely furnished, and of unpolished pine wood; a room on which there was no carpet and but little furniture; and there he saw the dying form of Philip Smerdon.

Kneeling by the bedside, and praying while she sobbed bitterly, was a lady whom Lord Penlyn knew to be Smerdon's mother.

She rose at his entrance, and brushed the tears from her eyes.

"You have come in time to see him die," she said, while her frame was convulsed with sobs. "He has been expecting you. He said he could not pass away until he had seen you."

Penlyn said some words of consolation to her, and then he asked:

"Is he conscious?"

The poor mother leant over the bed and spoke to him, and he opened his eyes.

"Your friend has come, Philip," she said.

A light came into his eyes as he saw Penlyn standing before him, and then in a hollow voice he asked her to leave them alone.

"I have something to say to him," he said, "and the time is short."

"Yes," he said when she was gone, and speaking faintly in answer to Penlyn, who said he had come as quickly as possible, "yes, I know it. I expected you. And now that you are here can you bring yourself to say that you forgive me?"

For one moment the other hesitated, then he said: "I forgive you. May heaven do so likewise."

"Ah! that is it—it is that that makes death terrible! But listen! I must speak at once. I have but a short time more. This is my last hour, I feel it, I know it!"

"Do not distress yourself with speaking. Do not think of it now."

"Not think of it! When have I ever forgotten it! Come closer, listen! I thought he had come between you and Miss Raughton forever. I never dreamed of the magnanimity he showed in that letter. Then I determined to kill him—I thought I could do it without it being known. I did not go to the 'Chase' on that morning, but, instead, tracked him from one place to another, disguised in a suit of workman's clothes that I had bought some time ago for a fancy dress ball. I thought he would never leave his club that night; but at last he came out, and then—then! I grow weaker!—I did it."

Penlyn buried his head in his hands as he listened to this recital, and once he made a sign as though begging Smerdon to stop, but he did not heed him.

"I had with me a dagger I bought at Tunis, a long, sharp knife of the kind used by the Arabs, and I loosened it from its sheath as we entered the park, he walking a few steps ahead of me, and, evidently, thinking deeply. Between the lamps I quickened my pace and passed him, and then, turning round suddenly, I seized him by the coat and stabbed him to the heart. It was but the work of a moment and he fell instantly, exclaiming only as he did so, 'Murderer!' Then to give it the appearance of a murder committed for theft, I stooped over him and wrenched his watch away, and as I took it I saw that he was dead. The watch is at Occleve Chase, in the lowest drawer of my writing desk."

"Tell me no more," Penlyn said, "tell me no more."

"There is no more—only this, that I am glad to die. My life has been a curse since that day, I am thankful it is at an end. Had Guffanta not hurled me on to the glacier below, I think I must have taken it with my own hands."

"Guffanta!" Penlyn exclaimed, "is it he then who has done this?"

"It is he! He followed me from England here—in some strange way he was a witness to the murder—we met upon the pass and fought, he taxing me with being a murderer and a thief, and—and—ah; this is the end!"

His eyes closed, and Penlyn saw that his last moment was at hand.

He called gently to Mrs. Smerdon, and she came in and, throwing herself by the side of the bed, took his hand and kissed it as she wept.

The Cure entered at the same time and bent over him, and taking the crucifix from his side, held it up before his eyes.

Once they were fixed upon Penlyn with an imploring glance, and once they rested on his mother, and then they closed forever.

"He is dead!" the priest said, "let us pray for the repose of his soul."

It was a few days afterward that Ida Raughton, when walking up and down the paths at Belmont, heard the sound of carriage wheels in the road outside, and knew that her lover was coming back to her.

He had written from Switzerland saying that Smerdon was dead, and that he should wait to see him buried in the churchyard of St. Christoph—where many other English lay who had perished in the mountains—and he had that morning telegraphed from Paris to tell her that he was coming by the mail, and should be with her in the evening.

She walked swiftly to the house to meet him, but before she could reach it he had come through the French windows of the morning room, and advanced towards her.

"You have heard that he is dead, Ida?" he said, when he had kissed her. "It only remains for me to tell you that he died penitent and regretting his crime. It had weighed heavily upon him, and he was glad to go."

"And you forgave him, Gervase?" she asked.

"Yes. I forgave him. I could not but remember—as I saw him stretched there crushed and dying—that, though he had robbed me of a brother whom I must have come to love, he had sinned for me. Yes, if forgiveness belonged to me, I forgave him."

"Until we meet that brother in another world, Gervase, we have nothing but his memory to cherish. We must never forget his noble character."

"It shall be my constant thought," Penlyn answered, "to shape my life to what he would have wished it to be. And, Ida, so long as I live, his memory shall be second only in my heart to your own sweet self. Come, darling, it is growing late; let us go in."

(The end.)

Fishing by Goose.

Lords and ladies in the olden time used to invent queer kinds of amusement. They were always on the lookout for some novelty, and perhaps they succeeded in adding freshness to their pursuit of pleasure when they resorted to fishing by means of geese. A line with baited hook having been fastened to its leg, the goose was placed in the water, the lords and ladies gay following in a boat to watch the sport. If a pike caught the bait, there was sport indeed, a regular battle royal between bird and fish. During all the splashings and wheelings and floundering, the spectators gave vent to their feelings in cheers and handkerchief-wavings and hand-clappings. The goose was usually victor, and ended the struggle by conveying its prisoner ashore.

If you boast of a contempt for the world, avoid getting into debt. It is giving to gnats the fangs of vipers.

FUN at a GLANCE

A Lesson in Courtesy.

Affable stranger—Kindly tell me what time the 4 o'clock train leaves.

Ticket agent—Well, of all the chump questions! Say, you'd better chase yourself away before the depot falls on you.

Affable stranger—Oh, never mind, if the question irritates you. I just wanted a little information. I'm the new superintendent of the road, you know.—Cleveland Post.

No Cause for Alarm.

Young Fitzbattleax—You see, I don't like to wound a bird, Jones.

Comparing Notes.

"I have made some very interesting discoveries," remarked the scientist. "While I was in the southwestern part of the country I found a building full of strange inscriptions and curious characters."

"That's remarkable,' replied the energetic friend. "I have just had a similar experience."

"Have you been out on an expedition?"

"Yes. I've just got back from a political convention."—Washington Star.

It Might Work.

He—If the women had a vote, every time they tried to hold a rally in favor of their candidate some one would get up a millinery opening with free ice cream soda and break up the meeting. You don't think it would work, do you?

She—It might. It seems to work among the men, when the hated opposition has a saloon opening with free lunch.—Indianapolis Journal.

Varnishing Day.

"Have you been to the exposition of paintings?"

"Had no time; and you?"

"I haven't been, either."

"What shall we do to keep up our reputation in the club as the leading lights in the matter of art criticism?"

"Oh, that is easy enough. I never go myself but say every year: 'The salon is vastly inferior to that of former years' and that suffices."—LeGaulois.

Evidently.

She—Do you know the title that Mr. Astor in England contemplates buying?

He—I think it will be "Lord Howmuch."

Corrected.

"You seem to be in a pensive frame of mind," said the young woman's mother.

"I am. I was thinking of Harold."

"Kindly, I hope?"

"Very kindly. I was just thinking that he is a man of a thousand."

"My dear, you wrong him. He's better than that. He's a man of at least twenty thousand a year."—Boston Globe.

Hard to Manage.

Mrs. Henpeck—My dear, you will make a great mistake if you marry Mr. Meak. He has no beard and wears a wig.

Daughter—What difference does that make?

"Hugh! You try managing a husband with no hair of his own and you'll find out.—New York Weekly.

A Tutor.

Sandford—What did she say when you told her you were a tutor in Yale?

Gay Deceiver.

Angelina—That was a lovely engagement ring you gave me last night, dear; but what do the initials "E. C." mean on the inside? Edwin (who has bestowed the ring before and had it back)—Why—er—that is—don't you know?—that is the way of stamping eighteen carats.—Amusing Journal.

Parents Not to Blame.

"What a thoroughly spoiled youth that young Gridley is. I never saw anybody so filled with conceit. His parents have made a fool of the boy."

"It isn't his parents' fault."

"Well, whose fault is it?"

"Why, you see, he had the misfortune to be the only young man at Shell Beach for a whole week in July."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Cheerful Idiot.

"The sun, if I mistake me not," said the bright boarder, "was the original scorcher."

"While stating that undoubted fact," said the cheerful idiot, "you should not forget to mention that Joshua was the first to make an arrest for scorching."—Indianapolis Journal.

A Bad Mistake.

"Why have Ashley and Miss Gushington broken off?"

"He thought to compliment her by saying that she reminded him of his mother."—Cleveland Leader.

Not Completed.

Bayson (with awful presence of mind)—Wait till I finish. I was going to say she looks a sight like Mrs. Langtry.—Washington Times.

The Professional Instinct.

"Did you hear about that Russian count who wanted to marry Mame Bullion?"

"No; what about him?"

"Why, he used to sit and hold her hand by the hour and yet nobody suspected him."

"Suspected him of what?"

"Why, he isn't a count at all; he's just a manicure artist."—Cleveland Plaindealer.

As Usual.

"Mother—I'm afraid your husband is going to be ill. How did he look this morning at breakfast?

Young Wife—I didn't see him. He was reading the paper.—Harlem Life.

Snubbed the Emperor.

Emperor William of Germany has more palaces, castles and shooting lodges than any sovereign in Europe, but he keeps on gayly adding to their number. Once in a while he finds that his subjects dislike being bled that he may satisfy his mania for new domiciles. When he visited Alsace-Lorraine last year he expressed a wish to have a shooting lodge built at Metzig. He already owns a chateau in that neighborhood, upon which enormous sums have been recently expended. The local authorities of Metzig recently considered the question of expending $50,000 of the public money in building the shooting lodge desired by the emperor. The debate was a lively one, but the proposition was rejected by an overwhelming mapority. The emperor will have to abandon the project or defray the expense of the lodge out of his private funds.

OUR SUNDAY SERMONS

A FEW SUBJECTS FOR ALL TO PONDER OVER.

California Preacher Who Can Compass Practical Things—Power of Love—God Needs the Help of His Instruments—Words of Wisdom.

Love in the Household.

LOVE is the wind, the tide, the waves, the sunshine. Its power is incalculable; it is many horse-power. It never ceases, it never slacks; it can move with the globe without a resting place; it can warm without fire; it can feed without meat; it can clothe without garments; it can shelter without roof; it can make a a paradise without. But, though the wisest men in all ages have labored to publish this force, and every human heart is, sooner or later, more or less made to feel it, yet how little is actually applied to social ends. True, it is the motive power of all successful social machinery; but, as in physics we have made the elements do only a little drudgery for us, steam to take the place of a few horses, wind of a few oars, water of a few cranks and hand mills; as the mechanical forces have not yet been generously and largely applied to make the physical world answer to the ideal, so the power of love has been but meanly and sparingly applied as yet.—Henry D. Thoreau.

Building His Own Church.

Rev. Henry Victor Morgan, pastor of the First Christian Church Society at Alameda, Cal., is building a meeting house with the assistance of several members of his congregation. In labor's garb, with his coat off, his sleeves rolled up and a straw hat on the back of his head, Rev. Mr. Morgan may be seen daily at the corner of San Jose and Park avenues, plying the saw and the hammer in the construction of a house which will be dedicated to God.

Rev. Henry Victor Morgan has been in charge of the Christian flock in this city seven months. He is an earnest, practical man, and believes in building up his congregation by manual and muscular effort, as well as by preaching. The society made arrangements for the erection of a church building several months ago. A splendid site was purchased at the northeast corner of San Jose and Park avenues, facing the city park. The frame structure which Mr. Morgan is erecting will be 32x54 feet in dimensions. It will be used as a meeting house temporarily. During the year Mr. Morgan expects to build his church edifice proper, and the present structure will then be moved to the rear and used as a Sunday school room.

Accept Destiny.

Accept the place the divine Providence has found for you—the society of your contemporaries, the connection of events. Great men have always done so, and confided themselves, childlike, to the genius of their age, betraying their perception that the eternal was stirring at their heart, working through their hands, predominating in all their being. And we are now men, and must accept in the highest mind the same transcendent destiny; and not pinch in a corner, not cowards fleeing before a revolution, but redeemers and benefactors, pious aspirants to the noble clay, plastic under the Almighty effort, let us advance and advance on chaos and the dark.—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

Courage.

The Lord likes courage in his hosts,
Courage to scale the heights of fortressed sin,
To fight the foes that strongly lurk within,
And yet to treat the sinner ever fair;
As object not of battle but of prayer.

Courage to shelter weak ones when oppressed,
E'en when their tyrants are earth's mightiest.
Courage to do what duty says it right,
In no half coward way, but with our might,
This is well pleasing in our General's sight.
—Ram's Horn.

Practical Christianity.

You and I are instruments which God must use to consummate His plans and carry out His inflexible purpose. All-powerful though He may be, He needs your help and mine to hasten the dawning of that perfect day, when the kingdom of Christ shall prevail. The want of sympathy pervades society. We do not know each other. Draw nearer, clasp hands, recognize the struggling soul, the lonely, the ostracized, the fallen. Seek for the good and you will find the good. Discover the best in each soul; resolve that ill-will, fault-finding and hatred shall find no place in your thoughts, speech or actions.

Communion with God.

Worship is communion with God. Communion is that mysterious commingling of souls which makes them one, and gives to each the gifts of the other. We feel it in human love or friendship. It is deeper than words and larger than sympathy. It is the opening and giving of heart to heart. Thus we commune with God. He dwells in us and we in Him. The world fades away. Our sorrows are forgotten. We are uplifted by new aspirations and holy impulses. We go forth into the world again with new light on our faces and new joy in our hearts. We have been with our God.—Rev. W. S. Sayers.

Amen.

I cannot say,
Beneath the pressure of life's cares to-day,
I joy in these;
But I can say
That I had rather walk this rugged way
If Him it please.

I cannot feel
That all is well when darkening clouds conceal
The shining sun;
But then I know
God lives and loves; and say, since it is so,
Thy will be done.

I cannot speak
In happy tones; the tear-drops on my cheek
Show I am sad,
But I can speak
Of grace to suffer with submission meek
Until made glad.

I do not see
Why God should e'en permit some things to be,
When He is love;
But I can see,
Though often dimly, through the mystery,
His hand above.

I do not know
Where falls the seed, that I have tried to sow
With greatest care;
But I shall know
The meaning of each waiting hour below
Sometime, somewhere.

I do not look
Upon the present, nor in nature's book,
To read my fate,
But I do look
For promised blessings in God's Holy Book,
And I can wait.

I may not try
To keep the hot tears back, but hush that sigh,
"It might have been;"
And try to still
Each rising murmur, and to God's sweet will, Respond "Amen."
—Ophelia G. Browning.

Joy of Definite Personal Work.

Helping an individual in time of need is a more real and positive act than helping a whole community. To write a poem, an essay, or a volume, that shall interest and influence thousands, does not give the sense of personal satisfaction to the writer that comes with the consciousness of giving encouragement and cheer to one aching heart or troubled soul that might have fainted or failed but for this stimulus and aid.

Being Forced to Work.

Thank God every morning when you get up that you have something to do that day which must be done, whether you like it or not. Being forced to work, and forced to do your best, will breed in you temperance and self-control, diligence and strength of will, cheerfulness and content, and a hundred virtues which the idle never know.—Charles Kingsley.

The Little Circle in Which He Lives.

Each one of us is bound to make the little circle in which he lives better and happier. Each one of us is bound to see that out of that small circle the widest good may flow. Each one of us may have fixed in his mind the thought that out of a single household may flow the influences that still stimulate the whole commonwealth and the whole civilized world.—Dean Stanley.

Whatever the Temptation.

Be honest with yourself, whatever the temptation; say nothing to others that you do not think, and play no tricks with your own mind. Of all the evil spirits abroad at this hour in the world insincerity is the most dangerous.—James Anthony Froude.

Bits of Things.

Sin is the worst word in any language.

For a man to exert his power in doing good so far as he can is a glorious task.

It is a sin on the part of any Christian not to be a friend of missions.—Van Oosterzee.

It may sometimes cost you a good deal to do right, but it will be sure to cost you more not to do it.

Success in life is not so much a matter of talent or opportunity as of concentration and perseverance.—C. W. Wendte.

I find the great thing in this world is, not so much where we stand as in what direction we are moving.—O. W. Holmes.

Kind words prevent a good deal of that perverseness which rough and imperious usage often produces in generous minds.—Locke.

Speak the truth; let it fall upon the hearts of men with all imparted energy by which the Spirit gives it power, but speak the truth in love.—Rev. William M. Punshon.

You may not be able to leave your children wealth or the inheritance of a great name or eminent social advantages; but you can leave them the results of fidelity and precious memories of devotion to the holy task of trying to make them know what God says to us in the Old and New Testaments, and what he wants us to believe and to do and to be.—Dr. F. A. Noble.

A Dog Star.

When Sheridan was a manager, he even indulged in such catering to the public taste as offering to the public a dog piece, by Reynolds, entitled "The Caravan, or the Driver and His Dog." Of its first presentation it is recorded that Sheridan, after witnessing the performance, suddenly entered the green room, shouting: "Where is he? Where is my guardian angel?" Presuming he meant to congratulate the author, Reynolds replied: "Here I am!" "Pooh," replied Sheridan, "I don't mean you; I mean the dog." Later, one Dignum, who played in the piece, approached Sheridan one night, with woeful countenance, saying: "Sir, there is no guarding against illness. It is truly lamentable to stop the run of a successful play like this; but really——" "Really what?" cried Sheridan, interrupting him. "I am so unwell that I cannot go on longer than to-night." "You!" exclaimed Sheridan; "my good fellow, you terrified me; I thought you were going to say the dog was ill."

Almost all married people are looking for sympathy.

County Fusion.

It will be remembered that at the time of the populist county convention the DAILY in its report of that meeting stated that a committee of that party was appointed to meet a similar committee appointed by the democrats, and endeavor to bring about a fusion of the two parties, so they could unite on one ticket. Both parties appointed their committeemen and meetings were had, which in brief have finally resulted in a complete arrangement that should be satisfactory to both parties. The way to a satisfactory arrangement was made easier, by the democratic indorsement of Joesph Butler for prosecutor, and the populist endorsement of J. M. Robinson for Congress. On the county fusion their offer was to take off all the men on their ticket except the two commissioners. There had been talk of their asking for the place of county assessor, and the commissioner southeast. This was reconsidered, however, and the final agreement, is on the two commissioners. And here came in another change. The populists concluded they did not want their nominee in this, the southwest district, Lyman Lockwood, as many of them believe that he and several more of their would-be leaders, have been voting the republican ticket all the time. So after getting, Mr. Grube's resignation at the hands of the democrats, the populist committee decided to put Lockwood off their ticket and put on E. R. Shoemaker, who made such a good race for the place in the north district two years ago. Mr. Daniels, the democratic candidate in the southeast, had also sent in his resignation, and Mr. Gunsenhouser of the populist party, takes his place. Then, the populists agree to take off all their other candidates, so that they will unite with the democrats in supporting one ticket only. This is the most sensible thing either party could do. There is now so little to divide the two parties, that it would be utter folly to run two tickets. It will secure to the populists the two offices they have always claimed, needed the reforms they proposed to secure, and it will strengthen the democrats on the rest of the ticket. Mr. Gunsenhouser and Mr. Shoemaker are good business men, and will make excellent commissioners, so that the people will be well served in that way. Every democrat should rejoice that the two wings of the party are again united, and the union will secure good men for all the places. We should not forget the patriotism and loyalty of Mr. Daniels and Mr. Grube, who so cheerfully gave up their positions on the ticket in order to secure the reunion of the party and a certain victory for the ticket.

Cheap Money.

Cheap money is talked of a great deal just now. But the fact remains that no one proposes to have any cheap money issued. All money is made and issued by government and all know that the government does not issue cheap money. Those who claim there will be cheap money are invited to tell what party wants it, and how it could be brought about if anyone could be found who did want it.

Political Notice.

Democratic Commiteemen are notified that George Lanning, Auburn is ready to supply them with speakers at any date or place they may desire Dont be backward in calling on him as he has plenty of them and good ones at his command.

Backed Out.

Speaking of Mr. Harris, who spoke at the Opera House here Saturday evening reminds us of a little incident that happened a few days before when he spoke at Angola. On his arrival there, he was told that Cal. Husselman, a farmer of DeKalb county was to speak there for free silver, to the Bryan Club at the same hour that he, Harris, was to address the McKinley Club. This gave Harris an idea. So he proposed to hold a joint debate with Mr. Husselman. When this word was brought to Husselman he sent word back that Harris could not send a challenge too quick, and that he was ready for the discussion. Harris and his friends consulted a few minutes and then backed squarely down. Cal. wasn't the opponent he was looking for.

Arkansas election Monday gave a Democratic majority of about 70,000, electing the entire ticket. The biggest Democratic majority ever given by the state before was 40,000 in 1892.

Ladies Coming.

Auburn to Have a Big Political Meeting Tuesday Evening Sept. 15th.

Frank VanAuken, the twelfth congressional district presidential elector, will address the democrats of DeKalb County at Auburn on Tuesday evening Sept. 14th. The ladies drum corps of Angola will also be here and furnish martial music. Let everyone interested turn out and hear one of the most interesting speeches ever delivered in Auburn. Bryan clubs from surrounding towns are invited to attend in a body.

Joseph M. Butler

The democrats of the two counties met at Angola yesterday, and endorsed Joseph Butler for prosecutor, he having been already nominated by the populists. The complete union of the two parties in the two counties, will doubtless make his election sure, especially as the republican candidate is an unknown man and not a very popular one. Mr. Butler has served as prosecutor for three years, very satisfactorily, and in that case he was also elected by a combined vote of democrats and populists.

McKinley's Prayer

Our Father who art in England, Rothchilds' be thy name; Thy kingdom come to America, Thy will be done in the United States as it is in England. Give us this day our Bonds in gold (but not in silver). Give us plenty of laboring men's votes to keep monopoly in power (and its friend in office).

O, Father, we know that we have done many things wrong. We know O, Father, that we have robed the honest and brought distress to ma ny famly. We know it was wrong to water our R. R. Stocks, But thou knowest we made money by it. And now, O our Fathers in Wall street. Thou knowest that we are above politics, it is the same with us whether Democrats or Republicans are in power. For thou knowest we are able to sway all parties in our favor, And now, O, ye gold standard Lords, lead us not in the way of Strikes, and above all deliver us from the knights of Labor, and then shall we have the Kingdom, the Bonds and interest power, and gold until the Republic shall end, AMEN

Gold Coming

Large shipments of gold keep coming back now from Europe. They have got over their scare about free silver, especially since Bryan and others have explained how it will be brought about without disturbing business relations. As the prospect for Bryan's election improves, business, improves. England is beginning again to buy our cotton and the price of cotton is rising. And these new purchases are calling our gold home to pay for it. They are sending gold too to buy our wheat. And it is also noticed that England sends gold to pay her purchases, the same as Mexico does. In fact all countries do this and keep their silver at home for the use of their own people.

PENSIONS.

We talked with a pensioner the other day, and found he had been stuffed to believe that should free silver win, he would receive his pension in 50-cent dollars. This is a new form of the old gag, to scare pensioners into voting the republican ticket. As we have often shown, there will be no 50-cent dollars. All dollars are issued by the goverment and each dollar is made as good as any other dollar. What object could it be for government to make cheap dollars.

Bell's Letter.

Republicans are claiming that the letter to Hon. R. C. Bell that we publish is a forgery. We have just talked with Mr. Leedy, traveling agent of the Ft. Wayne Journal, and he says, he knows that Mr. Bell received it through the postoffice properly postmarked and that it was not got up in Ft. Wayne, as the republicans claim. The Journal of this, Wednesday, morning, says;

The letter was received by Senator Bell in the regular course of postal delivery. It bore the postmark of New York. Mr. Bell had never seen the letter and knew nothing of it until it came into his possession. He does not know J. Francis Forsythe and had never heard of him. He did what any honest man would do. He protected himself by giving immediate publicity to the overtures of a person who was seeking to bribe him. That left no possibility of a doubt as to where he stands. Silence would have been an invitation to Mr. Forsythe to proceed further. Senator Bell does not relish the compliment implied in the letter, but no one will question his wisdom in is giving immediate and positive notice that a mistake had been made by Mr. J. Francis Forsythe.

A Lie Nailed

—Dr. Nusbaum is being misrepresented by several persons, who are peddleing a tale that he is only a free silver man till after election. Nothing could be further from the truth. He is one of the very first men to espouse the cause of free silver, and was the first man in DeKalb county to join the free silver league. When the first free silver conference was held at Indianapolis he was the only delegate that went from this district. Campaign workers are getting pretty low when they will peddle lies like this.

Then and Now.

The Waterloo Press says:

We know of half a dozen ex-soldiers who have "made up their minds" to leave the republican party and vote for Bryan and Robinson. Has comradeship of the war come to such a low order as this? If for no other reason every ex-soldier should vote for Maj. McKinley and J. D. Leighty because they were comrades of the war and they have a personal interest in common with every ex-soldier. A comradeship less than this is worth nothing, and it is foolishness to claim any. The experience of the pension system during democratic administrations should be convincing, and cheaper money will only reduce the purchasing power of pensions already granted.

This calls for two or three remarks:

1. Comradeship of the war! Comrades should stand together as Comrade Willis stood by Comrade Hartman when the latter was asking the nomination for judge. No comment needed.

2. The experience of the pension system during democratic administration. But Bro. Willis knows, as all old soldiers know, that pensioners have fared as well under the two democratic administrations as under every other. He cannot name a pensioner who did not get what the proper construction of the law gave him.

3. As to "cheaper money reducing the purchasing power of pensions already granted. There is absolutely nothing in this. If there is; we invite the Press to show proof. There will be no cheaper money, than we have now, no matter, what party gets into power. No party now before the people, proposes to take away the par value of the various kinds of money now in use. We invite attention to this point. And even if there should be "a cheaper dollar" it would not be paid to a soldier. His pension is an obligation sacred in the eyes of all parties, and would be paid in full.

Gold and Silver.

We are always glad to make plainer, if we can, any statement we have made, and that anyone has failed to understand. So we name these points.

SILVER DOLLARS.

We find a few readers who deny that silver dollars are legal tender and some of them quote the Zonker-Nickey lawsuit in proof that they are not. Geo. Link bought the timber for the Nickey company, and in the progress of the suit that followed, it became necessary to make a tender of the money in payment. He on the advice of the attorneys in the case went and got the money $2.40 in gold and the rest less than $5, in silver, as they thought silver could be a legal tender for only $5. They made a tender of this. The attorneys gave as a reason, that they were absolutely certain that gold was a legal tender, and had never looked it up, and had not time in this case. So this proves nothing. But the fact remains, that the laws on the U. S. Statute books distinctly states that silver dollars are a full legal tender for any sum. Silver change, like halves and quarters, are legal tender for only $10.

GOLD CERTIFICATES.

There are receipts for gold, issued by the government in bills of not less than $20. They represent gold deposited in the treasury either coined or in bars, and the gold so deposited is kept on hand to redeem them. The law providing for these gold certificates does not say they are legal tender, but the government makes them so in practice, by receiving them in payment for duties on imports and other public dues. When the gold in the treasury goes below 100 millions, no gold certificates are issued.

SILVER CERTIFICATES.

There also are treasury receipts of the same character as the gold certificates. They are receipts for so many silver dollars deposited in the treasury and these silver dollars are kept on hand all the time in quantities sufficient to redeem these certificates. As in the case of the gold certificates, they aer not made legal tender in the law, but are really so because the government receives them for customs due, internal revenue taxes and all other public dues.

And now the reader can easily see that all the above kinds or money are legal tender, and the reason for it. The reader can see further, the reason why the silver dollar is worth the same as the gold dollar, and is likely always to remain its equal whether we have free coinage or not. It is because the government makes no discrimination, but takes one sort of dollars as readily at 100 cents, as another sort.

His Services Asked

THE HON. R. C. BELL RECEIVES A WALL STREET LETTER.

Invited to Abandon the Cause of Free Silver and flock with the Gold Bugs—Text of the letter.

(Fort Wayne Journal.)

The following letter, which explains itself, was received by the Hon. R. C. Bell, and was by him given to the Journal to publish:

No. 711 Wall Street,
NEW YORK, AUG. 19, 1896.

The Hon. R. C. Bell, Fort Wayne, Ind.:

Dear Sir—The committee of political education of Wall street, this city, to which the undersigned has the honor to belong, having determined that each member should write personally to at least one or more prominent party leaders of the silver cause, your name has been handed to me. You are described as of a fair mind and large influence in your state. I therefore address you in the hope that you may be persuaded from your present course, for you are leading the lower classes, the laborers, artisans, mechanics and agriculturists of your state into a step which will cause them great distress.

We whose business it is to study finances, and are therefore capable of determining such questions, know there is at this time TOO MUCH MONEY. Millions are now ready in this city to be loaned on call, with good collateral such as government gold bonds, where it is really needed, at remunerative rates. Your methods are such as to frighten all money lenders (for nothing is so easily scared as money). No one can tell what laws your candidate (if elected) may suggest; while even now the laws are all against our people. We are forced to loan money at such rates as we can get. If we cannot get 10 per cent, we can take 9; if we cannot get 9 we take 8 and in peaceful times even lower, and it is difficult even then to keep our money at work. But what do your workingmen say? If they cannot get a dollar a day they refuse to work, while they ought to take 75 cents or even 50 cents so that we may keep them at work You ought to teach them that $1 per day on a GOLD basis is enormous pay in this country; no gold country pays more than 50 cents for labor, while here living is the cheapest of all countries, providing the lower classes will live as they should live. They are really extravagant; they buy meat four or five days in the week; they even indulge often in pie, which is no kind of food to be enjoyed by working people and does them no good. Rice is one of the most healthy and nourishing of foods, it is CHEAP and can be raised in endless quantities, but workmen avoid it as a general food. They eat wheat bread when rye is much more suitable. These ideas grow out of wrong education, which you, my dear sir, are assisting, only to their future disaster.

Mr. Hanna, if he wins the election (and all intelligent men of the east hope and believe he will), will certainly inaugurate a much better system for the lower classes. He will try to take the money question and tariff out of politics, which should have been done long since. The law governing finances can be safely left with the national banks, insurance and railroad corporations—who through a standing committee with some well known and honorable financier such at Mr. J. P. Morgon or Mr. August Belmont, as chairman, who could formulate and have passed directly such laws on money as would be safe and useful for the whole people. All laws governing the tariff could be handled in the same way by a committee appointed by the great manufacturing and industrial enterprises, and with such honorable and charitable men as Mr. Rockefeller or Mr. Carnegie as chairman of such committee, the most wise and useful tariff laws could be speedily put in force, not bothering those engaged in agriculture or other rural work, or exciting them by frequent elections, as is now the case.

We have talked with Mr. Hanna as to many things which are now wronging the lower classes and diverting them from their labor. He thinks there are too many holidays and especially excursions to somewhat long distances, where these people meet and exchange exciting converse upon subjects such as we have referred to, and which they are not capable of understanding; besides this they should be at work; they spend too much money, often going to a hotel and laying out an entire day's income on one dinner. Gentlemen like Mr. Astor or Mr. Rockefeller, who by application and economy have amassed a competence, never would think of spending a day's income for one meal. How can workmen expect to indulge in luxuries, idle away their time, and prosper? We believe for their own good, if some beneficent law could be passed which would limit excursions and confine the lower classes to the township in which they live, they would be much better off at the end of the year. These local laws, we presume, must be put into effect by each state, say through the governors, but the governors could be appointed by committees of local bankers and manufacturers resident within the state and we think if the present election is carried by the honest people and Mr. Hanna, that by 1900 the people themselves would unanimously vote for such changes in their state constitutions as would relieve them from the turmoil and worry over elections. Committees could act quickly and noiselessly. In fact, bankers, money people and manufacturers are only too happy to be let alone, once they have good laws and good men in control.

The people west should be impressed with the fact that our people here can take care of themselves, come what may. We are concerned for only the classes that labor, whether in the factory, on the railroads, or on the farms. It is costing us a great deal of time besides several millions of dollars to teach these lessons, and they should realize that we cannot contantly subscribe millions of money at presidential elections for their cause, which outlay by agitations is constantly increased. In talking with Mr. Hanna recently he said he would probably need twenty-five millions of dollars from our city before the polls closed in November, caused by such men as you and Mr. Bryan, but we think that if treble the amount is really needed, our generous people will supply it to keep the ignorant people from committing political suicide. Everyone at the last meeting when Mr. Hanna was here agreed to stand by him. Our newspapers are loyal to the people; they are terribly mad, however, at Mr. Bryan for his speech at Madison Square Garden, and we should not be surprised if some of them indulged in violent language should Mr. Bryan speak here again. Mr Hanna has seen some of the most, influential owners of these papers since however, and we think they will still be lenient. Our efforts will be towards kindness to our fellow men. We invite you in all kindness and with well wishes personally, trusting you may aid in quieting your people. We are willing to aid you financially if necessary and are perfectly willing to trust you without fear. Mr. Hanna in many cases does not allow our treasure to pay at once; he thinks guarantees are good enough until the poll shows the actual result in the town or precinct, but in your case if you will make known your actual needs for the beginning of the work (providing you agree to change your views in accordance with our other followers in your state belonging to the honest gold party) we will endeavor to provide you will all necessary funds. You need not answer this personally as some of Mr. Hanna's agents will visit your city soon and will surely call on you. It is not our intention to have any one committed by letter. I assure you that our work is telling in the east; most of our manufacturers have converted their employers, who are rapidly joining our clubs. There is not much trouble once the way is shown them.

Wishing every success to you if you elect with us, and with best wishes personally, I am.

Yours sincerely.
J. FRANCIS FORSYTHE.

Caricaturists in depicting a German are in the habit of putting a big pipe in his mouth. The pipe is national, indeed, but the Germans as a nation are far from being the greatest smokers. They do not smoke more than Frenchmen, Russians, Swedes or Hungarians. The men of the United States, and the men of Auburn are the most inveterate smokers in the world. A portion of the men of the latter place, including the territory within 50 miles surrounding, smoke E. M Bishop's celebrated 5-cent DINGER CIGAR.

We publish this week a series of comic pictures copied from various eastern papers, in order to give our farmer readers an idea as to what the different eastern editors think a farmer is. And these pictures help to set off some good reading matter filled in between them.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dimondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesi ation in recommending Dr King's New Discovery as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife While I was pastor of the Baptist church Rices Junction she was brought down with pneumonia succeeding lagrippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interuption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in working and highly satisfactory in results." Trial bottle free at Robbins & McCord's drug store Regular size 50c and $1:00.

Petoskey Excursion.

Starting from Butler, Sept. 1, I put my family aboard a train for Kendallville and I followed on my wheel. We were joined by Fred. Gengnagel and wife and left Kendallville on the second section of the excursion train, consisting of ten coaches and a baggage car, well filled. Reached Grand Rapids at 8-30 and after an hour and a half to see the city, started again. From Kendallville to Petoskey is 305 miles, and from Grand Rapids, 195 miles. Part of our way was through forests of scrub timber with green fringes of pine coming into view as the dawn came on us. We looked anxiously for a grove of pine timber, but the woodman's ax had been there and everywhere and no pine forests were to be seen. We reached Petoskey at 7:30. We secured a good boarding place, which as usual at Petoskey was filled with invalids. But we were greeted everywhere by, "Well, you are not here for your health." The population is a little over 2,000, is half-moon shaped on a bay of the same name, and is made up of a series of terraces, rising one above another, till a height of 300 feet is reached. The country back recedes in undulating waves of hill and valley. It is regularly laid out and consists almost entirely of hotels and boarding houses, no street railways, and one has to climb the hills or stay at the bottom. In the afternoon we took a ride around the beautiful bay on a little steamer and visited, Bay View, Spring Grove, and other points of interest. The distance around the bay is about nine miles and is almost a continuous line of summer residences and small cottages, many very fine summer residences are grouped here and there. Boats ply between all points along the bay and a steam railroad runs around the bay stopping at all points every half hour also running trains to Mackinac City distant 35 miles every few hours. The whole populace seem to be given up to health, producing recreation, walking, driving, riding and rowing, the only shortage being a lack of the usual crowd on wheels, which the hilly, sandy roads render neary useless. On the morning of the 3d our friends went to Mackinaw Island and the Soo. We started on the return trip southward in daylight. We had every opportunity to see the 195 miles of north woods. Large portions of it are pine barrens from which the timber has been removed and fire afterward, destroyed what was left, leaving a blackened ruin, Small straggling villages here and there exert themselves to live. Kalkaska, Reed City, Cadillac, Big rapids and Howard City are all thriving, business centers and exhibit about all the life visible along the 195 mile line. The land as we come south improves, and many good farms are seen. We reached Grand Rapids, a city of over 40,000 at 5:20 p. m. and stopped over night with a former resident of Butler, John Shook, and enjoyed a very pleasant visit. On Thursday morning we took the Lake Shore train to Kalamazoo passing through a fine faining county. At Otsego I placed my folks on the M. C. train and I started home awheel over sand hills and swamp, finding the run a very hard one, and spending 2½ hours in 16 miles, but got in ahead of the slow train on which were my folks. Stopped at Kendall and visited over Sunday attending church and Sundry school. Monday I went to Kalamazoo on my wheel, walking nearly half the time, and took the Grand Rapid train for home.

The Silo.

We went out Monday to see Cal Husselman fill his silo with ensilage. It was a thing utterly new in our experience, and no doubt so to many even of farmers. His silo is a huge tub 24 feet high and 15 feet in diameter, and when filled will be air tight. The green corn is run through a fodder cutter that cuts up stalks, green ears and all, and an elevator carries it up into the tub, where the men pack it. In time it goes through a sort of sweat and then is ready to feed. If properly cared for, it will keep for years, and makes excelent feed for cows and other stock. We brought home some of it, and have it in a quart can in our office, and will be glad to show our little "silo" to any farmers who call.

Surprise Party.

Sheriff Stroh and wife were invited to a surprise party last evening at the residence of John Hornberger east of town. It was in honor of Mrs. Hornberger birthday, and eighty-two of their friends gathered there so suddenly that she was completely surprised. They had a big supper and bushels of it left over, and all had a happy time. It was a regular old-fashioned farmer's gathering.

The Club.

At the Bryan Club last evening, there was more genuine enthusiasm then we have seen for many a year. There were four short but exceedingly good speeches. The first was by Hon. S. S. Shutt, and he was followed by Cal. Husselman, and he by Dr. Shook, of Spencerville. This filled the program, but there came so many calls for Hon. D. D. Moody, that he responded in a telling speech of about ten minutes. Mr. Shutt's speech was a powerful business talk, the earnestness of which was unqestioned. Every voter in the county should hear him. Mr. Husselman, too, made many excellent points, and is besides, a capital story teller. Each speaker called out abundant applause all through.

Deveny-Walter

At the home of the bride's grandparents Mr. and Mrs. Walter, near St. John occurred the marriage of Wanda Walter to Fred. S. Deveny Sunday, Rev. W. L. Meese officiating. HARRIS

Addison Harris an attorney of Indianapolis made a republican speech at the Opera House Saturday evening. His audience was quite a large one, nearly as large as the afternoon meeting of Mr. Robinson. His speech, was fairly able and not extreme, and therefore did not surprise anyone. There was but little applause except when he brought in several good jokes, when there was considerable cheering. But he got off one that was innocently taken as a smutty one and the few ladies present looked at the floor in silence. Mr. Harris spent most of his time in going over many things that were already well understood. He got off the old cry about the danger of having a fifty-cent dollar. He ought to know what every Auburn voter knows that we already have just that kind of a dollar, but that it goes equal to any gold dollar in all lines of business.

THE GRAND ARMY ENCAMPMENT IN ST. PAUL

1861 1896

FULLY 100,000 people attended the thirtieth national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic at St. Paul. The encampment this year was one of the most successful ever held. Cheap railroad rates, cool, pleasant weather and a good program of entertainment combined to make the meeting especially attractive to the veterans of the army and navy, and thousands of the gallant old boys took advantage of this favorable chance to spend their annual outing where they could renew their old friendships and talk over the memories of the days of '61.

St. Paul was decked out in her handsomest attire, the decorations being both pleasing and appropriate. From every housetop in the saintly city floated the red, white and blue banner that extended a greeting to the veterans, while across the streets and up and down the wide avenues of the residence portion, and from top to dome of the big office buildings, in all manner of designs, could be seen the national colors.

The train bearing Commander-in-Chief

COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF WALKER.

Walker and his staff did not arrive until 11 o'clock Monday night. The regular program, however, was gone through with. So enraptured was the General with the scene and the animated colors of the decorations that he for the moment forgot that he was in the midst of a crowd of curious hundreds, and did not heed the words of Capt. McCarthy, commander of the department of Minnesota, who stood at the entrance to the Hotel Ryan to escort him inside. Mrs. John A. Logan, without whom no encampment has seemed complete to the old veterans, was there and witnessed the parades and took part in all the encampment receptions. As they idolized her warrior husband, so also the old soldiers admire her, and her greeting was a warm one.

Formal Program.

The formal program of the encampment was begun Monday evening at 8:30, when a reception was given at Hotel Ryan to the Commander-in-Chief and Mrs. Walker by the citizens' committee and citizens of St. Paul. The hotel was gayly decorated for the occasion, and several thousand persons shook the hand of the Commander. At the same hour at the State Capitol there was a reception to the Grand Army, the Women's Relief Corps and Sons and Daughters of Veterans. Mrs. Marie Hazenwinkle, president of the Minnesota Women's Relief Corps, was in charge of this reception. It continued until 12 o'clock, and it is estimated that at least 30,000 veterans passed through the capitol during the evening. The scene about the women's headquarters at the Kittson mansion was animated.

VETERANS ARRIVING IN ST. PAUL.

The principal spectacle of Tuesday was the parade of the naval veterans and the ex-prisoners of war, escorted by the Third United States Infantry, which was reviewed from the Ryan Hotel by Commander-in-Chief Walker. Tuesday afternoon took place the reunion of Minnesota troops at the State Capitol at 1 o'clock, and at Fort Snelling, where they were entertained by Col. Page, commandant. Tuesday evening the women of the citizens' committee held an open-air reception at Summit Park and Summit avenue. On the main platform at Summit Park were stationed Gen. Walker and his staff and a few of the distinguished guests.

Wednesday at 10 o'clock the grand parade of the Grand Army of the Republic started, and this event was looked forward to with great expectation by all. The parade was under command of Commander-in-Chief Walker, and it is estimated that there were 30,000 veterans in line.

The official order of march was as follows:

First Division—Veteran Signal Corps. Departments of Illinois, Wisconsin and Pennsylvania.
Second Division—Departments of Ohio and New York.
Third Division—Departments of Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Jersey, California, Maine, Rhode Island, New Hampshire, Vermont, Potomac, Virginia, North Carolina.
Fourth Division—Departments of Maryland, Nebraska, Michigan, Iowa and Indiana.
Fifth Division—Departments of Colorado, Wyoming, Kansas, Delaware, Missouri and Oregon.

HEADQUARTERS WOMAN'S G. A. R. COMMITTEES.

Sixth Division—Departments of Kentucky, West Virginia, South Dakota, Washington, Alaska, Arkansas, New Mexico, Utah, Tennessee.
Seventh Division—Departments of Louisiana, Mississippi, Florida, Montana, Texas, Idaho, Arizona, Georgia, Alabama, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Indian Territory.
Eighth Division—Department of Minnesota.

The reviewing stand was at Smith Park. When the Commander-in-Chief reached the stand a salute of seventeen guns was fired and the national colors were displayed on the flagstaff. The colors carried by departments and posts saluted the reviewing officer.

The lady visitors to the encampment were handsomely entertained by the fair sex of St. Paul, and elaborate arrangements had been made with this end in view. One of the unique features was a ladies' drive, which took place Thursday morning and was one of the novelties of the reunion. Three hundred carriages were used for the occasion and they made a procession nearly two miles long—the pageant being a very picturesque spectacle.

Story of the Order.

Maj. B. F. Stephenson was the founder of the Grand Army of the Republic and Decatur, Ill., was the place of the first meeting. The idea originated further back than that, however. During Sherman's expedition to Meridian in February, 1864, Stephenson and Chaplain W. J. Rutledge were tentmates. The former then proposed the formation, when all the boys were mustered out, of such an organization as the Grand Army has grown to be. The two talked it over and planned a good deal during the war and did not forget not stop their planning when the war had closed. Considerable correspondence passed between Stephenson and Rutledge, and they met in Springfield in March, 1866, to compile a ritual for the proposed order. The first post was organized in Decatur in the following month—April 6, 1866—by Stephenson. The first State convention was held in Springfield July 12 of the same year. As commander-in-chief Dr. Stephenson issued a general order on Oct. 31, calling for the first national convention of the Grand Army of the Republic. The convention met at Indianapolis Nov. 20, and representatives were present from Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, Wisconsin, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Iowa, Kentucky, Indiana and the District of Columbia. The convention added the words "sailors" to the Springfield constitution. All soldiers and sailors of the United States army, navy or marine corps who served between April 12, 1861, and April 9, 1865, and were honorably discharged, and members of such State regiments as were called into active service were made eligible to membership. It was also provided that no person who had ever borne arms against the United States should be eligible.

Politics was responsible for the first setback received by the G. A. R. In 1866 the disputes between President Johnson and the majority in Congress were the means of greatly hindering the growth of the body. Political disputes also caused such great disorder in the post rooms that many members withdrew. The army leaders realized the injury that was done and took steps to counteract it. One of these steps was the addition to the declaration of principles that "this association does not design to make nominations for office, or to use its influence as a secret organization for partisan purposes." During the next year political discussions were barred from its meetings.

Another drawback was the grade system of membership, which was tried for two years. There were three grades during that time—those of the "recruit," the "soldier" and the "veteran." The recruits had no voice, and could not have until two months' membership, when they could become soldiers, who transacted the business. After six months in the second grade, the soldiers could become veterans, who alone were eligible to department and national offices.

When politics had been banished and the grade system had been thrown out the army began to grow at a wonderful rate. There are now more than 7,800 posts and about 400,000 men. In 1873 the number was 27,100; in 1878 it was 31,016; in 1883 it was 215,446; in 1888 it was 372,960; in 1889 it was 397,974, and in 1890 it was 409,484. This appears to be the high membership mark. In June, 1893, the number was 397,223, and it has fallen slightly below that since.

CONCERNING THE CROPS.

Government Reports of Their Condition in Many States.

The reports as to the condition of the crops throughout the country and the general effect of the weather on the growth, cultivation and harvest of same as made by the directors of the several climate and crop sections, show that the past week has been very favorable for farm work, especially threshing, which has been greatly retarded by the rains of previous weeks. Plowing for fall seeding has progressed favorably, although portions of the middle Atlantic States, Kansas and Oklahoma need general rains to put the soil in condition. Some winter wheat has been sown in Ohio, Michigan and Missouri, and also in New England and the middle Atlantic States, but in the last-named section but little seeding has yet been done, owing to dry conditions of soil. Cotton picking has made rapid progress, and all reports indicate that the crop of this year will be secured at an unusually early date. In Arkansas the whole crop will be gathered by Oct. 15, and in Texas the greater part will be picked by that date, while in the eastern portion of the cotton belt picking will be completed much earlier, in Georgia by Sept.

JOHN C. LINEHAN.

15, and some have already completed picking in Mississippi. As compared with the previous week the general condition of cotton remains unchanged, the outlook for top crop being very poor. Much corn has been cut and the late crop is maturing rapidly, although somewhat retarded by cool weather in Ohio, Iowa and Missouri. While the bulk of the crop will soon be safe from frost its quality would be better if no frost occurred within three or four weeks. In Tennessee, Indiana and Pennsylvania the bulk of the tobacco has been housed and cutting is progressing rapidly in Ohio, Kentucky, Virginia, Maryland and New York. Drought conditions in Southern New Jersey, Western Tennessee and in portions of Maryland, North Carolina, Alabama and Louisiana still continue. Light frosts occurred in New England, New York, generally in the upper lake region and in North Dakota and Nebraska, causing but little damage.

The 1,000 or more ex-railroad employes of Cincinnati who have been on the blacklist for participation in the Debs strike and who have been unable since to secure employment have been called to meet next Friday evening to take action to induce the railroad companies to reinstate them.

the appointment of ex-Gov. David R. Francis, of Missouri, as his successor. Mr. Smith resigned because he differs with the administration on the question of supporting Bryan. The Georgian is a Bryan man. His successor is a Democratic gold man.

Francis is 46 years of age, is a native of Kentucky and a Washington University graduate. He entered mercantile life as a clerk in St. Louis when 20 years old, later went into the commission business on his own account and became successful. In 1884 he was president of the St. Louis Merchants' Exchange and the next year was elected Mayor of St. Louis. In 1888 he was elected Governor of Missouri and served one term—four years. When President Cleveland was making up his Cabinet four years ago Francis was slated for Secretary of the Interior, but had to give way to Smith.

make. He is better suited to the purpose of the British conquerors of the country than Said Khalid would have been. The latter entertained odd notions of being a real sultan, and the British do not like real sultans. Dispatches from the island say the people are pleased with the new sultan, which is quite as easy to imagine, inasmuch as the sultan has nothing to do with the people or the people with the sultan. The inhabitants of Zanzibar were pretty well convinced by the recent bombardment that whatever the English thought good would be best for them, and Mohammed bin Seyyid will doubtless rule acceptably to the people and the British war ships in the bay.

VOICE OF VERMONT.

Republicans Elect Their Entire State Ticket by Great Pluralities.

Vermont has declared for Josiah Grout, Republican, for Governor and for the Republican State ticket entire by a majority that equaled the prediction of the most confident Republican manager. The total vote cast was by far the largest in the history of the State. The Senate will be almost, if not unanimously, Republican. There were some close fights for the election or county officers, but, generally speaking, the Republicans swept everything. No particular part or section of the State can be selected from which to draw a lesson, as the figures show the same everywhere, tremendous Republican gains even over the figures of two years ago, which were thought to be phenomenal.

John Dempsie, who lived near Clarinda, Iowa, had for some months been paying court to Miss Mary Kellogg, daughter of Farmer Kellogg, who lives near Logan, Iowa. The other day Dempsie called and pressed his suit, saying he would kill himself if Miss Kellogg refused him. This she did. He went to the barn and blew his brains out. He used a 38-caliber revolver. The ball entered the right temple.

BRYAN IN OHIO.

BRYAN'S COLUMBUS SPEECH.

William J. Bryan addressed an audience of 30,000 people on the Capitol grounds in Columbus, Ohio, the other night. On account of the size of his audience, Mr. Bryan adopted a novel method of speaking, talking to sections of the crowd alternately from each of the four sides of the platform. Even then not more than a tenth of the people could hear him. He was introduced by Allen G. Thurman, son of the "Old Roman," who has been fighting for free silver in Ohio for several years. Mr. Bryan spoke as follows:

"Ladies and Gentlemen: This is the largest audience to which I have ever tried to speak. I have had occasion to talk where the audience filled the house, but I never had occasion to talk where the audience filled all outdoors. If you all vote as you are now shouting, I don't see how there can be any question about the triumph of free silver in the State of Ohio.

"We have entered upon a campaign which means much to the American people. If our opponents speak truly when they describe what will, in their judgment, be the effect of free coinage, then the success of the Chicago ticket would certainly be a calamity to the country. If, on the other hand, we speak the truth when we describe to you the effects of a gold standard continued, then the maintenance of the gold standard until foreign nations come to our relief is an evil which cannot be contemplated by those who love their country. We have begun an unceasing warfare against the gold standard. The Republican party, without declaring the gold standard is a good thing, has declared that the gold standard must be maintained. I call your attention to the fact that no party in the history of this country has ever in a national convention commended the gold standard. Its effects are so bad that no party has dared to uphold it."

Here Mr. Bryan went from the front of the platform to the side, first excusing himself to the audience in front as follows:

"Excuse me for one moment, and perhaps by making them hear me on the other side I will be able to bring order out of confusion. If you people here will be as still as you are now for a little while I will come back to you."

Mr. Bryan then spoke from the side of the platform, saying:

"I desire to impress upon your minds the fact that the enemy we are fighting in this campaign is an enemy which has never gone into an open battle. The advocates of the gold standard have never dared submit the gold standard to the arbitrament of a ballot. Every step that has been taken has been taken by stealth and without the approval of the American people.

Demonetization of Silver.

"When silver was demonetized in 1873 the people had not discussed it, and persons who were members of Congress and voted upon the measure testified that they did not understand that the bill demonetized silver. When the crime was discovered, and the American people attempted to restore silver to its ancient place by the side of gold, the opponents of free coinage forced the Bland act upon Congress as a compromise, and as soon as the Bland act went into force the enemies of free silver proceeded to repeal the Bland act and left nothing in its place. But the silver sentiment grew until 1890, and in that year the opponents of free coinage, being afraid of the passage of a free-coinage bill, secured another compromise, which was known as the Sherman law.

"In the support of that measure Senator Sherman made a speech, and in the course of that speech he went on to say that we required more than $42,000,000 new money every year to keep pace with population and industry, and he advocated that measure on the ground that it gave to the people more money; and yet in his 'Recollections,' published only a few months ago, you will find that Senator Sherman there says that he was in favor of the Sherman law simply to prevent free coinage, and that he was willing to vote for its repeal the day after it was enacted if he could prevent the substitution of free coinage. There you will find the chief—the chief supporter of the gold-standard policy in the United States—supporting a bill because it gave money to the American people and then declaring that he would have voted for the repeal of it the very next day. (Applause.)

Repeal of the Sherman Law.

"They secured the repeal of the Sherman law, and they pretended that when they got that out of the way they would restore silver to its former place. There were some who said that the trend of the Sherman law was to that end, and that we had to clear away the rubbish before we could build up a system; and there were others who said that if we stood by free silver we would drive Europe to bimetallism. But those who made this argument have proved that they were not sincere, and that their purpose was to deceive the American people. (Applause.)

"In this campaign every party in its platform so far has declared that the principle of bimetallism is better than a gold standard; and yet, in spite of these declarations, you know that there is a body of people in the United States who, under cover of friendliness to bimetallism, are seeking to fasten a gold standard upon the American people.

"Now if you will be quiet awhile I will talk to the people on the other side, and come back to you later.

"You have been very patient. I hope others will now do as well as you have done. I don't know whether I can keep track of my speeches or not. I have been trying to tell those other people some of the things which I would have told you if they had not been here. Now, you will find people who are afraid of a flood of silver. There is nothing that excites my sympathy more than to find a man who never had enough money in his life, who has not enough to pay his debts, and does not know where the money is to come from to buy food for the next week, and yet is afraid of too much money. There are some people who have an idea that the free and unlimited coinage of silver would in some way, they know not how, bring ruin to this country. Did you ever try to figure out just how a man was going to hurt us by bringing silver here? If not, suppose you examine the situation and see whether you can find any way in which you will be injured.

Effect of Free Coinage.

"Let us suppose that you had free and unlimited coinage of gold and silver at the present unlimited ratio of 16 to 1; then what? Why, any person in the world owning silver bullion could bring that bullion to our mints and have it converted into full legal-tender silver dollars, just like the ones that you use to-day. Now, how could you be injured? Suppose some man made up his mind to injure the American people under free coinage, how would he do it? Why, he would take his silver to our mint; suppose $1,000 of it, and have it coined into dollars; then he would take these dollars out to hurt the American people with them, and how would he do it? He could take that money home and he would be required to pay the freight on it, and he would lose the cost of coinage and lose the freight both ways, and we could stand it longer than he could. Ah, you say that he would trade that silver for gold and take the gold away, and leave the silver.

"Where would he get the gold? Would he get it at the treasury of the United States? Not under bimetallism, because under bimetallism the Government does not agree to swap, but under bimetallism the Government converts the silver bullion into silver money and gold bullion into gold coin and makes them legal tender for all debts, public and private. But it does not agree to redeem a gold dollar in silver or a silver dollar in gold. (Applause.) So that under bimetallism this foreigner could not exchange his silver at the mint for gold unless the Government was disposed to let him do it. Where would he get the gold? He would have to find somebody with the gold; he could not hurt anybody by trading silver for gold until he found somebody who had the gold, and that would let most of the people of the United States out of danger.

Incident in Illinois.

"In Illinois last year in a debate my opponent was very friendly and we called each other brother, and in the course of the speech he turned to me and said: 'Brother Bryan, will you loan me a silver dollar to illustrate my argument; I haven't any?' When it came my turn I thought I would try an experiment and I said: 'Brother, I want to use a gold coin to illustrate my argument; I haven't any; will you let me have one?' He got red in the face; he did not have any. And then I called the attention of the audience to the fact that I was defending silver and I had the silver, but he did not have the gold with which to illustrate his argument, and he had just told them that gold was the only good money; but he did not have a dollar of it, and they did not have any of it.

"Well, now, he would have to find somebody with the gold, and, more than that, he would have to find somebody with the gold who was willing to let the gold go. When would the man who held the gold let the gold go? Why, whenever he thought that silver was better for him than the gold, and not until then. Well, there is another way that he might do. He might, instead of taking the silver home, instead of giving it to us, instead of trading it to us for gold, he might trade it to us for property. Whenever we have anything to sell we are looking for a man who has the money to trade for what we have to sell, and instead of being frightened if he will just let us know when he is coming with his silver to exchange for our products we will meet him at the depot with a brass band and escort him through the town and show him where the property is that he can buy. Have you ever heard people say that it did not make any difference how much money there was, that you could not get any of it unless you had something to sell? That is very common argument. Whenever anybody asks you how you can get any money, no matter how much, unless you have something to sell, you ask him how you can get any money at all, no matter how much you have to sell, until you find somebody who has money with which to buy? Of course you cannot get any money unless you have something to sell; that is, ordinarily you cannot. If you are a syndicate and have control of the finances of the Government you may sell credit and get money.

Money in Circulation.

"A gentleman asked me last night how this money could be put into circulation. That, to my mind, is one of the most simple of processes. Do you ever have any trouble in getting your money into circulation? Now, I know from your conduct that your trouble has been just like mine, not as to how to get money into circulation, but how could you keep it from getting into circulation. Now, here is the process. We have the free coinage of gold. If any man produces gold from the earth he can take that gold to the mint and have it converted into gold coin and then he can use that gold coin to buy anything he wants. But he does not spend a dollar of that gold coin without putting the money into circulation. It is not worth anything to him util he puts it into circulation, and the moment he does it it is a part of the country's money, to be used in buying all the products of toil.

"How about silver? The process is just the same as with gold. The man who owns a silver mine produces the silver, but instead of going to find somebody who wants to use the silver to make spoons out of he takes that silver to the mint and has it converted into money, and that money is his to pay for the labor of producing the silver and paying all of the expenses of mining and whatever there is left over and above that is his profit; but he cannot spend a dollar of it without putting that into circulation, where it will be used to purchase the products of your toil and the toil of all who labor in the United States. Now that is where the money gets into circulation.

Word as to Money.

"Just a word as to money. There are some people who have an idea that gold has some divine attribute that makes it staple while all other things fluctuate, that makes it good while all other things may be bad. I want to say that a dollar is a creature of the law. There is no such thing as a dollar except the law creates that dollar. If you owe a debt you cannot pay it with a lump of gold unless the man who holds your note is willing to accept that gold, while you can pay your debts with a hog or a steer if the man who holds your note is willing to accept them. But money is that with which you can discharge your debt, whether the man wants to accept it or not. Money is that which the law creates and which the law makes a use for. How are you going to increase the volume of your money? There is only one way, and that is by legislation.

"We are opposed to the gold standard because the gold standard means a rising dollar; a rising dollar means falling prices; falling prices mean hard times. The party that tries to make, by raising the value of the dollar, lower prices for the general products of human labor, is the party that legislates stagnation upon a people and drives men into bankruptcy by 'be it enacted,' etc.

"We believe that the opening of our mints will bring into circulation more standard money. To the gold of the world we will add the silver, and when gold and silver together measure the price of all the property of the world, that price will be higher than it is now, and, having been restored, it will remain more stable than it is now, and that is why we are in favor of bimetallism.

"We want the ratio of 16 to 1 for two reasons. In the first place, we believe that the gap between gold bullion and silver bullion has been caused by hostile legislation, and that it can be closed by friendly legislation. (Renewed applause.)

"We believe that the law can undo what law has done, and that it is not necessary to make any change in the ratio, this is another reason. Have you ever tried to figure out what would be the effect if we change the ratio according to the plans suggested by our opponents?

"Suppose all the world agreed to a ratio of 32 to 1, and suppose they made the change by doubling the size of the silver dollar? Do you know what that would mean? It would mean the recoinage of 4,000,000,000 of silver dollars into 2,000,000,000 of silver dollars. It would mean first the shrinkage of one-half of all the silver of the world, measured in dollars, and a shrinkage of one-quarter of all the metallic money of the world. It would mean an increase in the purchasing power of every dollar. It would mean the decrease in the value of property in the world billions of dollars, and an increase in the burden of debts of the world billions of dollars more.

"We are in favor of a ratio of 16 to 1, not because we produce silver, but because we use both gold and silver, and need all the gold and silver to keep the parity between money and property."

Speech at Cleveland.

An immense throng greeted Mr. Bryan at Cleveland. In his speech at the Armory in that city he said in part:

Are the American people able to govern themselves or must this Government be thrown over to syndicates to carry on as they think best for their private profit?

It has been customary for the past many years for the two leading parties to adopt platforms ambiguous and meaningless and then go before the people and tell them that the platforms were about the same and make the fight on some other issue. But it is changed in this campaign. There is an issue now and the line is drawn so that no one need be deceived. The Republican party had at St. Louis such an opportunity as seldom comes to a party. The present administration had advanced the gold standard, had forced through under whip and spur the law that repealed the purchasing clause of the Sherman law. The administration had issued bonds in the time of peace, and worse than all it had entered into a contract with a few financiers in New York and London by which it had paid these people an enormous profit for protecting the treasury, which 70,000,000 people stood ready to protect. What an opportunity for the Republican party. Why did not the convention denounce the financial policy of the Democratic party? Why did it not demand the abandonment of the gold standard and the restoration of the gold and silver coinage of the Constitution? Because their convention was dominated by the same influences that dominated the controlling affairs of both the great parties. Financiers of New York wrote the Republican platform. The laborers and farmers of this country were looking and longing for relief, but the Republican party was deaf to all sounds save clinking gold and blind to all colors save glittering yellow. If you cannot excite pity in the minds of that party in this country, which you yourselves made great, how can you expect pity from nations from whom you have wrested the empire.

Our opponents preach the gospel of despair. They ask you to enter upon a night illumined by no star, to embark upon a sea whose farther shore no mariner can find, to travel upon a desert where the oasis when reached only makes the disappointment a thousand times more keen. We have not finished with the gold standard yet. You think you have suffered. Our suffering has just begun if we have a continuation of the gold standard. We are upon the threshold of a period of depression which is indefinite in duration and cannot be described in intensity. Hard times, why only a few nations are now suffering from gold.

Bimetallism is indorsed by human history. The gold standard has nothing to indorse it except misery wherever it has been tried. If you believe in the gold standard you ought to vote for my opponent. If you believe in the money of the Constitution we have a right to expect your assistance in this campaign.

Reason for Suspicion.

This is the season when the great manufacturers, who for four years have been trying to pay their workers the lowest possible wages, suddenly discover that they love the workingman. To prove the intensity of their new-found affection for labor they use all their influence to induce their employes to support the party of high tariffs, under the promise that if duties are raised prices will be higher and the manufacturers can afford to pay higher wages, the increase in wages to follow quickly after McKinley's election.

Perhaps there may be some American workingmen who can again be fooled by the old threadbare dodge of a promise of more pay when the Republicans get office. If so they are to be pitied. Do they really think that men like Mark Hanna or Andrew Carnegie, who have always fought organized labor and cut wages down at every opportunity, are anxious to pay higher wages, and only want goods made dearer so that they can help their employes? Surely not. The thing is ridiculous. If these humbug friends of labor really want to pay higher wages they can do so now, for they are making great fortunes at the expense of the public and of their underpaid workmen. If they wish to show themselves sincere friends of labor they can do so in no better way than by raising wages now.

One question which the workers should ask the agents of the manufacturing trusts and other monopolies which are trying to elect McKinley, is enough to expose the sham of their "higher wages" argument. It is: "Why, do all the employers who at election time talk of high protection in the interest of labor, always hire their labor at the lowest wages for which men can be found to work?" When the foreigner-pays-the-tax orator next declaims on the great services of his party to labor insist on having an answer to this question.

Legal Tender.

There are ten kinds of money in the United States, and their legal tender qualities are given below:

1. Gold coin—unlimited legal tender.
2. Gold certificates—not legal tender.
3. Silver dollar—unlimited legal tender.
4. Silver certificates—not legal tender.
5. United States notes (greenbacks)—unlimited legal tender.
6. Currency certificates—not legal tender.
7. Treasury notes of 1890 (Sherman notes)—unlimited legal tender.
8. National bank notes—not legal tender.
9. Subsidiary silver coin (halves, quarters, dimes)—legal tender up to $10.
10. Minor coin (nickels and cents)—legal tender up to twenty-five cents.

Republican Inconsistency.

Gold men claim that the man who has a fixed salary, or a fixed investment, will not be able to buy as much of food and clothing under free silver as now. They promise the farmer and manufacturer higher prices if McKinley is elected. If that should be true, then the man with a fixed salary, or a fixed investment, will not be able to buy as much of food and clothing under McKinley as now. Then they evade this by saying prices will not advance as much under McKinley as under free coinage of gold and silver. Hence the admission that free silver will result in higher prices for the farmer and manufacturer than under the gold standard. —Oil City Derrick.

The Total Eclipse of McKinley.

There has been no more striking and pathetic spectacle in recent American politics than the complete submergence of the nominal Republican candidate for the Presidency. Six months ago Mr. McKinley was a noted man. There was a genuine boom for him in his party. He got delegates all over the country on the strength of his individual popularity. And then he gradually faded from view, eclipsed in the black shadow of his manager, Hanna. It is nothing but Hanna now in the Republican party. Poor McKinley is so utterly forgotten that it is doubtful whether the country realizes that he is still a candidate.—New York Journal.

Thanks to the Protective Tariff.

The Oliver chilled plow, made and sold in the United States at $11 in gold, is carried to poor old Mexico and sold at $7 in Mexican silver—that is, at $3.50 in gold! A first-class American bicycle, selling in the United States, where it is made, at from $75 to $100 in gold, is carried to Japan and sold at a profit for $20 to $30 in silver! The Singer sewing machine is sold in London at less than two-thirds of its price here.

The Sultan of Turkey has a mania for collecting carriages. He has nearly 500 of them, and often loses half an hour before deciding in which one he will ride.

SACRED CONFIDENCE.

NO WOMAN'S LETTER PUBLISHED EXCEPT BY REQUEST.

Mrs. Pinkham's Tender Relations With the Suffering of Her Sex—Women Who Cannot Hide Their Happiness.

There is a class of women who, from their own experience, sympathize with their suffering sisters, and in order that such suffering may be lessened, nobly put aside false modesty and in heartfelt gratitude publish to the world what every woman should know.

Mrs. W. L. Elliott, Liscomb, Iowa, is one of those women, and has requested us to publish the facts in her case, otherwise it would not be done, as all such evidence is treated in sacred confidence, unless publication is requested by the writer.

She says to Mrs. Pinkham:—"I wish you would publish the circumstances of my case, in order that other women may be benefited by my experience.

"I doctored nearly all the time for two years. I spent several hundred dollars without receiving much benefit. Last June I wrote to you and described all my aches and pains. Such a long list as there was: headache, backache, bearing-down pains, terrible soreness, constipation, dizziness, feeling of extreme lassitude, irregularity and nausea; but you answered my letter and told me just what to do. I followed your advice.

"After taking eight bottles of the Vegetable Compound and three bottles of Blood Purifier, I am glad to write you that I have not enjoyed such good health for years, and I am able to do all my own work. I can surely sound the praises of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and a number of my friends are taking it upon my recommendation."—MRS. W. L. ELLIOTT, Liscomb, Iowa.

DIMPLES AND WRINKLES.

The deepest of dimples to wrinkles have run
Since Mary was twenty and I twenty-one;
But, dimpled or wrinkled, my sweetheart's the same,
From the sunburst of life to its last little flame.

The cheeks that were roses are shrunken and pale,
But their velvety purity never will fail;
And lips that were flushed with the red blood of youth
Are warm with a love as undying as truth.

The blue of her eyes is fading to gray,
And the gold of her hair is silver to-day;
But the soul is the same that was orbed in the blue,
And silvern is golden when love lights the view.

And, dimpled or wrinkled, a blush will confess
The happiness born of a lover's caress,
For the heart of a woman is tender as true
And the passion it cherishes ever is new.

With Mary at twenty and me twenty-one,
Than dimples naught sweeter was under the sun;
With Mary at sixty and me sixty-one,
Why, dimples were made so that wrinkles might run.

A TRAMP OPERATOR.

There were probably 700 passengers on No. 1. That was her fair average, and Conductor Hubbard afterward said he thought that on the night of Sept. 4 she had carried her full quota. If he had realized what was back of the innocent query of the trampish-looking substitute operator at Hogarth he would have been a pretty badly frightened man, even though the event was three days in the past. Only Kenneth and the second trick train dispatcher knew how close 700 persons had come to death on the night of Sept. 4. True, a certain boy may have had a remote idea of it, but that is only a hazard, for he was a very stupid boy.

Kenneth was on the hog train. It was habitual with him. His shoes were bunches of frayed leather; his trousers were greasy and torn; his coat was seedy, and although he had washed his shirt regularly thrice a week in the waters of whatever pond or creek he chanced to discover in his line of transit, still, it was an evil-looking shirt which did not beget confidence. He was unshaved and in general appearance was similar to the accepted idea of a hobo. The time had passed many years back when he felt that it was worth while to appeal to station agents or operators along the line of his travel for assistance. His garb and guise were not such as to prompt self-respecting telegraphers to talk in his behalf to the conductors of freight trains, and so what progress westward he made was a tribute to his own vigilance and agility—vigilance in detecting just when the brakeman's back was turned and agility in swinging under the cars and upon the trucks. And he was perfectly and trampily satisfied.

Kenneth sauntered up the platform at Hogarth and took a seat on a box just outside the station window. He would have been ordered away had the agent been in the office, but the agent was not there. The agent, having been overcome by heat at 3 o'clock—September heat is the most potent heat in that desert land—had been carried up to his house to rage in delirium, and die, perhaps, for all the medical attendance a Wyoming settlement could afford. It was his student who sat in flushed importance at the telegraph table when Kenneth roved up to the window and anchored on the box. Kenneth had toured the road until he had a first-rate knowledge of the time card, and he knew that if 602 was on time she would draw her serpentine length of freight cars up to the Hogarth station about an hour after No. 1 had gone whizzing eastward with her fast mail and her sleepers. It was his purpose to annex himself to 602 and proceed eastward.

Idly, through the open window, he studied the boy. He was a very stupid-looking boy, and at this time of his superior's disability a very important boy. Kenneth estimated his age at 14 or 15, and tried to think how stupendous an opinion he himself had had of himself when he was a boy of 15 and was left for the first time in charge of an office. He listened in a passively interested sort of way as the boy fought on the second wire for fifteen minutes in his vigorous purpose to ask the time of a far-away telegrapher, even though the heavens might fall. It was like old times. All plug operators, he remembered, do that sort of thing—fighting, fighting, fighting in their determination to take the wire from any one else who may desire to use it—the train dispatcher alone excepted from the list to be held in contempt.

The tramp operator wearied at last of the boy's "smartness" on the line, and leaned back against the side of the station listening to the clamor of the dispatcher circuit—listening to orders, reports and other minutiæ of running trains by telegraph. In the course of time he learned a thing which caused him to curse his luck and look upon himself as one outraged, for by attending the racket of the dispatcher's line he found that No. 1, the passenger train, was late, and instead of meeting her at Rosalie, the station east of Hogarth, where the tramp operator was waiting, 602, the fast freight, had been given permission to go as far as Williamson, the station next west of Hogarth, for the meeting. No. 1 had been warned in due time of the change.

The fast freight had been out of Rosalie ten minutes and was fast approaching Hogarth when Kenneth heard the man at Humboldt telling the dispatcher that No. 1, having made up fifteen minute of her time, and being but now forty-five minutes late, desired to proceed on eastward to Hogarth for the meeting, rather than risk having to wait at Williamston. The order was promptly given, for express trains are things which must be humored by train dispatchers. This, of course, made it peremptory to stop 602 at Hogarth and give her a revised order in conformity with that now held by the conductor of No. 1. It was easy enough. All that was needed was to call up the operator at Hogarth and tell him to display his red signal and stop the approaching freight train. Kenneth understood what was to follow. You cannot tramp over a transcontinental line for a month without acquiring a thorough knowledge of its telegraphic secrets, if you be an operator. Kenneth was acquainted with the significance of the various numeral signals which the dispatchers used so as to economize on time—"38" was the warning to make ready to receive a train order, "11" meant for the operator to repeat what he had received, and so on. And so when the anxious dispatcher called upon the boy at Hogarth and said, "36 No. 602," the shabby man of the Morse was aware that what was wanted was the display of the red signal and the consequent holding of No. 602 for revised orders. But, to his surprise, the boy did not make the customary response, "37 No. 602," which would be the short way of saying, "I have hung out my red signal and will hold No. 602 for orders." Instead, he scratched his head in a puzzled way, and after a moment telegraphed back to the man who was directing him, "How's that? What do you mean?"

It is very likely that the dispatcher had an attack of vertigo at that moment when he realized that a fast freight train and a heavy passenger train were approaching one another on a curving, twisting track, each going at highest speed and each seeking to make a different station for passing, and when he realized at the same time that a lout of a student did not understand what was was wanted of him. Painstakingly and slowly the dispatcher ticked back, "I m-e-a-n t-o p-u-t o-u-t y-o-u-r r-e-d l-a-n-t-e-r-n f-o-r N-o. 6-0-2." Slowly it came, indeed, but if the ticking was slow the beating of the heart of the dispatcher must have been rapid enough.

The boy's face lighted up. In a tangle of enthusiasm he rattled off this answer, jumbling his words together in a way unintelligible to any but a waiting ear: "All right, I will put it out."

With a smile at the change of events which had arranged it so that No. 602 would stop after all and give him a chance to mount an end sill or climb under a car, Kenneth rose and walked up the platform. It was not a long platform, for the town was small, but by the time he had reached the end he saw the light of No. 602 swinging into the only five miles of straight track on the road, and he realized that in a few minutes, obeying the command of the red lantern on the target, she would stop and give him a chance to get on board. He turned to look back at the signal light and his face took on a stony mask of dismay. He was to be disappointed again. The light was not shining. Doubtless the order had again been changed. The language he used was inelegant and outspoken. The train drew nearer. He could hear the rapid sound of the locomotive's exhaust and there was no hope of her stopping.

Suddenly a fearful thought came to him. He remembered that he had not seen the boy put out the lamp at all. What if——

He rushed back to the window like a fury. "Where's your red signal for this train?" he shrieked. "Stop this train! Stop her! The dispatcher has orders for her."

Very likely the boy would have told the ragged and dirty tramp to mind his own business but for that allusion to the dispatcher. Heaven permitted the fool to have a thought at the right time, and in an expostulating, mumbling way he said: "No, he ain't. He told me to put the light out and I've been five minutes tryin' to put it out. Had to take it apart before I could blow it out, and now it smokes like all the ——"

There was no time for him to complete his simile, for Kenneth was through the window now and had the red office flag in his hand. He seized the hall lamp from the telegraph table, and with the flag folded about the chimney to give the crimson hue of danger he rushed to the platform, the improvised red signal sending its dim message of warning weakly down the track toward the thundering engine of No. 602, now scarcely fifty yards away.

Weakly, but it answered its purpose, for, although the train's momentum carried it far past the office, she came back in response to that well-known signal. "The kid's red light blew out and I had to help him fake one up," said Kenneth to the conductor, and then he sat down to take the order, pushing the boy aside as though he were not to be considered.—Chicago Record.

A Sensitive Man.

That the average man is very sensitive as to his physical infirmities was strikingly illustrated in an Arch street car yesterday afternoon. Near the rear platform sat a well-dressed man, with one leg stretched out in front of him, almost completely blocking the passage. A lady boarded the car, and in her efforts to reach a seat, stumbled over the man's leg. He apologized, but did not change his position. Presently another female passenger got on, and she was forced to step over the obstacle. Then the conductor interfered. Approaching the man he requested him to draw in his foot, but the request was promptly refused. "I'll put you off the car if you don't," expostulated the conductor. "You won't do anything of the kind," was the spirited reply. Hot words followed, a scuffle ensued, and the obstinate passenger was finally landed in the street. It was then discovered that he had an artificial leg, and rather than acknowledge his affliction he had run the chances of a disgraceful scene.—Philadelphia Record.

The Schoolboy and the Emperor.

The organ of the schoolmasters, the Allgemeine Deutsche Lehrerzeitung, relates an episode of Kaiser Wilhelm's visit to Wiesbaden. When he was riding along the Taunus-strasse at the head of his suite on Monday a small boy ran after him and cried out, as he frantically waved his cap, "Herr Kaiser! Herr Kaiser! get us a holiday tomorrow!" The emperor laughed, and, with a friendly wink to the lad, called out, "We shall manage it." Accordingly on the next day all the lads and lasses of the town were informed that the day was "schulfrei," and wherever the kaiser appeared he was naturally greeted as a liberator with the full power of youthful lungs.

Miss Prettie—Mr. Ryder is so entertaining! He seems to have come in contact with so many people. Mr. Wheeler (viciously)—You should watch him on his bike.—New York Press.

Bravery of a St. Bernard.

A fire broke out one night not long since in a house in Macon in Georgia. Amongst the inmates was a fine St. Bernard dog, a great favorite of the children, and especially fond of the baby. The dog may be said to have saved the whole family, for as soon as it saw the flames it awakened the folks by barking loud and long. Having aroused the family, it then ran out to the barn and drove all the cows to a safe distance. Returning to the house it went to the nursery and began tugging away at the baby's cradle, the poor animal being too blinded by the smoke to see that the infant had already been removed. Attempts were made to get it out of the room, but it remained by the cradle, whining piteously the while. At last the fire forced everybody back, and the noble creature perished in the flames, trying, as it thought, to rescue its baby friend.

Variation.

The little boy whose head has a tendency to bulge out at the top like a mushroom, owing, as his parents truly believe, to the extraordinary amount of knowledge it contains, was gazing gravely at his father who was making his breakfast of ice water.

"People change a great deal when they grow up, don't they?" the boy observed.

"Of course," his mother answered.

"And yet they're very much the same, after all," he continued musingly.

"What are you talking about.

"About grown men and boys. When a boy goes out and eats whatever he wants and pays no attention to what anybody says, the next day he has a stomach ache."

"Very often."

"And when a grown man goes out to a banquet, the only difference is that the next morning he has a headache. The ache seems to move around, but it's there, just the same."

How Young May They Ride?

It is not to be expected that any permanent harm will come to young children simply because they ride a bicycle. The harm, when there is harm, is in the improper use of the wheel. They should not, of course, be allowed on the public highway except under the watchful eye of a parent or some mature person, and they should not be allowed to ride until too much fatigued.

The reason why children are more likely to overexert when riding the wheel than when indulging in other forms of recreation, is that wheeling has a fascination possessed by no other sport, and the mind becomes so occupied with the pleasure of the trip that the bodily exhaustion incidental to it is not thought of until too much has been done.

How Czar Nicholas Proposed.

Russians are very fond of telling the story of an answer given to the Emperor when His Majesty proposed to his future wife. "The Emperor, my father, has commanded me to make you the offer of my hand and heart," was the Czarowitz's quaint way of putting it. "And my grandmother, the Queen," replied the lady, "has commanded me to accept the offer of your hand; your heart I will take myself." It is said on good authority the Emperor is passionately devoted to his wife, and that she is equally fond of him.

Too Late to Mend.

There is a point beyond which medication cannot go. Before it is too late to mend, persons of a rheumatic tendency, inherited or acquired, should use that benignant defense against the further progress of the supertenacious malady—rheumatism. The name of this proven rescuer is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which, it should also be remembered, cures dyspepsia, liver complaint, fever and ague, debility and nervousness.

This Year's Crop.

"Oh, thank you," she said, sweetly. "Yes, I should feel much safer about it if you would drop it into the letter-box each morning. Yes." She returned to her household duties and left the ice man to say nothing or swear at his horses as he chose.—Detroit Tribune.

AMOS D. SMITH, VETERAN.

From the Register, Dublin, Ind.

We published a short time ago the account of the cure of Mr. H. D. Mendenhall, of Dublin, Ind., from nervous debility and nervous prostration after the case had developed symptoms of incipient paralysis. As a result of that account other cases have come to light of almost equal interest, one of which follows, that of Amos D. Smith, of Dublin, Ind.

Mr. Smith is a man of 74 years of age, a worthy citizen, and has been a resident here nearly all his life. He served in the army, first with the Eighth Indiana Volunteers for three months, then with the Thirty-sixth Indiana Volunteer Regiment, serving from the beginning of the war till he was mustered out of service from disability in 1863. He was in some of the hottest engagements of the many fatal battles fought, and consequently was subjected to all the trials, hardships and dangers of that terrible war.

Amos Smith has this to relate in regard to his disease and what brought it on:

"While engaged in one of the battles of the Cumberland army I was run over by an ambulance wagon. This injury in time undermined my health, and by the time I was mustered out of service I had contracted rheumatism and the piles, of which I have suffered much. My blood became deranged and general debility seemed to be my lot. I tried many remedies, but found no relief.

"Through a comrade I was induced to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I at once procured them and commenced using them. It was not long before quite a change was being effected. A general renovation of feeling resulted. My rheumatism became less severe, the piles not so violent, my blood became active and a younger and more vigorous animation took the place of my benumbed former condition. All these results brought a more pleasant state of feeling to me over the prospect that my declining years will not be wrecked with the torturing afflictions that at one time threatened to follow me to the grave—for which I will ever thank and give a large share of credit to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People for the benefit they have been to me.

"AMOS D. SMITH."

Subscribed and sworn to before me, the undersigned Notary Public, this 29th day of June, A. D. 1896.

WILLIAM E. FLOYD, Notary Public.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effect of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, all forms of weakness either in male or female. Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent postpaid on receipt of price, 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 (they are never sold in bulk or by the 100), by addressing Dr. Williams' Med. The Fair

An afternoon at the Waterloo fair yesterday, showed a poor attendance for a Thursday fair day, and the exhibits were by no means as full as ordinary. The fair was just a month earlier than usual, and people had not got ready for it. Then too, farmers' work is later than usual, for seeding was delayed by the wet weather, and as it is just right now, all working to finish the wheat. Then there is a big corn crop all tangled and blown over and this is to be cut. So altogether there were not many farmers present. The trotting was very good. The display of needle work in the Floral Hall was fine, but not as abundant as in other years. The show of ripe fruits and vegetables was fine, but the displays were not quite as numerous as we expected. In Mechanics Hall Isaac Speer had a display that reminded one of the world's fair. His son Charlie had on the cook's dress he wears when cooking on the lakes, and was dealing out free samples of a new and choice kind of tea just as they did at the big fair. It was the most popular display on the ground, and everybody came to test it. They also had a fine display of crockery and groceries. J. C. Day had fine stoves etc, in the same hall. The live stock show was not much, but there were quite a number of fakirs and other stands. There were at least two, that handled a suspicious amount of money for an honest game. The cutest thing we saw, was an enclosure of little Shetland ponies, that did a competing business against the wooden horses of the merry-go-round. And lively boys preferred to ride the living ponies or drive them in a little buggy. They are the Ianson ponies from Butler and were in charge of our friend, Anthony who is connected with him in some way. It is likely the heavy rain in the morning prevented many from going. There was likely a larger attendance to-day, as the weather is more favorable.

Ohio Solid.

So Says Col. Hill, of Washington, Who Visited in the Buckeye State.

Col. Ike Hill, who had been through Ohio on a visit send out the following from Washington:

In discussing the political situation in his state, Col. Hill said "The fusion between democrats and populists in Ohio is complete. The populists polled 50,000 votes two years ago, and they will probably poll 80,000 at the coming presidential election. The Indianapolis ticket will not poll 6,000 votes in Ohio.

"The farmers in Ohio are getting ready to vote for Bryan in November, without regard to their former political alliances. They say they have the financial policy of the republicans in force now, and it does no good. The only other thing the republicans are offering them as a relief in their distress is higher taxation, and they find it hard to understand how that will help them. They are in the throes of distress, and they are determined to try bimetallism at 16 to 1. They believe it will help them, and they are sure it can't make their condition worse, that is impossibe.

"Talk about ovations to Bryan in the east," said Col. Hill, with a look of something like disgust on his face, "as great as they have been, they were but a shadow to the reception were given him in Columbus, Cleveland and Toledo. When Mr. Bryan gets out there he will have the biggest audiences that have ever assembled in the history.

Depression of Spirits

so common in summer-time, accompanied by loss of energy, lack of thought-power, means a deficient supply of nourishment. The vital force is lost. It isn't a question of muscle and sinew, but of resistance and endurance. At any age, but especially in youth, it involves the risk of lung disease. Loss of flesh and a cough are threatening signs.

THE FARMER.

As He Was and as He Is.

tural department has shown that the American people are eating considerably less wheat per capita than they did a few years ago, and if you will take the annual reports for 20 years and deduct that used for export and seed from the crop of each year and that fed to stock in late years you will find that 70,000,000 people are eating only about the same amount of wheat flour that 55,000,000 people did. In Europe also it has been shown that nearly 100,000,000 people cannot afford to eat wheat bread. They are using cheap substitutes like rye and potatoes. Are we to suppose that they do that for fun?

N. Y. Recorder.

Enormous Losses to Agriculture.

If you want to realize what enormous losses American farmers have sustained because of the increased purchasingpower of gold, look over the files of the gold papers before this became a political issue, before they had any interest in denying the truth. In the New York Sun of Sept. 10, 1893, for instance, was an editorial of which this is an extract:

Puck.

For more than 15 years, 1878 to 1893, all the great primary agricultural staples have been declining in price, although there have been periods when the price of some one was high for a limited time. This is more notably true as respects secondary products, especially meats and lard, but the trend of the whole scale has been constantly downward, and the general price level at the end of each year was lower than at its beginning. In the meantime there had been no material reduction in the cost of production, the self binder, the gang plow, mower, hay tedder and hay loader and all other great improvements in agricultural machinery having come into use prior to 1878. Subsequent modifications and improvements have been in the direction of greater facility in operation rather than of lessened cost. While it is true that there has been a material reduction in the cost of farming implements, such reduction has not always resulted in lessening the cost of production on the farm, as new machines have often displaced those which were but partially worn and which were quite as efficient.

It is probable that upon farms large enough to warrant the purchase of full lines of improved machinery the cost of production has thereby been lessened 10 per cent, but such farms constituting less than 5 per cent of the whole area under cultivation the aggregate saving from such economies has been slight and has probably been fully offset by the progressively increasing use of commercial fertilizers which has been found necessary in all the region east of the Mississippi, not to increase the fertility of the land, but simply to prevent further deterioration.

The Yield of an Acre.

While the cost of production cannot have been lessened as much as 5 per cent since 1875, prices for the staple products of the farm averaged 82 per cent greater during the five years ending with 1875 than now. This is especially true as respects the five staples—corn, wheat, oats, hay and cotton—which employ 185,000,000 out of 206,000,000 acres now devoted to staple crops.

N. Y. World.

The following table shows in five year averages the gold value per acre (in the local farm markets) of the product of the five staples named for quinquennial periods since 1866 and an estimate of the value with average yields of an acre under each such staple in 1893 at present prices:

VALUE OF AN ACRE'S PRODUCT.

	'66-70.	'71-5.	'76-80.	'81-5.	'86-90.	'93.
Corn	$12 84	$11 30	$9 62	$10 25	$8 51	$8 55
Wheat	13 16	11 90	12 00	10 20	9 07	6 00
Oats	10 92	9 81	8 58	9 17	7 50	5 75
Hay	13 28	14 38	11 57	11 15	10 19	10 00
Cotton	28 01	28 55	17 65	15 63	13 84	10 65
Total	$78 21	$75 94	$59 42	$56 40	$49 44	$40 75
Average	15 64	15 19	11 88	11 28	9 49	8 15

You can find all that denied or skillfully evaded in The Sun nowadays, but that cuts no figure. Nobody denied it before this became a political question. The decline still continues, and there is every indication that it will continue. And now the great question is, What is the farmer going to do about it? On him depends the solution of this all important issue. The fate of bimetallism is in his hands.

N. Y. Herald.

A Simple Fact.

"But is not the money question too complicated for farmers to master it in the brief time between this and the election?"

Not at all. In its present shape indeed it is singularly simple. It can be reduced to two or three plain questions, perhaps to one, and that is, Has silver depreciated or gold appreciated since 1873? On their answer to that depend the votes of a million honest farmers. Monometallists say gold has stood still while all other things have cheapened. We say that silver has stood almost unchanged while gold has advanced enormously in value, and, what is more, we prove it by every line of reasoning which can be applied to the subject. That silver is by natural law far more stable in value than gold has been proved from geology, from mineralogy, from metallurgy and still more by comparing the fluctuations of prices in different countries having the different standards or in the same country at different times. Every one of these tests has yielded exactly the same result. The fluctuations since the principal nations adopted the gold standard have exceeded all previously known. But here is a simple test which the farmer can easily apply for himself:

Puck.

Judge.

Take the average of prices in your neighborhood for the five years ending in 1875 (it is not fair to take one year) and the average gold or greenback value of a ten ounce bar of silver at that time. Divide and see what that silver would have bought. Do the same for the five years ending with 1895, and you will find that the silver will buy more. Is it not arrogant and insulting nonsense to say that silver has depreciated when it will buy more of the products of your labor? Here is a table to help you in the calculation:

	Price of wheat, per bushel.	Price of cotton, per pound.	Price of silver, per ounce.
1872	$1 47	19.3	$1 32
1873	1 31	18.8	1 29
1874	1 43	15.4	1 27
1875	1 12	15.0	1 24
1876	1 24	12.9	1 15
1877	1 17	11.8	1 20
1878	1 04	11.1	1 15
1879	1 07	9.9	1 12
1880	1 25	11.5	1 14
1881	1 11	11.4	1 13
1882	1 19	11.4	1 15
1883	1 13	10.8	1 11
1884	1 07	10.5	1 01
1885	16	10.6	1 06
1886	87	9.9	1.9
1887	89	9.5	97
1888	85	9.8	96
1889	90	9.9	98
1890	83	10.1	1 04
1891	85	10.	90
1892	80	8.7	88
1893	65	7.	75

The Concentration of Wealth.

"Many cite the concentration of wealth in a few hands as one cause of the farmer's poverty, but is not that worse in other countries with different systems?"

There is no country of high civilization in which it is so bad, except perhaps in one or two where the process has been going on for 1,000 years, but in no country, ancient or modern, has the process been so rapid as in this. In 1860 there were alleged to be in this nation a dozen millionaires. Today there are at least 5,000 and probably many more. On this point we have unimpeachable testimony and from an unwilling witness. Early in 1892 Hon. Roswell G. Horr, tariff editor of the New York Tribune, started out to prove that protection did not create millionaires

N. Y. Herald.

Under his direction a very careful census was taken in every part of the United States by The Tribune's agents. The lists were published weekly in The Tribune for correction and then compiled in a pamphlet. The number exceeded 4,000 and was soon proved to be entirely too small. Mr. Horr succeeded in proving to his own satisfaction that only 1,200 were manufacturers.

N. Y. World.

"And how were the rest made?"

The enormous land grants and subsidies to railroads made a few dozens like Stanford, Crocker and Huntington. The sudden growth of western cities due to the hothouse system of forcing development made a few hundreds. Dozens like Jay Gould and his fellows were made by the system of railroad wrecking. Many were made by speculation in gold and government bonds, by the national banking system and many other schemes fostered by government. A few—very few, it must be admitted—were honestly made by legitimate enterprises in which the government was not a partner, and many by the advance in real estate in our great cities. Many others have carried the investigation much farther. Thomas G. Shearman, Esq., the great lawyer, has conclusively shown that some 30,000 men own or absolutely control one-half the property of the United States; that 100,000 men own half the remainder, and that the great mass of laboring producers actually own very little if any more than they did in 1860. The results are simply awful. Ten men in New York city today hold the credit of the United States absolutely at their mercy. If it were to their interest, they could tomorrow sweep away the gold basis and precipitate a panic in Wall street. But the farmer is told that all this is none of his business and is expected to be controlled in his vote by the gold superstition.

Puck.

The Gold Superstition.

"How can there be a gold superstition? What do you mean by such a phrase?"

I mean just what the words imply—that a large portion of the human race has become possessed with the notion that gold is infallible, a notion as degrading in its way as the African snake worship. Nine-tenths of the gold monometallists in this country boldly proclaim that, while all other commodities change in value, gold does not. "We know," the savages say, "that Mumbo Jumbo is ugly and we believe that he is great." We laugh at the poor heathen, but the argument is on their side, for it never has been mathematically proved, and it cannot be proved, that Mumbo Jumbo has not great power in the unseen; but it has repeatedly been proved in every way open to the human intellect that gold is a shifting and unstable standard of value, far more unstable than silver, and that twice within the memory of men not very old it has changed in value so suddenly as to vitiate all long time contracts and dislocate all industrial conditions.

Commercial Advertiser.

The Fact About Gold.

Every economist worthy of the name had said again and again that gold fluctuates in value. No economic writer has ever denied it. In his "Wealth of Nations" Adam Smith says: "Gold and silver, like every other commodity, vary in their value. The discovery of the abundant mines of America reduced in the fifteenth century the value of gold and silver in Europe to about a third of what it had been before. This revolution in their value, though perhaps the greatest, is by no means the only one of which history gives some account."

Puck.

Professor Jevons, in his work upon "Money and the Mechanism of Exchange," chapter 6, says, "In respect to steadiness of value the metals are probably less satisfactory, regarded as a standard of value, than many other commodities, such as corn."

By "corn" Professor Jevons means wheat and all other cereals.

Ricardo, in his paper on the "High Price of Bullion," says, "If we diminish the quantity of currency, we give an additional value to it."

By "currency" Ricardo meant money of every character, including gold.

Mr. Macleod, in his able work on the "Elements of Banking," says, "The actual alteration in the quantities of the precious metals has materially altered their value at different periods of history."

N. Y. World.

Professor Francis A. Walker of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, in his able work on money, says: "Gold and silver do over long periods undergo great changes of value and become in a high degree deceptive as a measure of the obligation of the debtor, of the claim of the creditor. Thus Professor Jevons estimates that the value of gold fell between 1789 and 1809 46 per cent, and from 1809 to 1849 it rose 145 per cent."

When Gold Was Cheap.

It is a point well worth noting, however, that in the seven or eight years—1849-56—that gold, according to the best authorities, lost 25 per cent of its value, the world accommodated itself very easily to the change. The only outcry was from the holders of fixed indebtedness, and they wanted to demonetize gold because it was too cheap. We heard very little about that in this country and the masses of our people did not even know it, because we had then no permanent creditor class, no great bondholders; but the literature of Europe at the time was full of complaints, AND AUSTRIA, GERMANY AND BELGIUM ACTUALLY DEMONETIZED GOLD. On the other hand, the rapid increase in the value of gold within the last 20 years has wrought worldwide bankruptcy, has brought a wail of distress from producers in all lands, has again and again shaken the very foundations of credit throughout the British empire, and right now, according to Dr. Eduard Suess, threatens a redivision of the earth. In short, contraction is very many times more destructive than inflation.

N. Y. World.

"But the monometallists deny that there has been any contraction, or that gold cheapened in 1849-56, or that it has really appreciated in value since 1870."

Oh, yes, they'll deny anything now. Macaulay has well said that if a property interest were affected by it thousands of intelligent men would deny the law of gravitation. Only a few years ago some of the greatest scholars in this country denied that a man whose skin was black and his hair woolly had a natural right to the fruits of his labor or that a married woman had a right to her own earnings.

A Dangerous Basis.

In no speech or book published before 1890 will you find it denied that the volume of money and its proportion to general trade are the main factors in determining the general level of prices. It was taken for granted that the amount of money of ultimate redemption determined the price level. It was the foundation upon which all disputants built their arguments. But now you can hear it denied every day. And why? Because it does not fit the arguments of those who have selfish interests to serve. They now maintain that all forms of currency, including checks and every other kind of representative money, must be counted the same as the coin basis, though every sound financier knows that, by the method of the administration in construing the laws, silver now performs no function that greenbacks would not, and that silver, silver certificates and greenbacks are mere token money, all resting on the dangerously narrow basis of that metal which is the money of ultimate redemption.

Puck.

"You admit, however, that the free coinage of silver would produce some inflation. Suppose it were but 10 or 20 per cent, as Senator Jones thinks.

Wrong Sign

Sherman Dickinson and wife, both mutes, were coming home from Fort Wayne a few days ago and when near Academie, Sherman stopped his team and being thirsty, made signs that he wanted a drink. The woman he accosted evidently saw he wanted something to drink, but being perhaps interested in the financial success of a near-by saloon, she motioned him to go there. This he did and to the party inside signified by plain signs, that any one could understand, that he was thirsty. The men probably understood him, but water was not what they were dealing in and poured him out a snifter of whisky. But Sherman is a Washingtonian teetotaller and he refused the offer. Now he is going to invent a sign for "I want a drink" that cannot be mistaken.

Hoops Burned.

Liniger & Co. at Auburn Junction Lose About 80,000 Hoops.

Thursday's Daily.

At just 11:55 to-day the people of Auburn were frightened at the ringging of the fire bell. It was soon learned that a shed in which hoops were stored at the Liniger & Co. factory at Auburn Junction was on fire and that the service of the Hoosier boys and ladder truck was needed. The run was made to the Junction with this heavy load in less than ten minutes and the boys with aid of hooks soon had the fire in such a shape that there was no danger of its spreading further.

The fire originated in the dry hoops piled in the north end of the long shed which is built parallel with the Lake Shore tracks. A stiff breeze was blowing from the southwest and it is supposed a spark from the smoke stack of the factory started the blaze. It was discovered at just 11:30 by the target man at the Junction and the factory men worked with it by using fire extinguishers and water for twenty minutes before the ladders were telephoned for. It was indeed lucky that the fire started at the extreme north side. Had the wind been from the north or northeast, the entire stock of hoops, about five hundred cords of wood and the factory would have been consumed. There is no water there and the fire engine could have been no use to them. About 80,000 hoops were burned, making a loss of $300.

The shed and stock were insured for $200 each in two different companies in Walter Hartman's agency, and as the loss will be about $300, they will probably receive enough out of the $400 insurance to cover the loss.

This factory is one of the most prosperous in this section of the county. For some time they have been running 12 hours a day, and on next Monday night they will commence running night and day. A night force is now being hired. They employ about twenty men.

Highly Esteemed

In a recent letter to the manufacturers Mr. W. F. Benjamin, editor of the Spectator, Rushford, N. Y., says: 'It may be a pleasure to you to know the high esteem in which Chamberlain's medicines are held by the people of your own state, where they must be best known. An aunt of mine, who resides at Dexter, Iowa, was about to visit me a few years since, and before leaving home wrote me, asking if they were sold here, stating if they were not she would bring a quantity with her, as she did not like to be without them." The medicines referred to are Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, famous for its cures of colds and croup; Chamberlain's Pain Balm for rheumatism, lame back, pains in the side and chest, and chamberlains, Colic, Cholera and Diarrœha Remedy for bowel complaints. These medicines have been in constant use in Iowa for almost a quarter of a century. The people have learned that they are articles of great worth and merit, and unequaled by any other. They are for sale here by Davenport the druggist. 39

Is What G. W. Gordon called Sam Fretz this Morning.

Friday's Daily.

And then they "fit." It is not often that an editor gets into a fight with anyone, but there is now and then one of the fraternity whose temper is not as angelic as one whom our modesty prevents our naming. And it happened this way.

This forenoon Sam Fretz and some other men were talking about the money question, and Mr. Gordon was standing by. Fretz made the assertion that the government did not redeem silver dollars, and Gordon contradicted this, adding that Fretz ought to be ashamed to talk that way where young men could hear him. Fretz insisted he was right and Gordon said it was a d—d lie. Fretz resented this in words, and then Gordon called him a "G—d d—d anarchist," Fretz replied, "You'd better not call me that again, when Gordon retorted, "That's what you are," and Fretz struck him with his fist on the right side of his face. He followed this with a second blow, hitting Gordon under the eye and knocking him off the sidewalk. The bystanders then interfered and stopped the trouble. Afterwards, Gordon said "That is a sample of democracy," and later on met G. W. Stahl, who seeing Gordon's face ask what was the matter, and Gordon answered, "A G—d d—d Bryanite hit me." The main part of this statement, however, is as stated to a DAILY reporter by Mr. Gordon himself. At first there was a good deal of sympathy for Mr. Gordon, many asserting that Fretz should not have struck a man older than himself. Still, all admitted he had great provocation and that Gordon's language and manner deserved resentment. There is however, not so much difference in their ages, as there appears to be. Both are ex-soldiers, who were in the late war, though Fretz is probably a few years the younger. Both will probably regret their hot headedness. But it will be as well if those who argue on politics would stop calling hard names such as "anarchist," "Shylock" and the like. No one was ever convinced of an error or confirmed in a correct opinion by the use of such names. Gordon, as a result has a disfigured face and Fretz dislocated one of his fingers.

Hobo Shot.

The Kendallville Sun of Friday, Sept. 11, has this:

Last evening forty weary travelers occupied a box car on second section of Lake Shore freight run No. 73. Among the number was one supposed to have some money, and a desperate character in the gang kept running his hands into the fellow's pockets. This the supposed banker bum objected to and repeatedly remarked that he had no money, and left the car, going on top. He was soon followed by the party who had tried to search him for wealth, and just as the overhead bridge at Corunna was reached the latter pulled out a revolver and shot at the banker bum, the ball passing through his nose and lodging in the right cheek. The wounded man was brought to this city last evening by Chas. Mercer of Corunna, on his way to Fort Wayne, the trustee there having provided the necessary means to take the sufferer to the hospital at Fort Wayne. They left on the G. R. & I. at 3:20 this morning.

Mexican Dollars.

Iowa Man, By Affidavit, Attacks the Mexican Silver Example.

Special to the Chicago Record

DES MOINES, Iowa, Aug. 31.—J. H. Kennedy, a formes resident of Iowa, has attacked the statements so generally made regarding Mexico and silver by making the following affidavit before E. H. English, a notary public at Valley Junction.

"I, James H. Kennedy, now a resident of the town of Sinalva, in the state of Sinaloa' Mexico, do solemnly swear that I am an American by birth; that I served three years in the Seventh Iowa during the late civil war, that I have always been a republican; that I have resided in Mexico for twenty-five years; that I speak the Spanish language as well or better than I now do the English. I have traveled through twenty-four of the twenty-seven states in Mexico in an official capacity and as interpreter for numerous syndicates. I have had access to almost all the archives of that country. I am better acquainted with the customs and usage of that country than I am of my mother country. I left Mexico on the 2d day of March, 1896, coming to this country to visit my friends, relatives and old comrades. During the last month in Iowa I have heard more absurd and utterly false statements made in regard to Mexico than I ever thought could be conjured up by mortal man, all to deceive the voter.

"One most heard is that you can take one American silver dollar into Mexico and get two Mexican silver dollars for it, or that you can get a 50-cent meal and throw down an American dollar and they will give you back in change a Mexican dollar. I brand this as utterly false in every respect, a lie manufactured out of whole cloth. I assert that a Mexican will not accept an American dollar, either, silver or paper, for any amount, but will refer you to a broker, where you can sell your silver dollars as bullion for Mexican money, then they will trade with you. The largest hotel in the City of Mexico will not accept American money under any circumstances, but will invariably refer you to a broker.

"By paying the mintage any one can take silver bullion to either of the mints in Mexico and get Mexican silver dollars for it and for 250 years silver bullion has never fluctuated up or down to exceed 2 cents.

"I hear it asserted that their national debt is payable in gold. I brand this as utterly false. Every dollar of the debt, $146,000,000, is and always has been payable in the lawful money of that country, and we are now paying our debt in Mexican silver dollars, the money of the contract.

"I assert that Mexico in the present decade is making strides of advancement greater than any other nation on earth. Twenty-five years ago we had eighty miles of railroad, now we have near 8,000 miles of railroad. We are building factories on every hand. Twenty-eight years ago, when the French army was driven out, the Mexican government was left penniless, not a dollar in the treasury. We can now pay our national debt any time a demand would be made for it.

"I am now on my way to Mexico to spend the rest of life. Any one can find me by addressing a letter to James H. Kennedy, Sinaloa, Mexico.

"In conclusion I invite an honest and thorough investigation into the facts of my statement and I defy successful contradiction. I am not the owner of mining stocks and no personal interest has caused me to make this statement, but have given it by request of an old comrade.

JAMES H. KENNEDY."

People should read the scriptures more. Not only do we find the best moral teachings therein, but often there crops out a scientific truth. Here is one that might have been written for this part of the world. We take it from a late Chicago paper.

The recent peroid of heat through which Chicago has passed was foreshadowed in Luke xii., 54:55, where the writer says: "When ye see a cloud rise out in the west, straightway ye say, 'There cometh a shower,' and so it is. And where ye see a south wind blow, ye say, 'There will be heat,' and it cometh to pass."

CASTORIA

for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher. That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

The fac-simile signature of Chas. H. Fletcher is on every wrapper.

LI WILL WRITE A BOOK.

He Will Build Railways in China and Buy Material from America.

San Francisco special: Mark Ten Sule, who is a representative of the better class of Chinese, says Li Hung Chang's visit means much to the United States; that Li will, upon his return to China, begin the construction of a system comprising no less than 33,000 miles of railroad, and that gold and silver mines in a range of mountains extending for 1,500 miles along Northern China will be opened. Much iron and machinery to be used in developing these enterprises, Mark Ten Sule states, from private Chinese advices, will be purchased from the United States. Mark says Li proposes the publication of a book embracing his experiences and what he has learned on his trip upon his return to the flowery kingdom.

Dynamite Outrage.

Scranton (Pa.) special: The other morning a loud report startled the town of Bloomsburg and the residents rushed out doors, fearing an earthquake. A search revealed the fact that the whole front of the handsome residence of the Hon. Levi Waller, one of the wealthiest and most prominent men of the town, had been blown in by dynamite. The porch was blown off and the front wall demolished. All the windows were smashed into fragments by the concussion. The family was asleep at the time and they were all severly shocked. It is feared that Mrs. Waller may not recover from the fright. No motive is known for the outrage. The identity of the miscreants is not known.

Young Lady Shot Dead.

William Hop was arrested in Hopkinsville, Ky., and lodged in jail, charged with the murder of Minnie Finch at a church entertainment given near Bell's Chapel, Todd County. At the close of the evening's festivities John Moss started to escort Miss Finch home, when Hop steppel up and asked Moss for money he owed. Angry words followed, when Hop knocked Moss down. Moss sprang up, and, drawing his pistol, moved behind the girl. Just then Hop opened fire, the ball taking effect in Minnie Finch's bosom, killing her. Seeing what he had done, Hop fled. The police at Hopkinsville were notified of the tragedy and arrested the murderer, who has been removed to the Elkton jail.

Work Resumed.

The Candee Company of New Haven, Conn., manufacturers of rubber shoes, and one of the largest members of the United States Rubber Company, have resumed operations in nearly all of the departments. As fast as stock is produced the finishing departments will open, and in a few days it is expected that the whole of the mammoth plant will be in operation. Twelve hundred hands are at work, and probably one hundred more will go in immediately. Officials of the company state that the plant will operate as long as the business situation permits.

Debt Drove Him to Suicide.

J. H. Edmonds, aged 25 years, State Agent of the Union Casualty Company of St. Louis, committed suicide in his room at Birmingham, Ala., by cutting his throat with a razor. Edmonds was considered the best dressed man in Birmingham, and was highly educated. He had four or five sub-agents in the State, and he told a friend a few days ago that their tardiness in settling had placed him in an embarrassing position, which, it is believed, caused him to kill himself.

Georgia Crooks, a 15-year-old girl, was arraigned on the charge of attempting to poison the family of Mrs. Rebekah Beaver, of New Matamoras, Ohio, by putting paris green in their coffee. Luckily the deed was discovered in time to prevent a wholesale murder. The young culprit was convicted and sentenced to the Girls' Industrial School.

"In this," the Emperor said, "the Czar is in accord with me. His Majesty's efforts are directed toward drawing together the peoples of Europe and uniting them upon the ground of common interest."

Contract Awarded.

The contract for the electrocution apparatus at the Ohio Penitentiary was awarded to the Fort Wayne Electrical Company for $1,116.

BURNED A MAIL CAR.

A Singular Accident to a Lake Shore Train Near Goshen.

A special from Goshen, Ind., says: The Lake Shore through express carrying mails and express from New York to Chicago caught fire near here and thousands of dollars worth of goods, with much mail matter, were destroyed. When the flames were discovered the train slowed down and an effort was made to extinguish them. It proved unavailing and a wild run with a blazing train was made for this city, six miles away. The fire department was called and the fire subdued, but not before much valuable expressage was destroyed. The loss can not be accurately estimated at this time. The origin of the flames is supposed to have been combustion.

HANGED ON A BRIDGE.

Murderers of Sheriff Rogers Sent Into Eternity.

Glencoe (Minn.) special: Dorman Musgrove and Charles Cinqmars paid the penalty for murdering Sheriff Rogers at an early hour Monday morning. A determined mob of 100 men took them from the county jail, dragged them to a bridge half a mile from town, tied ropes tightly around their necks, and swung them into eternity. Both men admitted their guilt, but claimed that they had killed the Sheriff in self-defense. The new Sheriff was taken completely by surprise and it would have been useless for him to make resistance, as the mob was sufficiently powerful to have overcome him in a minute.

Shocking Crime.

A shocking double tragedy occurred near Allendale, N. J., Monday. Isaac Caryle of New York City, while a guest at the country residence of the Wandells, the family of the late Civil Justice Wandell, was shot down in cold blood by William Doling, who had been a coachman in the service of the family for nineteen years. After murdering Caryle the coachman attempted to kill Frank Wandell, and failing in this, turned the weapon on himself and sent a bullet through his own heart. Not the slightest motive can be ascribed for the terrible crime. The coachman and Mr. Caryle had been the best of friends, so far as is known.

Uniting Against England.

A dispatch from St. Petersburg says: The Novo Vremya makes the statement that the Czar's tour shows that Berlin and Vienna, as well as Paris and St. Petersburg, are conscious of the necessity of common action by the Powers to defeat the political designs of Great Britain, which, it is added, are clearly displayed in recent events in Turkey. The item ends with an intimation that the British press has attached considerable hope for the success of Great Britain's policy to the fact that death has removed Prince Lobanoff-Rostovsky, the Russian Minister for Foreign Affairs, who is understood to have been a strong opponent of England.

Senator's Voorhees' Health.

Terre Haute (Ind.) special: Senator Voorhees is very ill and failing so rapidly that his friends fear he will be unable to take part in the campaign. The continued delay and doubt as to his purpose and physical ability to take part in the campaign is causing much private comment and conjecture in political circles. With the exception of a few intimate friends here at his home, no one has authentic information as to the present condition of his health, and nothing at all has been heard in an authoritative way on the political issues of the campaign.

Head-on Collision.

Erie passenger train No. 5 and freight train No. 1200, came together in a head-on collision on a curve at Enon, Ohio. Both engines rolled down an embankment. Passenger Engineer Fraley of Galion, was severely injured and may not recover. No one else was hurt beyond being cut and bruised. The freight was running extra and overlooked the passenger train.

Robert Beatty Pardoned.

Robert Beatty of Pittsburgh, Pa., who was serving seven years for complicity with Hugh F. Dempsey, the Knights of Labor leader, in the alleged conspiracy to poison non-union workmen in the Carnegie mills during the strike at Homestead in 1892, has been pardoned by Governor Hastings. Dempsey was pardoned last winter.

Cuba an Ash Heap.

Charles Raltare, who has been serving in the insurgent army, has reached Jacksonville, Fla., from Cuba. He gives a thrilling account of the raids made by insurgents at Manzanilla, Cienfuegos, Batabana and Bejucal. He says Cuba is now an ash heap and that insurgent success is assured.

Another Monte Carlo.

Alexander D. Hannah and David Hogg, wealthy Chicagoans, are, it is stated, endeavoring to purchase Mackinac Island, at the northern end of Lake Michigan. It is said to be their intention to spend half a million dollars or more to make the resort similar to Monte Carlo.

SUSPICIOUS MURDER.

FARMER'S WIFE AND GRANDMOTHER DIE SUDDENLY.

Young Agriculturist Said to Have Loved Another Girl Whom He at Once Married—Suspicion Is Aroused and His Arrest Follows.

Murder Mystery in Iowa.

James Paul is a young farmer just 26 years old, who lives, when at home, in a neat cottage on a picturesque spot the other side of Homer, ten miles from Webster City. He is now in jail charged with murdering his wife and her grandmother by administering poison.

MISS HARTMAN.

Last Fourth of July eve the young woman whom Paul led to the altar six years ago, died. On the night of Independence day he attended a "patriotic" dance, at which he was the escort of Miss Hartman, to whom for months he had been paying devoted attention. The following Sunday morning "Grandma" Dulin, Mrs. Paul's grandmother, and for the week since his wife's death his housekeeper, was dead, too. The old woman was buried, and about a week later the widower and Miss Hartman were married. Then Paul was arrested, charged with double murder. His bride of a week went back to her home to live with her parents, and now denounces the accused.

Such is the outline of the Paul mystery, which promises to be most sensational. The circumstances surrounding the death of the two women and the subsequent behavior of the man who should have been protector, point to him as being the one responsible for the sudden death of both. But if he is convicted it must be by circumstantial evidence or his confession.

James Paul might be called good-looking. His hair is light and his eyes are blue. He has the appearance of an honest man. He has resided in the county five years and has many acquaintances, who were shocked beyond measure when he was arrested, charged with the double murder. Paul's wife died under suspicious circumstances on the 3d of July. On the night of the 4th he was enjoying life at a country dance, where his partner of the evening was the one he made his wife two weeks afterward. Before the marriage ceremony, however, there was an obstacle apparently in the way. The neighbors say it was the grandmother of Mrs. Paul. His wife, before her death, had been the joy and pride of "Grandma" Dulin, as she was called, and it was folly to think she would ever give her consent to the marriage of her grandson-in-law so soon after the death of her treasure.

"GRANDMA" DULIN

The story the neighbors tell, and they told it under oath before the Grand Jury, is that Saturday afternoon after the death of his wife Paul was with "Grandma" Dulin. They talked about the death of his wife and how lonesome he would be without her. The noon hour came and the old lady, feeble as she was, moved herself around and prepared dinner for the two. Paul was with her in the kitchen and she had his sympathy. They partook of the meal. "Jim, this tea doesn't taste right," she said. "There is a bitter taste to it that I don't like. I can't drink any more of it." She had only finished a half of the cup, but two days afterward she died in spasms. Paul's arrest followed, and then commenced the unraveling of the chain of circumstances which makes the outlook gloomy for the accused. He was brought to the Webster City jail, where he has since maintained a discreet silence. He only denies his guilt and insists his wife and her grandmother died from natural causes.

Paul was hardly placed safely behind the bars before the proper officers commenced gathering evidence. The remains of his wife had been laid to rest in a cemetery in Webster County, only a few miles from her former home. This was done in accordance with her expressed wishes in life. The remains of "Grandma" Dulin were interred in Hamilton County. Both the bodies were exhumed. The stomachs were sent to State Chemist Floyd Davis at Des Moines for analysis. In a few days word came from Des Moines that unmistakable signs of strychnine poisoning had been found.

Miss Hartman, whom Paul married so soon after the death of his wife and "Grandma" Dulin, is scarcely 18 years of age. Her parents are respectable people living on a farm a mile south of Homer. She has had many suitors for her hand, but has refused them all. Her parents say they thought her of a retiring disposition, and in no way sought to influence her selection of company. They had never noticed that there was more than a passing acquaintance between her and Paul, and when the fact of her marriage with him was brought to their attention they would not believe it. Their daughter took the marriage certificate to their house and showed them that it was true before they could be convinced. Knowing of the short time that had elapsed since the death of Mrs. Paul, they denied her the house. When her husband was arrested she was left without means and alone. She returned again to her father's house and was given a home. No one now condemns Paul more strongly than does his new wife and her parents.

For the fourth time in its history the Wisting Opera House, the leading theater of Syracuse, N. Y., was badly damaged by fire.

COMMANDER CLARKSON.

New Head of the G. A. R. Is Very Popular with the "Boys."

Thaddeus Stevens Clarkson, the new commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, was a candidate before the Louisville national encampment last year, but finally declined to enter the race against Gen. Walker. He is well known and well liked in the Grand Army, especially in the West. He was born at Gettysburg, Pa., in 1840. He was educated three miles from the great battlefield of Antietam. He enlisted April 16, 1861, within two hours after the appearance of President Lincoln's call for 75,000 men for three months, in Company A, First Illinois Artillery. He went to Cairo, served under Gen. Grant there; re-enlisted for the war July 16, 1861; was promoted Dec. 1, 1861, to adjutant of the Thirteenth Illinois Cavalry; served with that regiment, and on the staff of Gen. John W. Davidson, participating in the battles with that commander on the march to Helena and Little Rock, Ark. He was assigned to command it during the Arkansas campaign. In August, 1863, he assisted in raising the Third Arkansas Cavalry of Union white men of that State; was promoted to major and commanded the regiment until nearly the close of the war, participating in nearly all of the battles in Arkansas under Gen. Steele. On Nov. 11, 1862, he was married to Mary Beecher Matterson, and to-day has five children. He came to Nebraska, settling in Omaha, with is brother, the late Bishop Clarkson, in March of 1866, and has lived in the State for thirty years. He was postmaster of Omaha under President Harrison's administration. Maj. Clarkson was on the executive committee of the national council of administration, G. A. R., for three consecutive years, was elected department commander of Nebraska at the encampment in February, 1890, and has been commander of the Loyal Legion of Nebraska.

MAJ. THADDEUS S. CLARKSON.

LABOR IN LINE.

Toilers Turn Out to Celebrate Their Annual Festival.

The labor organizations of Chicago celebrated Labor Day with a parade in which probably 40,000 men participated, practically every trades union in the city being represented. The weather was ideal and the streets were thronged at an early hour by the sons of toil and their families. Their shops and factories were generally closed in recognition of the workingman's holiday and all public offices, the Board of Trade and many downtown stores remained closed all day. The chief attraction of the day was the speech of William J. Bryan at Sharpshooters' Park in the afternoon. There was also speaking at Ogden's Grove by prominent labor leaders.

Long before 2:30, the hour set for the arrival of William J. Bryan, Sharpshooters' Park was filled with laboring men. Outside a crowd of unnumbered thousands had gathered, waiting impatiently to see the apostle of free silver. Every tree within hearing of the speaker's stand was filled with those seeking an unobstructed view. As Mr. Bryan's carriage neared the park the densely packed crowds gathered there set up a roar that lasted for fully ten minutes. Then with a rush the gates were broken down. The police were powerless to control the crowd, and in a short time the park was one dense mass of crushed but still cheering humanity. No one was seriously injured in the jam, though one or two women were removed in a fainting condition.

The Labor Day parade in Kansas City exceeded that of past years in point of numbers. Five thousand workingmen in line passed through the streets, the beautiful weather making it a success. Business was suspended and the streets were lined with people.

In Washington, D. C., Labor Day was celebrated with the usual street parade and picnics and excursions by the several union organizations. The weather was perfect and an unusual number of sporting and other events served to bring out large crowds.

The workingmen of Milwaukee laid aside their tools of trade and appeared in gala attire. The weather was favorable for marching and the parade in the forenoon was voted a success. Grand Marshall Frank Miller stated that he thought he had 7,000 or 8,000 men in line.

Labor Day in Cleveland was celebrated by a monster parade of workingmen in which it was estimated that from 10,000 to 15,000 men took part. A feature of the demonstration was a number of marchers representing colored slaves and tramps, illustrating their views of the present conditions of the workingman.

WANT SILVER DOLLARS.

Treasury Officials Receive a Large Number of Requests Daily.

A Washington correspondent says that the treasury officials are in daily receipt of a large number of requests asking for silver dollars of this year's coinage in exchange for silver certificates or other lawful money. Many of these requests come from persons who seem to doubt the truth of the monthly coinage statement, while others ask for shipments of 1896 dollars with a view to refuting statements that no silver dollars are now being coined.

These requests have been complied with as fast as received, and the treasury officials desire to call public attention to the fact that when silver dollars are ordered in sums of or multiples of $500 they are shipped at the expense of the Government, but when smaller sums are ordered, the shipments are made at the expense of the person ordering.

There is now in the treasury $10,500,399 in free silver, that is, silver which may be obtained in exchange for any lawful money, but the demand just now is so keen for 1896 dollars that it seems probable that by the beginning of October the department will be compelled to decline to pay out silver dollars, except in exchange for silver certificates or treasury notes of 1890.

The law requires certain amounts of silver to be held in the treasury to cover outstanding silver certificates and treasury notes, and when the minimum is reached silver payments would be refused even in exchange for gold or in payment of warrants on the treasury.

The number of standard silver dollars coined last August is shown by the official statement to have been $2,650,000; since Feb. 1 last, $11,212,412, and since November, 1893, $15,169,491. The coinage value of the silver bullion now on hand and on which the mints are now at work is $166,745,200, and it is said to be altogether probable that coinage will be continued at least until the stock on hand of standard dollars of 1890 has been increased to about $30,000,000, where it stood when the present administration went into office.

$21.48 PER CAPITA.

Circulation of This Country on September 1, 1896.

The Treasury Department's monthly circulation statement shows, as expected after the big excess of expenditures over receipts and the big decrease in the gold reserve and surplus cash in August, an unusually heavy net increase in the circulation last month. The treasury lost heavily in gold coin and silver certificates in August. The conspicuous changes in the circulation during the month were increases in gold coin circulation of $18,702,025, and in silver certificates $14,083,223; and on the other hand, increases of $5,445,804 in greenback circulation, $3,145,000 currency certificates, and $2,686,008 in silver treasury notes. The total circulation of the country on Sept. 1 is placed at $1,539,169,634, a per capita of $21.48, against $1,603,583,028 on Sept. 1 a year ago. The amounts of the various kinds of money in circulation on Sept. 1, 1896, and on Sept. 1 a year ago are shown by the following table:

Gold coin holdings decreased $12,810,170, silver bullion $2,072,018, and it lost $91,344 in subsidiary silver. On the other hand, its store of standard dollars increased $1,203,916, gold bullion $2,623,145, greenbacks $5,445,804, national bank notes $1,881,948, and silver treasury notes $1,084,008.

AMERICAN GOLD MINES SEIZED.

Canadian Surveyors Arrange to Confiscate Alaska Fields.

Interest has been aroused at the State Department by the recent action of Canadian Government surveyors in so locating the one hundred and forty-first meridian as to throw 200 gold mines into Canadian territory. This is likely at any time to precipitate such a conflict of authority as cannot be ignored by the Governments of the United States and Great Britain. These mines are now operated by Americans, thousands of whom have gone to the Alaskan fields since the discovery of gold. The miners will not readily submit to the rules and regulations prescribed by the Canadian mounted police. The officials of the State Department do not in any degree recognize the survey. A convention, joint committee and treaty will be required before this Government can acknowledge that the work has been performed. Negotiations are now pending with Great Britain for a convention to have a joint commission of astronomers appointed to survey and locate the one hundred and forty-first meridian from Mount St. Elias to the northern limit. The expectation prevails that in view of threatened disturbances, which may necessitate the sending of troops by both Governments to that region, the pending negotiations on the subject will be pressed to a conclusion.

GOVERNMENT CROP REPORT.

Corn Shows a Decline of Six Points and Wheat Is Less Promising.

The September report of the statistician of the Department of Agriculture shows a decline in the condition of corn from the August statement of 6 points, or from 96 per cent. in August to 90 in September. The general condition of wheat, considering both winter and spring varieties, when harvested, was 74.6, against 75.4 in 1895 and 83.7 in 1894. The reported conditions for the principal wheat States are as follows: Ohio, 52; Michigan, 75; Indiana, 66; Illinois, 77; Wisconsin, 70; Minnesota, 80; Iowa, 84; Missouri, 75; Kansas, 70; Nebraska, 77; South Dakota, 76; North Dakota, 61; California, 100; Oregon, 80; Washington, 75. Condition of oats when harvested was 74 per cent., against 77.3 in August; rye, 82; barley, 83.1; buckwheat, 93.2; tobacco, 81.5, a fall of 3 points since August; potatoes, 83.3, against 90.8 per cent. last year.

EGYPTIAN SNAKE-CHARMER.

Fascinating and Possibly True Story of Eastern Cunning.

The following story of a "snake charmer" is borrowed from the New York Sun, which in turn borrows it from a Paris paper. The reader is expected to use his own discretion as to believing or explaining it. The incident is said to have taken place in Cairo, where the narrator, Monsieur Vigouroux, while walking the streets with a friend, fell in with a "mild-looking young man" who professed to be a snake charmer. The two visitors engaged him to come to their hotel the next day, and give them an exhibition of his powers.

Guards were stationed around the building to prevent the charmer from getting into it before the appointed time. When he arrived he was led into the first courtyard. He was asked if there were any snakes there.

"Yes," he replied, "a great many."

As a precautionary measure he was conducted into an interior court in the center of the palace. There he was asked if he could catch a snake. The charmer whistled for a few seconds, and then listened attentively.

"Yes," said he, "there is a snake on this side," pointing to the wall. A bargain was then made with him, the rate being a shilling a snake. He immediately went to work with the air of a man who understood his business and was perfectly sure of the result.

Standing in the center of the court, gazing at the wall where he said the reptile was concealed, he began to recite a prayer or conjuration in Arabic, in which he addressed the serpent, saying in substance that everything and every creature must yield to the power of God. He also invoked Solomon and some celebrated Mussulman personages.

While he was reciting this formula he sometimes stood perfectly straight, sometimes he leaned forward, and lastly he fell on his knees. When he had finished he picked up a little rod that lay beside him, and scratched the wall with it, advancing toward the door of the building leading to the court. At the door he stopped and said:

"Here he is; come and look at him."

The party advanced, and on a line with his arm at the place where he had directed the rod, they distinctly saw the head of a snake protruding from a hole in the wall. The snake charmer grabbed the head and pulled out a long, thin and wriggling reptile. He made it fasten its fangs in his garment. Then he pulled violently and showed the snake's teeth in the stuff. At last he threw the reptile on the ground, excited it, and tossed it into his leather bag.

"How did you know," he was asked, "that there was a snake in that wall?"

"I smelt him," was the answer.

And certainly there seemed to be no room to suspect a trick. One of the party remarked that the charmer might possibly have snakes concealed in his clothes. The fellow immediately threw off his blue blouse, which was his only covering, and shook it in the presence of the assemblage. He was asked if there were any more snakes in that court. After a moment's inspection he replied:

"In this wall there is a big one and a little one."

He was told to catch the little one first. He recited his prayer, and added to it a command to the big snake to lie still while he captured the little one. Then he proceeded with his wand along the wall, as before. When he reached the door he called us, saying, "Here he is!"

The head was sticking out of the hole. He grabbed it, pulled out the snake, and broke its fangs in the manner described above. But the reptile bit him in the arm and drew blood. The bite didn't bother him. He threw the snake on the ground among the spectators, who stood in utter amazement. Then he went at work again.

It was the big snake's turn now. He was yanked out like the other two. Notwithstanding the apparent impossibility of fraud, the thing was so surprising that doubts were still expressed.

"Let him come into the garden," said one of the spectators, "and catch snakes there; then we will be convinced."

The charmer was led out into the garden. Near a heap of rubbish and weeds he began to whistle; then he announced a snake.

"Yes, there are two," said he. Then stooping down he pulled one out, and, as he had left his leather bag in the courtyard, he put the head of the reptile into his mouth and held it there while he secured the second.

Kipling's Snake.

CHAPTER I.

"Why, yes"—the speaker was Mrs. Denbigh—"now we are comfortably settled down at last, girls, we ought to advertise. What do you think, Elizabeth?"

Elizabeth was Mrs. Denbigh's second daughter, a lank, pale girl with brown hair and eyes.

"I was just thinking the very same thing, mother," she replied.

"And you, Nora?"

Mrs. Denbigh turned to her eldest daughter, whose gaze was riveted on the lank girl.

"I was thinking how we could alter Lizbeth's dress. Perhaps we can turn it sideways; things are worn to the side now. Yes, I think I see my way to that."

"I wish, my dear, you would not mind dress now," remonstrated the eldest lady. "What we want to see our way to is work."

"Precisely, mother, and if we want work we must dress well. Now, family, what is it? The advertisement plan? Well, I shall advertise for music lessons."

"And I for lessons in English," said Mrs. Denbigh.

"And I shall advertise for translation work," said Elizabeth.

"And I? What shall I do?"

The speaker was a dark, curly-headed girl of fourteen—Dorry.

"You? Oh, you can't do anything yet."

"Can't I? Won't I, though!" and the girl's dark eyes flashed.

A boy was standing beside her.

"I wish I could do something, too," he said, with the inimitable earnestness of manner with which manhood at eight is fond of setting off its sage remarks.

"You can," said Nora.

"What?"

"Help us to keep up appearances. Always look happy, even when we don't feel so; never tell any one how hard we work for the little we earn; to take ill luck quietly——"

"That's very hard," said the boy.

"And good luck quietly——"

"That's harder still," said the curly-headed girl from the floor where she was seated.

The boy was the child of Mrs. Denbigh's brother-in-law. The little fellow, whose birth in India had cost his mother's life, had been sent to Mrs. Denbigh by his father, with the request that she would bring him up with her own children.

The day following the above conversation three professional women advertised in the three papers of the German town of Ecks, where they had just located, and were known as "poor gentlefolk," and the day after was one of great excitement to at least two of them.

"Mother!"

The speaker was Dorry."

"What?"

"I see a gentleman looking up at the different houses. I wonder if he isn't for us. Rush to the piano, Nora, and be playing! Lizbeth—where's Lizbeth? It might be for her."

Lizbeth was frantically arranging a pile of papers in "admired disorder" on a little table, to look like manuscripts.

This feat was still in the course of performance when a gentleman entered, and Nora, unconscious of the little comedy, rose to greet him with her blandest smile.

He was the first to speak.

"Good-py. Hat I, my lady, the bleesure to speak to Mistress Denbig?"

"No, I am Miss Denbigh," replied Nora, suppressing a titter. "My mother is not often to be seen in the daytime, but you may find her any evening between six and seven; or perhaps you can arrange with me."

"May I ask what are your mistress mother's derrems?"

"Three marks a private lesson."

"Oh, then I do lament. That is too much for me." How motch dakes your mistress mother in a glass? How motch scholars, I mean?"

At this moment the hall-door bell rang again, and in walked a lady, arrayed in bonnet and shawl, and holding a parasol in her hand—Mrs. Denbigh. Then the conversation in the drawing room was conducted placidly enough. Herr Meyer declared himself desirous of entering Mrs. Denbigh's class, and Mrs. Denbigh, though she only now learned of the existence of this class, declared herself quite willing to take Herr Meyer; only she thought it would be best for Herr Meyer to commence alone.

"Upon the glass derrems, my lady?"

"Yes; as it would only be to prepare you for the class. Do not say 'my lady' to me; you should say 'madam.'"

"Oh, thank you, madam; you allow that I make a note of that?"

And out flew Herr Meyer's note book.

Then he rose to go.

"Good-py."

"Good morning," replied Mrs. Denbigh.

"Good morning? What, you say not 'good-py!' Of that also, madam, I will make a note."

And out flew Herr Meyer's note book again.

"Then I shall expect you at six o'clock on Thursday," were Mrs. Denbigh's parting words.

Hereupon the bell was rung again. This time it was an official to request the removal of a diminutive flower pot from one of the window sills, ere it should perhaps fall and cause loss of life to the passers-by.

"This is living abroad," moaned Mrs. Denbigh, while the girls and Tom danced a jig in the next room, preparatory to posing for the next visitor, who arrived in the midst of their merriment, being the servant from the story beneath, with the request that the family would cease dancing, as the house was not very solidly built.

"I'm truly glad, my dears," said Mrs. Denbigh, profiting by the moment's silence to deliver herself of a few serious words, and, gazing with maternal severity at the trio, who looked wickedly inclined to test the solidity of the house once for all by waltzing through every room; "I'm truly glad, my dears, that the houses are so constructed as to force you to put an end to these childish outbursts of merriment. Remember, you are now, two of you, starting with me as professional women. Really, girls, I rely on your becoming steady."

This last sentence was a masterpiece of motherly diplomacy. The "girls," thus flatteringly appealed to, at once sat down with solemn faces; that is, Nora and Elizabeth. Not so Miss Dorry. She dropped down on the floor beside her mother, and hid her black, curly head in the maternal lap.

Mrs. Denbigh laid her hand on it.

"Well, daughter?"

The girl looked up.

"I wish I could be a professional woman, too," she said, "and help," and this time she brushed away a great tear that was not a tear of laughter.

Such was little Dorry.

CHAPTER II.

Thursday following.

"Yes, that looks very nice," said Mrs. Denbigh, as she entered a room, where on a table were arranged pens, ink and paper. "Only one thing, my dear, you have forgotten. We none of us have a watch. How am I to know when the hour is up?"

"I have an idea," exclaimed Dorry.

"And what is that, pray?"

"There is a clock one can hear striking from the back of the house. I shall keep on the qui vive, and when it strikes seven, sneeze outside the door here. You will understand, mother."

A few minutes later Herr Meyer arrived. A quarter past six, half past six, a quarter to seven, and at last seven struck. Then Miss Dorry Denbigh went to the class room door.

"Hatt—chish!"

Still Mrs. Denbigh continued: "A little flatter your 'a,' please, in that word 'man.' We do not say 'monn' in English, neither do we say 'men,' but between the two, thus, 'man.'"

"Hatt—chish!' louder than ever sneezed Miss Denbigh, knowing well that her mother once launched into a linguistic discourse of this nature, the lesson would probably last another hour.

Mrs. Denbigh sighed; but Dorry was inexorable. She was forced to give in. "This is a subject,' she said, "we must return to next lesson. It is already seven o'clock."

At six o'clock the next morning Dorry was up and dressed.

"Elizabeth!"

"What do you want?" Saying which Betty sits up, and begins rubbing her eyes.

"You said you'd come with me. See, I'm dressed already."

Some minutes after they stole silently out of the house.

"Have you paper?" asked Elizabeth.

"Yes, and string."

"If we shouldn't be able to carry it?"

"Of course we shall, it was advertised as small," and the girls walk on silently for a space.

"Have you any money, Dorry?"

Answer, after a pause: "You know yourself, when I have spent the two marks, I shall have one mark left, our last silver piece. You don't want me to change that, I suppose, to buy bread on the way, and we able to get it on credit at the baker's opposite us. You'll eat all the more heartily when we get home, for waiting a while, and letting yourself get hungry."

Elizabeth made no reply. She had never "let" herself get hungry in her life before as she now felt, and the cool morning air was doing its best to make the distant prospects of breakfast at home seem more and more dismal. Finally they came to a gloomy-looking house, then up one, two, three, four flights of stairs, and they found themselves in a small, untidy room.

Here Dorry produced her advertisement, and Elizabeth asked eagerly: "Have you sold it?" for which her sister gave her a lecture, winding up with, "as if we should appear to care whether he had or not!" to which Elizabeth made the not illogical answer, in tones equally indignant: "As if he could think we should break our necks almost, mounting four flights of stairs the first thing in the morning, if we didn't!" an argument to which Dorry simply replied by a scornful look. She then turned to the man:

"I suppose you will let me have it for one mark and a half. Oh, you needn't trouble to lift your hands" (Herr Schmidt having adopted the attitude considered as best portraying astonishment). And she gave the man the string and paper with the words: "Paper it up, please, and cord it. We are in a hurry."

"Do you mean to carry it yourself?" (Herr Kaspar Schmidt looked more astonished than ever.) "Why, you couldn't lift it."

Dorry took the parcel in her hand.

"It isn't heavy at all!" she exclaimed. "Come, Bet. The buying of it is my doing, and I will carry it."

As they reached the park their faces grew serious, a most disagreeable circumstance having just taken place. As they passed the majestic-looking porter at the entrance a clear chime fell on the air, not from any of the churches near, nor the postoffice, nor the station; alas! no; but from a large brown paper parcel in the youngest Miss Denbigh's hand.

Now, it was nine o'clock by this time, just the hour on a bright summer morning when visitors flock to enjoy a walk in the park of Ecks. It must also be remembered that the Misses Denbigh were both young girls, and young girls, especially young Irish girls, could not but have a great objection to being seen in a crowded place, walking along with a paper parcel as big as a portmanteau, especially when the latter attracted the gaze of all admirers by sending forth chimes which, to quote Elizabeth, would have done credit to a cathedral. Here, no doubt, there was some exaggeration. Be that as it may, the majestic looking porter looked decidedly amazed, and a witty youth passing made an apt quotation from Goethe by observing: "Die Glocke kommit gewackelt."

CHAPTER III.

Elizabeth forthwith walked to some distance, and the next time the unlucky sound fell on the air, adopted an attitude of well-feigned discovery, with her face in the other direction, as if it had suddenly dawned on her whence the sound came.

Just then another sound fell on her ears. It was a gentleman seated on a bench near, who was observing the sisters, and at this little strategem positively shook the seat with laughter. Poor man! the eyes of the Misses Denbigh fell on him with withering scorn, as the youngest strode past him with a toss of her black, curly head, plainly intimating that of all the things she did most heartily despise, laughing gentlemen were the chief, while the clock in her hand boomed its loudest, as if adding that all the laughing gentlemen in creation shouldn't silence it.

The girls continued their way in silence, side by side, having agreed that it was best to share the humiliation, and keep each other in countenance. Meanwhile, the longest lane has a turning, and everything has an end. Not even a German clock can strike more than thirteen at nine o'clock in the morning, and at the thirteenth stroke the clock in Dorry Denbigh's hand relapsed into silence.

They reached an empty seat, and Elizabeth proposed their sitting down for a while that she might rearrange her hair. This accordingly they did, and as Dorry at this moment caught sight of an acquaintance she remarked to her sister: "I'm going to drop this parcel into the flower bed behind us. Mr. Thomson is coming towards us. He's so near-sighted he won't notice my doing so from where he now is, and I wouldn't for the world he should see us carrying such a thing when he comes up. We can wait till he goes on then, and take it out again."

No sooner said than done. With the most innocent face in the world Dorry tripped over to the bed, "dropped" her bete noire into it and then walked back to her seat.

"Ah, how do you do, Miss Daury?"

"Quite well, thank you."

Meanwhile Mr. Thomson, himself an oddity, had taken a fancy to the odd girl. He had just been marketing—he went to the fruit market every day—and, as was his wont, offered Dorry a peach. Three times a week Dorry met Mr. Thomson at the market, and every time he offered her a peach. To-day he had only met her by chance, but the peach was offered the same as usual, and, as usual, accepted and dropped into Dorry's pocket—to be cut in five pieces when she reached home.

"A fine day, Miss Daury," Mr. Thomson now said. He was also not a person of many words. He always said: "A fine day, Miss Daury," every time he met this young lady. He now said, drawing himself up, and looking about him:

"How brightly the sun is shining, is it naut, Miss Daury?"

"Yes, very brightly."

This addition to Mr. Thomson's and her ordinary conversation was a phenomenon. It was but natural that it should be followed by another, as it was, for the smile had scarcely vanished from Dorry's lips when it struck one-quarter past nine from the flower bed behind her.

"Did you naut hear it strike, Miss Daury?" asked Mr. Thomson.

"Why, yes, but, dear me, it's always striking here. Not a building but has a clock on it."

"The sound seemed to me to come from the flower bed behind us."

"Really? Well, I hardly think Germans would put a clock there" (with a ghastly little laugh). "There might be a sun dial, but sun dials don't strike."

"No, sun dials do naut strike," said Mr. Thomson, slowly.

He never made use of abbreviations, hence the "do naut."

After this brisk dialogue, it was but natural that the conversational powers should begin to flag on both sides. The company sat on in silence, unbroken until Elizabeth passed the seemingly commonplace remark:

"We must not stay sitting here too long, Dorry, or it will strike half past, then three-quarters, and then fourteen—ten, I mean."

There was a slight quiver in her voice as she made the last correction.

"True," replied Dorry, in a would-be sprightly tone, addressing Mr. Thomson. "We should be going home, I think," and she rose.

She intended to walk to the gate of the park with her sister and Mr. Thomson, who seemed determined to sit on the bench as long as they did; then she would return and fetch the clock. Scarcely had she resolved on this, however, when she saw the eyes of a park ranger fixed on the peculiar brown-paper parcel in the flower bed. If she left the place the clock would be taken.

"Well, Miss Daury, have you forgauten anything?"

"I—yes—no—only——"

"A—a present for my mother, which I had hidden in that flower bed."

A Scotchman never sees a joke, say those of England and the Sister Isle. A closer acquaintance with those north of Tweed might show us that they might often see and relish a joke when we in our density imagine it lost to them.

Not a smile crossed the face of Mr. Thomson; but in the twitching of the eyelids toward the region of the crow's-feet, a brother Scot would have seen that the little Denbigh comedy was by no means lost on him.

With great apparent earnestness he said:

"Shall I fetch it for you, Miss Daury?"

"Oh, no, please not; it must be carried very carefully. I had rather fetch it myself, thank you."

And Dorry lifted it. Not long after they were at their own hall door.

Mrs. Denbigh opened it.

"Oh, mother!' (Elizabeth was the first to speak). "You saw us, of course, coming down the street. It was so cheap" (looking at the parcel, the contents of which she evidently imagined her mother must know as well as she, from a glitter of painted wood through the paper), "and we met Mr. Thomson, and it struck from the flower bed behind us—thirteen, fancy, mother! and we pretended we didn't know what it was—it was such a humiliation—and I'm so famished, mother!—and I thought one gentleman would kill himself with laughing—so unfeeling! And when it struck thirteen, my hair fell down. That's all, mother! Do give us some breakfast!"

It is, perhaps, unnecessary to say that this Elizabethan narrative was so incoherent that Mrs. Denbigh found herself no wiser after it than before. Meanwhile Dorry took her breakfast in dignified silence, while Nora, having just marched Tom out of the room, this young man having taken advantage of the general excitement to practice a new species of somersault, in which he turned heels over head instead of head over heels, commenced opening and examining the parcel.

"What a beauty!" she then said, with difficulty raising the clock and putting it on the table. Now, this was genuine admiration; for the eldest Miss Denbigh, like her sisters, not having been brought up in the lap of luxury, could admire a clock, albeit the paint covering its wood was scant and scratched, the glass broken, and several of the numbers missing off its face, this giving it a decidedly dismal "never-for-ever" appearance.

But alas! the clock never struck again. It was wound up and shaken; Mrs. Denbigh even tried her skill at the works; in vain. Nora hung it up high in a dark corner, where she declared it gave a furnished appearance to the room, and when the time of day was alluded to before visitors she would look up at it, then turn away with a disgusted expression, as much as to say, "Dear me, not wound up again!" which was, of course, base "fibbing" in its way, and moralists will shake their heads and sigh.

But such was Nora.

CHAPTER IV.

"Miss Denbigh, the pianist, at home?"

"Yes; will you please walk in here?" and Tom opened the reception room door in his best manner, then off in search of the pianist, who was deshabille, in other words, in a faded cotton jacket and underskirt, washing the collars and cuffs of the family.

A few moments later she hastened away, looking as perfect a little gentlewoman, as if she had not been an instant before leaning over a basin with her sleeves turned up to her elbows.

The lady wished to know if Miss Denbigh had an elementary course, and Miss Denbigh said she intended beginning one, whereupon Mrs. Smith begged she would take her little son as a pupil into it. At eleven o'clock on the Thursday following Master Smith, a small, freckled child, with bold eyes and a shrill voice, rang at Mrs. Denbigh's door.

The lesson passed off quietly; but when she rose Nora Denbigh felt for the first time that she was indeed now a professional woman, and realized all the weariness that was to come to her as such. When the boy had left she leaned her face upon the desk of her piano and gave herself up to thoughts, then suddenly drew herself up and played a "Ballade' by Reinecke, a wild, changeful piece, full of melody. Her face brightened as she continued to play, and toward the end there was not a shadow on it.

Elizabeth had entered the room, carrying a small table over to the window, it having suddenly struck her that its upper woodwork might need a washing. She then drew down the Venetian blind on the outside, not to be seen by the neighbors, set a chair on the table, a footstool on the chair, a pile of music on that, and, finally, mounting all these, began scrubbing the portion of the woodwork nearest the ceiling with energy. In the midst of this occupation a gentleman's voice at the door asked in German:

"Miss Denbigh, the translator, at home?"

Now I ask any of my readers to picture to himself what the result would have been if Elizabeth, clad as she was, had stepped down from her perch, with a scrubbing brush in one hand and a cloth in the other, and had said:

"Yes, Miss Denbigh is at home, you see her before you."

There would have been something sublime in her doing so; something of the spirit of Diogenes receiving Alexander in his tub. But Elizabeth had nothing sublime in her character, nothing of the spirit of Diogenes. She was a simple Irish girl, and as a simple Irish girl she behaved.

(To be continued.)

The Baron's Ruse.

Among the bravest and most energetic of the Silesian nobleman who gave trouble to Frederick the Great of Prussia was Baron Lieben.

Once upon a time a crowd of riotous peasants came to the baron's castle of Falconberg, making the most outrageous demands, threatening to burn, kill, and lay waste if their demands were not complied with.

The nobleman retired to his armorial chamber, and directed that the deputation should be admitted. The aggressive peasants, to the number of fifty or more, well heated with liquor, entered the room, and when they were all in the baron shut the heavy oaken door and locked it, and threw the key out through the open window. Then he sat down upon his sofa, with a powder barrel at his elbow, and taking from his mouth the well-lighted cigar which he had been smoking, he exclaimed in tones of dire and dreadful wrath:

"Miscreants, if you do not immediately go down upon your knees and ask my pardon, and then go out at yonder window, I will apply my cigar to this barrel of powder, and we will all go to destruction together!"

The effect was magical. The peasants knew the old warrior too well to think of doubting the truth of his diabolical threat. Down they went upon their knees, sobered enough to ask his pardon, and they went out at the window, after the key, much preferring the risk of injury from the leap to remain in the neighborhood of that dreadful magazine, with the lighted cigar of Baron Lieben in such terrible juxtaposition.

The New and the Old.

Fifteen years ago the British warship Canada was launched. A week or two ago she was condemned and advertised for sale. The modern iron-clad is a very short-lived as well as costly machine, compared with the "old ironsides." Nelson's Victory was forty years old when she flew his flag at Trafalgar. Our Old Ironsides was sound and seaworthy after fifty years of service and the Constitution took a cruise under her own canvas when she was more that 70 years old. The modern iron or steel war vessel is a huge, delicately adjusted machine, which passes a brief, feverish existence between the stocks and the scrap-iron heap, being over-much of the time in the hospital undergoing repairs. How a genuine "old salt," if any such survive, must lament the "decadence in naval warfare" and the glories of the spick-and-span clippers and frigates of the days when America led the world in the shipbuilding art. These grimy, floating machine-shops and electrical laboratories don't seem to have much in them that appeals to a sailor's heart. The engineer has become in some respects a bigger man than the seaman, and the line and staff will have to recognize that disagreeable fact sooner or later.—Buffalo Commercial.

Why He Did Not Speak.

Augustus Thomas, at the Lotos Club dinner given in New York City recently for Chauncey M. Depew, told a story about the neat manner in which a guest who was invited to speak at a dinner, without notice, evaded the issue. The dinner was one at which Mr. Depew and Gen. Horace Porter had each made an address. When the speaker was called upon, he said: "I want to tell you a story. There once lived in the West a parson. He had a large parish; in fact, was the regular circuit rider of the district. He was away from home when twins were born to him. When he got back the attending physician tip-toed into the room and turning down the coverlet, showed him the rosy, sleeping babies. The preacher looked at them long and earnestly, and then he turned to the doctor and said feelingly, 'Doctor, they are both fine boys. I wouldn't take $1,000 apiece for them now—and I wouldn't give a blamed cent for another one.' That is my feeling and yours. You don't want 'another one' after what has gone before."

Egyptian Medical Receipts.

George Ebers, the Egyptologist, has discovered that many of the queer medical receipts found in old English and German books came from the ancient Egyptians. They were not known to the Greeks, but were spread from Salerno, the great medical school of the Middle Ages, to which they must have come through Coptic and Arabic translations.

STRENGTH AND BEAUTY.

Combination to Be Secured in the New Brooklyn Bridge Towers.

When the new Brooklyn bridge was determined upon the hope was frequently expressed that more attention would be paid to artistic beauty than was manifested in the case of the present structure. The commissioners had in view from the first the artistic appearance of the bridge, and Chief Engineer Buck makes the assertion that the great structure, though of steel, will be thoroughly artistic and ornamental. Mr. Buck authorizes the publication of a picture of one of the towers. The steel portion is 330 feet high above the stone foundation, which will be twenty-two and one-half feet above high water.

ONE OF THE TOWERS OF THE NEW BROOKLYN BRIDGE.

KILLING PARISIAN DOGS.

Their Carcasses Are Used in Making Glue and Fertilizer.

Many worthless and some valuable dogs are killed by the dog-catchers of Paris. The animals are not drowned, but are smothered to death. The method of killing the animals is quick and efficient. Standing on a narrow-gauged bit of rail track is an iron cage on a four-wheeled truck. This cage or coop is large enough to hold from twenty to thirty dogs. As soon as there are sufficient animals the cage is filled and a couple of men send it on its journey of death.

In the corner of the room is a huge iron box, with which is connected an enormous tube supplied with valves and stopcocks. The iron cage, which fits this box to a nicety, is pushed into the box, which is shut hermetically. As soon as the cage is in and the apparatus closed the man opens the valve of the large tube mentioned. This lets in a deadly gas that kills the dog almost instantaneously. A man watches the death struggles of the dogs through a small glass at the side of the box. It only takes three minutes to fill the cage and dispatch its contents.

SUFFOCATING THE DOGS.

As soon as the animals are suffocated they are dumped into special little blue-painted wagons and carted off. The killed dogs are taken to Petit-Ivry, outside of the fortifications. As soon as a wagon arrives here it is met by two men, who dump the carcasses on the ground and throw them into a small shed. Here the work is finished. Two or three fellows take hold of the bodies, cut off the four feet and strip off the hide in the twinkling of an eye. Then the cadavers are passed to another, who cuts off the flesh, which is thrown in a heap. The hides are sent to the tanner, the bones are transformed into glue, and the flesh turned into fertilizing powder. Thus ends the career of the pampered Parisian pet.

WINGLESS BIRD.

It Cannot Fly, but It Gets There Just the Same.

The apteryx is a wingless bird and one of the queerest of the feathery tribe. It has been discovered in New Zealand and several specimens were recently brought to this country. It is about two feet high and has a bill nearly half as long as itself. Near the end of this bill is its nose, which is of use to the creature in picking up its food in the dark. During the day it generally hides in the thick underbrush or in caves among the rocks.

BIRD WITHOUT WINGS.

Worms are its chief food, and it is extremely expert in prying them out from under stones and logs.

The Australians call it the kiwi-kiwi. It belongs to a family that is extinct save for it, and at the rate at which the apteryx is disappearing it will soon follow the dodo and become a wingless memory. Nature to a certain extent compensates for lack of wings by giving it most muscular legs, which enable it to get over the ground faster than the average hog can run.

She Is Running for Elector.

If the Republicans of Wyoming win in the presidential election one of their electors will be Mrs. Sarah Malloy, of Cheyenne, whom they have placed on their ticket. Mrs. Malloy is not a professional politician and her husband is a Democrat. She is the mother of four children and is domestic in her tastes. The Republicans claim that her candidacy is a source of strength to the ticket.

MRS. MALLOY.

It is very easy for the people to be mistaken; Sousa's marches are popular.

A Correction.

Thursday's Daily.

In our statement in yesterday's DAILY and to-day's WEEKLY in regard to the fusion between democrats and populists on the county ticket, there was a serious, but unintentional error. The article said that Mr. Lockwood was dropped from the populist ticket because they, the populists did not want him on. The sentence should have read.

"The democrats did not want the populist nominee in this district on their ticket, as many of them believe he has been voting the republican ticket all the time."

Our statement was simply a careless one, made by writing the article in a hurry, and there is no desire to shift the responsibility of the change from the shoulders of the democratic members of the conference cemmittee. They have all along contended that Mr. Lockwood was only playing into the hands of the republicans, and they insisted that the populists ought to put on a man known to be a reliable and earnest member of that party. This was agreed to by the populist members of the committee, and in this way Mr. Shoemaker takes Mr. Lockwood's place on the ticket.

Not Bought.

The Dispatch has several articles to carry the idea that Grube and Francis were promised county offices if they would help to bring about fusion between the democrats and populists. We have it from members of that conference committee, that no word was said at any time about any such matters. The agreement to fuse was made solely in the hope that from the resulting victory, if we gain the victory, good would come to the people so long under republican misrule. As to its reference to Mr. Hines, the fusion is as much to his benefit as to that of any other candidate., Every true man in both democratic and populist ranks will work for him, knowing he will be a man competent to transact the business of the office.

Eyes Opened.

Oscar Gandy was up from Churubusco Wednesday and in talking with some of our business men, admitted that though he was recently a gold democrat of the most pronounced type, he is now convinced that the free silver doctrine is right. This change in his mind was caused by going about among the farmers. He came to the conclusion that something was radically wrong when farms are worth only about half what they were twenty-five years ago, although since that time valuable improvements have been added. No plan offered by the republican gold men gives any chance for making this better. He concludes, as farmers are generally concluding, that we must try silver. It can't make things worse.

Dollars of '96.

Treasury officers say there is a great demand for silver dollar of this year, from some cause or other. It is supposed that this call for new silver dollars is from persons who wish to prove that new dollars are being coined. If any sum of $500 or multiples of that is called for, the express charge is paid by government. But if under $500, the purchaser must pay express. There is now over 10 millions of silver dollars in the treasury, over and above the amount kept to redeem silver certificates, etc.

The law requires certain amounts of silver to be held in the treasury to cover outstanding silver certificates and treasury notes, and when the minimum is reached silver payments would be refused even in exchange for gold or in payment of warrants on the treasury.

The number of standard silver dollars coined this August is shown by the official statement to have $2,650,000; since Feb. 1 last, $11,212,412 and since November, 1893, $15,169,491. The coinage value of the silver bullion now on hand and on which the mints are now at work $166,745,200, and it is said to be altogether probable that coinage will be continued at least until the stock on hand of standard dollars of 1890 has been increased to about $30,000,000, where it stood when the present administration went into office.

Railway Men.

The insolence of certain railway officials would be surprising were it not becoming so common. Just now every railway station in the country is being flooded by an insulting circular whose only purpose, unblushingly told, is to bulldoze railway employes into voting the republican ticket. These circulars are supposed to be sent out by the "Railway Age", a paper that in ordinary times is supposed to be devoted to railway statistics and similar matter. But as it is marked "Form 7," it plainly originates in the offices of some railroad company. We give the first paragraph.

RAILWAY MEN.

"All over the country the earners of wages are stirring. They are arising, shoulder to shoulder, to face assaults of Free Silver forces on their welfare and their homes. You, railway men, have the power to protect yourselves. Your votes alone will stem the tide in many a doubtful state. And what have you to gain by having your wages paid in dollars worth fifty cents? What will the wreck of the nation's industries profit you,—you have no silver to be made into coin but only your labor and your brains for capital? For your honest work you have a right to get your pay in honest dollars—not in dollars that are worth half that value to you while the other half goes to the owner of the mine."

Now, isn't this a precious document? How many men, intelligent enough to turn a switch or fire an engine, can be made to believe that it is possible to pay them in "50-cent dollars while the other half goes to the owner of the mine." This would make the silver dollar worth 100 cents, a thing they now are busy denying, for if the railroad man gets 50 cents of each dollar and "the mine owner gets the other half," that necessarily makes that a 100-cent dollar. And in this case there are no 50-cent dollars. And if there are none, then how can the employe be paid in such? And if he could be paid a half of each dollar then how could that dollar be divided up with the mine owner? These fellows don't know "where they are at."

The other paragraphs are directed to "Railway Men of the south," then of the west, then east, and so on but the matter is about as satisfying as in what we have quoted.

IT IS ILLEGAL.

These over zealous officials should read sec. 2193 laws of Indiana, which is sec. 277 of our election law which reads:

"Whoever, for the purpose of influencing a voter, seeks by violence or threats of violence to enforce the payment of a debt; or to eject or threaten to eject from any house he may occupy; or begin a criminal prosecution; or to injure the business or trade of an elector; or if an employer of laborers or an agent of such employer, threatens to withhold the wages of or to dismiss from service any laborer in his employment: or refuses to allow to any such employe time to attend at the place of election and vote, shall be fined not more than $1,000 nor less than $20, imprisoned in the state prison not more than five years nor less than one year, and disfranchised and rendered incapable of holding any office of trust or profit for any determinate period."

From this it will be seen that the penitentiary yawns for these fellows and will get them "if they don't watch out."

Just the Same.

John Robbins refers to the cartoon of Manager Mark Hanna, holding McKinley and Hobart one on each knee, and telling the audience, that these "wax figgers" speak as he makes them, and it reminds John of a story. Two mutes recently met, after a separation of some years, and after talking with their fingers awhile on other subjects, one asked the other whom he was going to vote for for president. The other talked back that he would vote for McKinley. His friend also said he too would vote for the Canton man, "because," said the fingers, "McKinley is a mute like ourselves, except he don't use his fingers."

Wanted Gold

Henry Harmes, who lives over in Noble county, had agreed to loan a few hundred dollars to Mr. Eldridge, a well known farmer residing a few miles south of Corunna, in this county. Eldridge was building a new house and depended on Harmes for some extra money. Harmes came to time all right but wanted Eldridge to make a note payable in gold coin as he, Harmes, said he knew of a certainty, that Bryan would be elected, in which case he would want gold. He said also, that Bryan' election would bring wheat up to a dollar, to that he would really prefer to put his money into wheat now, as he considered that better than a gold note. Both are republicans, but Eldridge did not take the money and thinks of voting for Bryan.

Another Lie Nailed.

It is queer how a political campaign breeds falsehoods. The latest is one now being circulated about the recent purchase of Dr. Nusbaum's residence, by Dr. Sparling, his partner. The story is being pushed out that the contract of purchase provides for payments to be made in gold. There is not an atom of truth in this. We have this statement to back us up.

To the COURIER.

The story going about that the contract between myself and Mr. W. H. Nusbaum, for the purchase of his dwelling, stipulates for payment in gold, is utterly without truth. The payments are to be made in any lawful money, like and common contract, and no allusion whatever made to gold.

J. H. SPARLING, M. D.

McKinley's Gall.

The following is a verbatin. extract from the address of Wm. McKinley, Jr., at the Lincholn Day banquet in Memorial hall, Toledo, Ohio, February 12, 1891:

"During all of Grover Cleveland's years at the head of the government he was dishonoring one of our precious metals, one of our own great products, discrediting silver and enhancing the price of gold. He endeavored even before his inauguration to office, to stop the coinage of silver dollars, and afterwards, and to the end of his administration, persistently used his power to that end. He was determined to contract the circulating medium and demonetize one of the coins of commerce, limit the volume of money among the people, make money scarce and therefore, dear. He would have increased the value of money and diminished the value of everything else—money the master, everything else the servant. He was not thinking of the poor' then. He had left their side. He was not 'standing forth in their defense. Cheap coats, cheap labor and dear money. The sponsor and promoter of these professing to stand guard over the welfare of the poor and lowly. Was there over more inconsisteney or reckless assumption?"

What has changed McKinley's views on silver.

MAINE.

The State Election yesterday gave the republicans over 50,000 majority. It usually goes about 40,000. Little interest was taken by democrats as they do not generally believe in free silver in the eastern states, and staid away from the polls or voted the republican ticket. Still no republican state has come up to the democratic majority in Arkansas. The democrats in Maine had a gold state ticket in the field before the Chicago convention, and afterwards had to change their ticket to silver candidates. This disorganized them. BUTLER.

The new race track is completed and is the center of attraction for the small boys, the larger ones with wheel or horse, and promises to be of great advantage during the fair, relieving the gorged condition of the streets, and furnishing a good space for out of door sports, such as base ball, bicycle meets and horse exercise.

Rev. Smith closed his year with the U. B. friends last Sabbath. The M. E. friends closed their house and united with the U. B. friends at their church.

The Hicksville fair drew sparingly upon Butler people last week, perhaps not over one dozen of our people were there. The exhibits were neither numerous nor very attractive.

The political situation in our vicinity is growing quieter, and the indication of a very lively campaign are still unseen. The situation reminds one of the man who inquired which was the best hotel in the town, the reply being, if you go to either one you will wish you had gone to the other.

Dr. Shumaker visited St. Paul, during the recent soldier's reunion. Only a few of Butler's old soldiers attended the meeting.

An immense crop of tomatoes is being gathering by those cultivating them for the canning factory in this vicinity.

Died.

Clara Lula E. High, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Hign at her home, Concordia, Kansas, Sept. 11, 1896. She was born in Atchison, Kansas June 27, 1885, so that her age was 11 years, 2 months and 14 days. She was buried at Concordia, Sept. 12.

The above notice is from our friend J. D. High, at Concordia, and his letter gives voice to their sorrow, at the loss of their only child, a bright little girl. Their old friends in the county will sympathize deeply in their sore bereavement. Her is ease was diphtheria.

Tells of the "Crime"

GEOR E C. GORHAM HEARD FROM

He Cites Congressional Records and Speeches to Prove That Silver Was Demonetized in Secret—Senator Sherman Blamed for the Work

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 12.—George C. Gorham is again to the front. This time he affects to enlighten the people on "crime of 1873," and presents letters and documents in regard to the proceedings in congress that resulted in the demonetization of silver. Following is the communication:

Charles P. Johnson, St. Louis, Mo.

Dear Sir:—In compliance with your request I present the following narrative of the steps which led to the demonetization of silver in the United States in 1873 and the methods adopted to accomplish that result.

The national debt at the close of the war was about $2,500,000,000, the principal being payable by law in any legal tender money and the interest in coin. Certain great banking houses of Europe—following the example set by their predecessor in England immediately after the fall of Napoleon, and setting an example which was followed by their class in Germany after the Franco-Prussian war—inaugurated a scheme to greatly enhance the value of this vast obligation by making it payable in gold, and then increasing the value of gold. This involved two legislative measures:

1. Such changes in the laws of the United States as would provide for the payment of the principal of the bonds in coin only and would forbid the payment of any portion of it prior to the resumption of specie payment in legal tender treasury notes, in which it was expressly made payable by the law authorizing the issue of the bonds, and in exchange for which when greatly depreciated, they had all been issued.

2. The demonetization of silver in the United States, so that coin would mean gold only, and the value of that metal at the same time be greatly enchanced.

John Sherman a senator from Ohio, became the chief promoter of this foreign scheme. It was of course, also supported by the American satellites of the European houses referred to.

On May 10, 1867, being then on a visit to Paris, and having just visited London, he addressed a letter to the United States commissioner to the international conference on coinage, weights and measurers, then in session in the former city. In that letter, which was published, he strongly urged the adoption of the gold standard, and said of his own country: "As coin is not in general circulation, we can easily fix by law the size, weight and measure of future issues." The conference adopted the gold standard, and our commissioner reported that this result was largely due to the letter from Mr. Sherman.

ATTEMPTED TO FIX THE LAW.

Senator Sherman next attempted to "easily fix by law" in this country the new monetary system so essential to success of the scheme above described. To that end, on Feb. 1868, he introduced in the senate a bill (No 217,) to demonetize silver by discontinuing the coinage of the silver dollar. He reported this bill favorably from the finance committee, but Senator E. D. Morgan of New York vigorously antagonized it in a minority report.

There were present a few of the near relatives; among them being Mr. and Mrs. Pray, brother-in-law and sister of Mr. Leyda, who reside near Huntington. The Reception.

There was singing by Miss Bernice Soule, piano music by Miss Nelle Franks, Miss Edna Davis, Miss Dellia Weaver and others. Then there was a nice lunch, and after this, there was Mandolin and guitar music by some gentlemen from Garrett including Prof. Wolfesperger.

ATTEST:
MILO D. HUSSELMAN,
Town Clerk.

THE SPEECH.

Mr. VanAuken, last evening made a masterly address before the Bryan Club and about 1000 people, who had been attracted to the public square, by the notices that he was to speak. He is an easy, ready and scholarly speaker, who goes directly and clearly to the points he discusses and leaves nothing undone to prove his beliefs and make others as clear on them as he is himself. These are valuable traits in oratory, and are doubly so to one who desires to discuss political issues this year. He took up the line of work he had laid out for the evening and covered its every turn in a regular and methodical manner. When he was done, everybody knew what he had been seeking to prove, and everybody felt that he understood the questions better for what he had heard. We should add, that Mr. VanAuken is in earnest. His heart is fully enlisted in the cause, and speaking from the heart makes it certain he reaches his hearers. He had the most earnest and thoughtful attention of the audience, though of course in an outdoor meeting there are careless people out on the edges, who go there to visit.

NOTES.

The meeting was called to order by Mr. Link, and then came a brief address by Cal. Husselman, who as usual scored some good points.

After him came the principal speaker, Mr. VanAuken, who after some opening remarks introduced Miss Bernice Soule, of Angola, who sang a telling campaign song. She has a sweet, strong voice and was loudly applauded.

There was one great nuisance, that constituted the only serious drawback. It was the confusion and interruptions caused by a lot of young hoodlums of box sexes, who blew fish horns. When asked to desist, one set of lads said the Marshal had told them they might. He was at that time in the south end, overhauling some drunks, but came on the scene later and denied this story, and helped to keep order. By constant watching the fish horns were abated. Then some over ardent republican fitted out a McKinley banner for some boys, and a noisy parade was started. It is to be sincerely hoped that when a republican rally is held here, that every democrat boy will be a gentleman, and listen to the speech or go home.

—Republican papers tell us that free coinage of silver would flood the country with cheap money. If our mints were run every day in the year at full speed they could only turn out about 60 millions a year. Now as this would be less than $1 per capita of our population, does anybody believe there is any danger of our country being over run with money?" Besides, the government is compelled by law, to take at 100 cents all kinds of money that it makes. This alone would keep it at par.

—Many Auburn people who remember Miss Nannie Leas, now the wife of Prof. Wooster of the Michigan university at Ann Arbor, will be interested in a happy event that took place Sept. 7, whereby they become the parents of a little girl.

—It was a neat joke on Judge Penfield to go clear up to Ray last night to make a political speech and have no one come to hear it. Either the meeting was not well advertised, or else as happens in so many places, the people have all turned over to Bryan.

—Mrs. Mort Olds at St. Joe entertained a party of friends for dinner, at her home there yesterday. They were: Mrs. John Bishop, of Plainwell, Mich., Mrs. J. W. Dills, of Spencerville; Mrs. Fred. Johnson, Mrs. Bert Patterson and Mrs. Will Patterson, of St. Joe; Mrs. E. Zimmerman, Mrs. F. N. Beidler, Mrs. G. C. Ralston, Miss McTighe, of Auburn, and a friend of Mrs. Zimmerman, a Mrs, Buck from Pennsylvania. They agreed they had a fine visit and splendid dinner.

—The Dispatch quotes the Vermont election as the first nail in Bryan's coffin. It evidently overlooks the earlier nail that Alabama drove in McKinley's, as well as the later one in Arkansas. And besides, Vermont has only 4 electoral votes and 39,000 popular majority. Alabama and Arkansas together have 19 electoral votes and gave a combined popular majority 125,000. The Vermont nail is a light No. 3; the Alabama and Arkansas nails were big 20's.

—An exchange says that the republicans are not putting out many big speakers, but confine the work largely to street talk and to the hiring of cheap lawyers and tonguey individuals who are to go about and make short talks. This must be true for we have heard just such fellows on our streets advocating the McKinley -protection sound- money- good- wages- reciprocity doctrine.

—It was indeed a pretty decoration at Bishop & Dill's Cigar Store window this afternoon. A space had been fixed up in the west window, and therein one could see the seven lovely little St Bernards that Mr. Bishop and Irvin Hoffman are "bringing up." They are of the purest breed of that celebrated race. and are all beauties.

—It is quite evident that the men who have arrangd to handle the boodle for the gold bugs are expecting the county ticket outside of the legisiative offices to take care of themselves, as none outside of Rose and Provines were called in to the conference that was held by Gordon and Penfield with Fairbanks' special agent Mr. Kealing this forenoon.

—It is conceded that the trouble between Gordon and Fretz arose over an assertion made by Fretz, that government does not redeem silver dollars. This is correct. Government does not redeem them in gold, was in anything else. It simply accepts them at face value side-by-side with gold or paper, for all dues owing to the government. And it is this law that keeps silver and paper at a par with gold, and always will.

—The Dispatch seeks to bring the republican populists back into the bosom of high taxer McKinley's party. It will fail. The movable republican populists were slyly brought back two years ago. The few still in the populist party are too intelligent to be fooled again.

—The Ft. Wayne Journal published that letter to Mr. Bell, for the second time, Friday. Mr. Bell writes to the DAILY that as far as he knows the letter is genuine, although he does not know the writer, nor can he give any other reason for writing to him except the purpose stated in the letter. It came through the mails, and had the New York post mark on it all right

—At Waterloo last Tuesday evening Miss Rose Blair entertained the Minerva Club to a farewell tea, preparatory to her leaving for the new home in Texas. A novel feature of the occasion, was the gift to each guest, of a live rose plant, choice ones in pots, ass souvenir of this last meeting with the members who had been united so long in literary work.

—Another of Rev. L. C. Littell's poems, is in Saturday's DAILY. Our readers will remember that we not long ago copied one of these little gems, on our home side. This one was selected by the editors of the ready print at Chicago, and is on the first page. He was pastor of the Presbyterian at Ligonier soon after the war, and then at Waterloo 1868 to 1870.

The COURER family enjoyed one of the best ones brought home.

THE FT. WAINE JOURNAL SAYS:

Governor Matthews has invited Major L. A. Centlivre and Major A. I. Friend to join him and the other members of his staff at the dedication of the battleship Indiana, which ceremony will take place at the Staten Island navy yard Monday, Septemper 21. At that time the ship will be presented with the splendid silver service purchased by citizens of Indiana. Governor Mathews will make the presentation speech.

Right View.

A prominent Auburn republican, one who as an exception to the rule, well posted, recently made a speech before one of their clubs, and in his talk, he advised working men to vote for McKinley, for if free silver won, they would have to pay more for their flour, their meat, and other things produced on the farm. After the meeting he was taken to task by one of the brethern and told that such talk would not do. "If," said his critic, the farmers find that prices will rise under free silver, they will all vote for Bryan." "I can't help it," said the speaker. "I believe that free silver would help the farmers, and I generally talk as I believe." He will not probably be asked to make speeches over the county.

That Letter.

The Dispach feels bad, awfully bad, about the R. C. Bell letter because it is making democrats flop over to the side of high protection and low prices. At least the Dispatch says it is doing that. And if it is converting democrats over to McKinley, why does the Dispatch feel bad? But they know very well that Mr. Bell did not write this letter. Mr. Bell has made affidavit that the letter came to him by mail, with the real New York postmark. The Dispatch says there is no such number in Wall street, as 711. That may be. We don't know as much about details of Wall street as the McKinley workers do. But the number of the street is of no value. What we wish to know is, What republican wrote that letter, and what did he write it for?

Pepple-Blair

Promptly at noon to-day, at the residence of Gen. and Mrs. L. J. Blair at Waterloo, occurred the mar iage of his daughter Rose, to Samuel Pepple now a resident of Texas. The ceremony was performed by Rev. F. C. Colvin of the First Presbyterian church of Auburn in his usual happy manner, and was witnessed by a number of invited guests. Immediately after the ceremony and congratulations, the company were seated at tables, spread with a bountiful dinner, which was served in courses. The guests were limited to the relatives of both families and a few of their most intimate friends. The groom is one of the most experienced and popular railway engineers in the south and southwest and for many years held these responsible positions on the railways in Old Mexico. He is the son of John Pepple of Auburn, and was formerly a teacher in our public schools. The bride is the youngest daughter of Gen. Blair, and one of the best known society young ladies in the place. She has been for many years substantially at the head of her father's family, during the long illness of her mother, who died a few years ago, as well as since then. Both have a wide circle of friends in this county. They started for the south on the afternoon Lake Shore train, their destination being Smithville, Texas, where for the present they will remain, though they expect to make their home in Houston. Many earnest wishes for their future follow them.

Among those from outside the county, who were present, were Mr. and Mrs. F. P. Blair and children of Laporte, and Mrs. Ida Blair Daniels and little daughter from Fairmont, Minn. and Mr. and Mrs. Smiley of Kendallville We should add that many and valuable gifts were received by them from friends present as well as some not in attendance.

BRYAN FORMALLY ACCEPTS.

WILLIAM J. BRYAN has sent the following letter of acceptance to the notification committee of the Chicago convention:

Hon. Stephen M. White and Others, Members of the Notification Committee of the Democratic National Convention.—Gentlemen: I accept the nomination tendered by you on behalf of the Democratic party, and in so doing desire to assure you that I fully appreciate the high honor which such a nomination confers and the grave responsibilities which accompany an election to the presidency of the United States. So deeply am I impressed with the magnitude of the power vested by the Constitution in the Chief Executive of the nation and with the benefit or injury of the people that I wish to enter the office, if elected, free from every personal desire except the desire to prove worthy the confidence of my country. Human judgment is fallible enough when unbiased by selfish considerations, and in order that I may not be tempted to use the patronage of the office to advance any personal ambition, I hereby announce, with all the emphasis which words can express, my fixed determination not, under any circumstances, to be a candidate for re-election in case this campaign results in my election.

Indorses the Platform.

I have carefully considered the platform adopted by the Democratic national convention and unqualifiedly indorse each plank thereof.

Our institutions rest upon the proposition that all men, being created equal, are entitled to equal consideration at the hands of the Government. Because all men are created equal it follows that no citizen has a natural right to injure any other citizen. The main purpose of government being to protect all citizens in the enjoyment of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, this purpose must lead the Government, first, to avoid acts of affirmative injustice, and, second, to restrain each citizen from trespassing upon the rights of any other citizen.

A democratic form of government is conducive to the highest civilization because it opens before each individual the greatest opportunities for development and stimulates to the highest endeavor by insuring to each the full enjoyment of all the rewards of toil except such contribution as is necessary to support the Government which protects him. Democracy is indifferent to pedigree—it deals with the individual rather than with his ancestors. Democracy ignores differences in wealth—neither riches nor poverty can be invoked in behalf of or against any citizen. Democracy knows no creed—recognizing the right of each individual to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, it welcomes all to a common brotherhood and guarantees equal treatment to all, no matter in what church or through what forms they commune with their Creator.

Having discussed portions of the platform at the time of its adoption and again when your letter of notification was formally delivered, it will not be necessary at this time to touch upon all the subjects embraced in the party's declaration.

A Dual Government.

Honest differences of opinion have ever existed and ever will exist as to the most effective means of securing domestic tranquility, but no citizen fails to recognize at all times and under all circumstances the absolute necessity for the prompt and vigorous enforcement of law and the preservation of the public peace. In a government like ours law is but the crystallization of the will of the people; without it the citizen is neither secure in the enjoyment of life and liberty nor protected in the pursuit of happiness. Without obedience to law government is impossible. The Democratic party is pledged to defend the Constitution and enforce the laws of the United States, and it is also pledged to respect and preserve the dual scheme of government instituted by the founders of the republic. The name United States was happily chosen. It combines the idea of national strength with the idea of local self-government and suggests "an indissoluble union of indestructible States."

Our revolutionary fathers, fearing the tendencies toward centralization, as well as the dangers of disintegration, guarded against both and national safety, as well as domestic security, is to be found in the careful observance of the limitations which they impose. It will be noticed that, while the United States guarantees to every State a republican form of government and is empowered to protect each State against invasion, it is not authorized to interfere in the domestic affairs of any State except upon application of the Legislature of the State or upon the application of the Executive when the Legislature cannot be convened.

This provision rests upon the sound theory that the people of the State, acting through their legally chosen representatives, are, because of their more intimate acquaintance with local conditions, better qualified than the President to judge of the necessity for Federal assistance. Those who framed our Constitution wisely determined to make as broad an application of the principles of local self-government as circumstances would permit, and we cannot dispute the correctness of the position taken by them without expressing a distrust of the people themselves.

Economy.

Since governments exist for the protection of the rights of the people and not for their spoliation, no expenditure of public money can be justified unless that expenditure is necessary for the honest, economical and efficient administration of the government. In determining what appropriations are necessary the interest of those who pay the taxes should be consulted rather than the wishes of those who receive or disburse public moneys.

Bonds.

An increase in the bonded debt of the United States at this time is entirely without excuse. The issue of interest-bearing bonds within the last few years has been defended on the ground that they were necessary to secure gold with which to redeem United States notes and treasury notes, but this necessity was imaginary rather than real. Instead of exercising the legal right vested in the United States to redeem its coin in either gold or silver, the executive branch of the Government has followed a precedent established by a former administration and surrendered the option to the holder of the obligations. This administrative policy leaves the Government at the mercy of those who find a pecuniary profit in bond issues. The fact that the dealers in money and securities have been able to deplete the treasury according to the changing whims shows how dangerous it is to permit them to exercise a controlling influence on the Treasury Department.

The government of the United States when administered in the interest of all the people is able to establish and enforce its financial policy, not only without the aid of syndicates, but in spite of any opposition which syndicates may present. To assert that the Government is dependent upon the good will or assistance of any portion of the people other than a constitutional majority is to assert that we have a government in form, but without vital force.

National Bank Currency.

The position taken by the platform against the issue of paper money by national banks is supported by the highest Democratic authority as well as demanded by the interests of the people. The present attempt of the national banks to force the retirement of United States notes and treasury notes in order to secure a basis for a larger issue of their own notes illustrates the danger which arises from permitting them to issue their paper as a circulating medium. The national bank note, being redeemable in lawful money, has never been better than the United States note which stands behind it, and yet the banks persistently demand that these United States notes, which draw no interest, shall give place to interest-bearing bonds in order that the banks may collect the interest which the people now save.

To empower national banks to issue circulating notes is to grant a valuable privilege to a favored class, surrender to private corporations the control over the volume of paper money and build up a class which will claim a vested interest in the nation's financial policy. Our United States notes, commonly known as greenbacks, being redeemable in either gold or silver, at the option of the Government, and not at the option of the holder, are safer and cheaper for the people their national bank notes based upon interest-bearing bonds.

The Monroe Doctrine.

A dignified but firm maintenance of the foreign policy set forth by President Monroe and reiterated by the Presidents who have succeeded him, instead of arousing hostility abroad, is the best guaranty of amicable relations with other nations. It is better for all concerned that the United States should resist any extension of European authority in the Western hemisphere rather than invite the continual irritation which would necessarily result from any attempt to increase the influence of monarchical institutions over that portion of the Americas which has been dedicated to republican government.

Pensions.

No nation can afford to be unjust to its defenders. The care of those who have suffered injury in the military and naval service of the country is a sacred duty. A nation which, like the United States, relies upon voluntary service rather than upon a large standing army, adds to its own security when it makes generous provision for those who have risked their lives in its defense, and for those who are dependent upon them.

The Producers of Wealth.

Labor creates capital. Until wealth is produced by the application of brain and muscle to the resources of this country there is nothing to divide among the nonproducing classes of society. Since the producers of wealth create the nation's prosperity in time of peace and defend the nation's flag in time of peril, their interests ought at all times to be considered by those who stand in official positions. The Democratic party has ever found its voting strength among those who are proud to be known as the common people, and it pledges itself to propose and enact such legislation as is necessary to protect the masses in the free exercise of every political right and in the enjoyment of their just share of the rewards of their labor.

Arbitration.

I desire to give special emphasis to the plank which recommends such legislation as is necessary to secure the arbitration of differences between employers engaged in interstate commerce and their employes. Arbitration is not a new idea—it is simply an extension of the court of justice. The laboring men of the country have expressed a desire for arbitration and the railroads cannot reasonably object to the decisions rendered by an impartial tribunal. Society has an interest even greater than the interest of employer or employe and has a right to protect itself by courts of arbitration against the growing inconvenience and embarrassment occasioned by disputes between those who own the great arteries of commerce on the one hand and the laborers who operate them on the other.

Immigration.

While the Democratic party welcomes to the country those who come with love for our institutions and with the determination and ability to contribute to the strength and greatness of our nation, it is opposed to the dumping of the criminal classes upon our shores and to the importation of either pauper or contract labor to compete with American labor.

Injunctions.

The recent abuses which have grown out of injunction proceedings have been so emphatically condemned by public opinion that the Senate bill providing for trial by jury in certain contempt cases will meet with general approval.

Trusts.

The Democratic party is opposed to trusts. It would be recreant to its duty to the people of the country if it recognized either the moral or the legal right of these great aggregations of wealth to stifle competition, bankrupt rivals and then prey upon society. Corporations are the creatures of law, and they must not be permitted to pass from under the control of the power which created them; they are permitted to exist upon the theory that they advance the public weal, and they must not be allowed to use their powers for the public injury.

Railroads.

The right of the United States Government to regulate interstate commerce cannot be questioned, and the necessity for the vigorous exercise of that right is becoming more and more imperative. The interests of the whole people require such an enlargement of the powers of the interstate commerce commission as will enable it to prevent discrimination between persons and places and protect patrons from unreasonable charges.

Pacific Railroads.

The Government cannot afford to discriminate between its debtors, and must, therefore, prosecute its legal claims against the Pacific railroads. Such a policy is necessary for the protection of the rights of the patrons as well as for the interests of the Government.

Cuba.

The people of the United States, happy in the enjoyment of the blessings of free government, feel a generous sympathy toward all who are endeavoring to secure like blessings for themselves. This sympathy, while respecting all treaty obligations, is especially active and earnest when excited by the struggles of neighboring peoples, who, like the Cubans, are near enough to observe the workings of a government which derives all its authority from the consent of the governed.

The Civil Service.

That the American people are not in favor of life tenure in the civil service is evident from the fact that they, as a rule, make frequent changes in their official representatives when those representatives are chosen by ballot. A permanent office-holding class is not in harmony with our institutions. A fixed term in appointive offices, except where the Federal Constitution now provides otherwise, would open the public service to a larger number of citizens without impairing its efficiency.

The Territories.

The Territorial form of government is temporary in its nature and should give way as soon as the Territory is sufficiently advanced to take its place among the States. New Mexico, Oklahoma and Arizona are entitled to Statehood, and their early admission is demanded by their material and political interests. The demand of the platform that officials appointed to administer the government of the Territories, the District of Columbia and Alaska should be bona fide residents of the Territories or District is entirely in keeping with the Democratic theory of home rule. I am also heartily in sympathy with the declaration that all public lands should be reserved for the establishment of free homes for American citizens.

Waterways.

The policy of improving the great waterways of the country is justified by the national character of those waterways and the enormous tonnage borne upon them. Experience has demonstrated that continuing appropriations are, in the end, more economical than single appropriations separated by long intervals.

The Tariff.

It is not necessary to discuss the tariff question at this time. Whatever may be the individual views of citizens as to the relative merits of protection and tariff reform, all must recognize that until the money question is fully and finally settled the American people will not consent to the consideration of any other important question. Taxation presents a problem which in some form is continually present, and a postponement of definite action upon it involves no sacrifice of personal opinion or political principles; but the crisis presented by financial conditions cannot be postponed. Tremendous results will follow the action taken by the United States on the money question and delay is impossible. The people of this nation, sitting as a high court, must render judgment in the cause which greed is prosecuting against humanity. The decision will either give hope and inspiration to those who toil or "shut the doors of mercy on mankind." In the presence of this overshadowing issue, differences upon minor questions must be laid aside in order that there may be united action among those who are determined that progress toward a universal gold standard shall be stayed, and the gold and silver coinage of the Constitution restored.

A Useful Barn.

A bicyclist recently made a little journey into the country. As he wheeled along the road he came to a farm house, the owner of which he knew slightly. As he drank a gourdful of water at the pump he noticed that the farmer's barn had an unusual look. The last time he had seen it it had the usual coating of silvery gray painted by time and weather.

"Been fixing up the barn, haven't you?" he asked the farmer.

"Yes. It's all new painted," answered the farmer, proudly. "An' I reckon it's mighty pretty lookin', too. Ye see, a feller came along one day an' says he belongs to a paintin' syndicate in Chicago as was out to paint all the barns in the country free, an' he said he would paint mine if I wanted him to. So I says: 'Go ahead if it don't cost nothin'.' I went to town with a load of hay, an' when I got back the barn was painted, shore enough."

The barn had been painted a bright yellow, as a good background for varicolored advertisements with letters a foot or two long. The advertisement of a patent medicine covered both sides of the roof in letters of red, blue and green against the yellow. Chewing tobacco, shoes, soap, hams and other commodities were pictured and told about on every available space.

"When I got back," continued the farmer, "the feller that was paintin' says to me: 'I put a few signs on the barn,' says he, 'but you won't mind that none, an' the're good readin' matter when the paper don't come.'

"Anyhow, it didn't cost nothin' to paint the barn, an' I'll be darned if the boys ain't a-larnin' to read from it, which I consider pretty cheap education these hard times."—Kansas City Star.

A Chinese Funeral.

A well-conducted Chinese funeral is the most forgeous sight in Asia. At the front of the funeral procession walk the noisy, musicless musicians. Then come men bearing the insignia of the dignity of the dead, if he had any. Next come more men, carrying figures of animals, idols, umbrellas and blue and white streamers. After them come men carrying pans of perfume. Just before the coffin walk bonzes, Chinese priests. Over the coffin a canopy is usually carried. The casket is borne by about a score of men. Immediately behind the coffin walk the children of the deceased. The eldest son comes first. He is dressed in canvas and leans heavily upon a stout stick. He is supposed to be too exhausted by grief and fasting to walk without the aid of the staff. The other children and relatives follow this chief mourner. They are clothed in white linen garments. The women are carried in chairs. They sob and wail at intervals and in unison. When the burying place is reached the bonzes begin chanting a mass for the dead, and the coffin is put in the tomb. A large, oblong white marble table is placed before the tomb. On the middle of it are set a censer and two vases and two candlesticks, all of as exquisite workmanship as possible. Then they have a paper cremation. Paper figures of men, horses, garments and a score of other things are burned. They are supposed to undergo a material resurrection and to be useful to the dead in the Chinese heaven. The tomb is sealed up or closed, and an entertainment concludes the ceremony at the grave.—Chicago News.

Noise.

That birds do not mind a noise so long as they feel safe from enemies is shown by a pair of pewees, who built a nest last spring and hatched out a brood in a North Limington, Me., sawmill. The nest is on a horizontal joist, within six feet of the end of the carriage where the logs are rolled. At the time of the building, laying and hatching, three saws were running and five men at work in the mill.

BRYAN ADDRESSES LABOR.

WILLIAM Jennings Bryan spoke to organized labor at Sharpshooters' Park, Chicago, on Labor Day. At the outset he announced that he would not violate the proprieties of the occasion by discussing partisan questions, and he did not do so. The audience was larger than the speaker's voice could reach, and it is estimated that at least 15,000 heard the cheering words to workingmen uttered by the eloquent Nebraskan. Even the trees in the vicinity of the speaker's stand were filled with adventuresome listeners, all anxious to hear. Mr. Bryan said:

Labor Day has become a fixed thing among our institutions, and it is well that it has, because on this day all over this nation those who are engaged in the production of wealth meet in order that they may commune with each other, discuss those questions in which they are specially interested and emphasize before the world that there is nothing dishonorable in the fact that one earns his bread in the sweat of his face. I am glad to stand on this day in the presence of those to whom this nation is so largely indebted for all that it has had, for all that it has now, and for all that it can hope to have. I am not indulging in idle flattery when I say to you that no part of the people of the world are so important to the welfare of mankind as those whose labor and brain convert natural resources into material wealth. I might quote to you what Mr. Carlisle said of these people in 1878. He described them as the struggling masses, who produce the wealth and pay the taxes of the country. He did not praise them too highly. The struggling masses not only produce the wealth and pay the taxes of the country in time of peace, but the struggling masses have ever been and must ever be the nation's surest protection in time of peril.

Quotes President Lincoln.

Let me quote you what another American has said. In speaking of labor and capital Abraham Lincoln in a message to Congress used these words: "Monarchy itself is sometimes hinted at as a possible refuge from the powers of the people. In my present position I could scarcely be justified were I to omit to raise a warning voice against this approach of returning despotism. It is not needed nor fitting here that a general argument should be made in favor of public institutions, but there is one point, with its connection not so hackneyed as most others, to which I ask brief attention. It is the effort to place capital on an equal footing with, if not above, labor in the structure of government. It is assumed that labor is available only in connection with capital; that nobody labors unless somebody else commanding capital somehow by the use of it induces him to labor." And then he adds: "Labor is prior to and independent of capital. Capital is only the fruit of labor and could never have existed if labor had not first existed. Labor is the superior of capital and deserves much higher consideration." Then he adds: "No men living are more worthy to be trusted than those who toil up from poverty; none less inclined to take or to touch aught which they have not honestly earned. Let them beware of surrendering a political power which they already possess and which, if surrendered, will surely be used to close the door of advancement against such as they and to fix new tasks and burdens upon them till all of liberty shall be lost."

Capital but the Fruit of Labor.

These are the words of Abraham Lincoln. They are not intended to arouse animosity against capital, but they state a great truth that is always to be remembered—that capital is but the fruit of labor, and you cannot destroy labor without destroying the possibility of future capital.

I have quoted from two American authorities. I want, in an ascending scale, to reach a higher authority still. Let me quote to you what that man whose words have entitled him to be called the wisest of men, Solomon, said on this subject: "Give me neither poverty nor riches; feed me with food convenient for me, lest I be evil and deny Thee, and say, 'Who is the Lord?' or lest I be poor and steal and take the name of my God in vain."

I want you to remember that Solomon regards not the extreme, but—I was about to say the golden mean—I will say the golden and silver mean rather. He regards that condition best which is not at either extreme, but lies in between the extremes. Neither great riches nor abject poverty furnishes the soil in which grows the best civilization. Those who are oppressed by poverty lose the ambition, the aspiration, the lofty purpose that is necessary to lead one on to the greatest achievements; and those who possess too great wealth lose the necessity for labor, that labor which is absolutely essential to the developing of that which is best in human nature. Solomon was right, therefore, when he prays for this intermediate condition. The great middle classes are the bulwark of society, and from the middle classes has come almost all of good that has come to bless the human race. There are some who apply the name demagogue to anybody who speaks of the common people. The common people are the only people who have ever hailed gladly any person who preached humanity and equal rights. I do not mean to say that there are no exceptions to the general rule. There have always been found among the richer classes those who were filled with the spirit of philanthropy; there have always been found among them those who were willing to spend their lives in the uplifting of their fellows; but I am speaking of the rule that reforms do not come from and are not supported by those who consider themselves lifted above the common people. Nor do I mean that you have never found among the common people those who would betray their fellows. You have found everywhere, it is one of the unfortunate things that stand out upon every page of history, that the character of Judas is not confined to any class of society. He is found everywhere and in all ages. I simply meant to say this: That while among the common people have at all times been found those who would betray their brethren and sell them into bondage, if they could, but yet, in spite of this, the common people have been the great impelling force that has lifted civilization from generation to generation up to higher ground.

Whence the Strength of Democracy.

There are three forms of government best known among men. There is the monarchy, where a king rules by right divine; there is the aristocracy, where a few control, and there is the democracy, which means the real people themselves. Why is it that the strength of democracy—I do not use it in a party sense, but in its broader sense—why is it that the strength of democracy has always been found among the common people? Why? Why, it is simple enough. If a man has high position or great wealth he may be able to stand and keep on the good side of the king. If he has great influence he may be one of the ruling classes in an aristocracy. But you are not willing to leave any form of government to your children except a democracy in which each citizen is protected in the enjoyment of life and liberty and the pursuit of happiness. The great common people believe in a democratic form of government, because it is only in a democratic form of government that they are able to protect their rights and advance their interests, so far as the government can advance human interests.

Let me dwell for a moment upon the object of government. In this land it is our boast that our government derives its just powers from the consent of the governed. What kind of government will people consent to when they are free to consent? There is one kind of government above all other kinds that they love. And a government which knows no favoritism, a government in which every citizen stands on the same plane, and where the government treats them all alike without regard to position in society, or even without regard to wealth; a government which gives equal rights to all but confers special privileges upon none. That is the kind of government that appeals to the affections of the common people.

The Duties of Government.

There are two things to be considered in government. The first is that in the enactment of legislation you shall be careful to give no advantage to one person over another, if that advantage can be prevented. In other words, it is the duty of government to avoid acts of affirmative injustice; but that is only part of the business of government. Jefferson has stated the other half of it. He says that government must restrain men from injuring one another. That is one of the important duties of government, to restrain men from injuring one another, and the government that fails to restrain the strongest arm that can be lifted from injuring the weakest citizen in all the land is a government which fails to do its whole duty.

Our government is the best form of government known among men. Our government is the best form of government known among men, not because every law is good, not because we have upon the statute books every law needed to protect each citizen in the enjoyment of his rights. Our government is the best form of government known among men because it is possible under our form of government to have just as good a government as the people deserve. Ours is the best form of government because it is possible for the people to make it reflect the best intelligence, the highest virtue and the broadest patriotism of all the people. Let me warn you against confusing government with the abuses of government. It is the abuses of government against which we have the right to complain. There are some who would silence every criticism of existing law. There are those who would denounce every one who advocates a change as a disturber of the public peace. There are those who would call him a disturber, one who breeds discontent.

I want to say to you that discontent lies at the foundation of all progress. So long as you are satisfied you never go forward. It is only when you are dissatisfied with your conditions that you try to improve those conditions. Why, my friends, had our forefathers been satisfied with English political supremacy we never would have had a declaration of independence. There is this difference between our form of government and the monarchical form: If you are discontented under a monarchy, how can you get relief? You can petition, but your petition may be disregarded. Discontent under a monarchy may end in despair, or it may end in revolution. Discontent under our form of government ends in reformation through the peaceful means of the ballot. The ballot is the means by which the people of this country must right every wrong, and if the people have not the independence, if they have not the intelligence to right their wrongs at the ballot-box, they haven't the courage to secure their rights in any other way.

Extols Labor Organizations.

Now, my friends, among all the agencies which for the last few years have been at work bettering the condition and protecting the rights of the laboring men of this country, I believe that the labor organization stands first among them all. It has brought them together where they could consult with each other, where they could compare their views, where they could unite their strength, where they could make their influence effective, and the laboring man has his organization and his own efforts to thank for such blessings as he has secured. Some have criticised labor organizations. There are some who have believed that banking organizations are joint associations; that managers of railroads should join associations; that everybody was entitled to join an association except the laboring man. The laboring man's association has been the means by which he has protected himself in his warfare against other organizations among other people. Now, my friends, the labor organization has done much of good, and yet there is a good that society can do that will add to and supplement the work of the laboring men themselves.

I want to speak of it here—the principle of arbitration of differences between corporate employers and their employes. That principle has been forced upon the attention of the American people. I believe in arbitration. Arbitration is simply the extension of the idea of the court of justice. It is merely instituting a tribunal before which men may go and settle their differences, instead of resorting to violence to settle those differences. You say the laboring men are interested in arbitration. Yes, they have so expressed themselves, but I want to say to you, my friends, that society has a higher interest even than the laboring man in the principle of arbitration. Society has a right to protect itself against these contests between labor and capital. Society has a right to say to both employer and employe, instead of asserting a right or a claim and defending it by force, you shall, in the interest of society, submit that to an impartial tribunal, and let justice be done by those who can see both sides.

New Condition of Labor.

My friends, new conditions make new laws necessary. In the olden times but one man employed a few laborers. There was a bond of sympathy between them. He knew the names of his employes. He came in contact with them and sympathy sprung from heart to heart, and this sympathy was an influence that enabled them to agree upon amicable terms. But times have changed. Instead of the employer with a few employes we now have a great corporation with its thousands or tens of thousands of employes. It is impossible for the employer to know his men. It is impossible under these conditions that there should be that personal sympathy between them which controls their conduct toward each other. What must we do? There is but one thing that we can do. Where that personal acquaintance has disappeared, and therefore injustice has crept in, society, with its paramount interests and overshadowing rights, can step in and by law supplement that condition, that relation, and substitute justice for force in the settlement of those difficulties.

Urges Preparation for Citizenship.

"Now I appeal to you to take the interest in government that you ought to take. I want you to take an interest in politics. I am not here to tell you what opinions you should hold. I am not here to suggest to you what measures would, in my judgment, bring relief, but I have a right as an American citizen speaking to other American citizens—I have a right, I say, to beg of you that you shall recognize the responsibilities which rest upon you as citizens and prepare yourselves for the intelligent discharge of every duty imposed upon you. Government was not instituted among men to confer special benefits to any. Government was instituted for the protection of all the citizens in order that they might enjoy the fruits of their own toil and the results of their own exerions. And it is the duty of governments to make the conditions surrounding the people as pleasant, as agreeable as possible, and you must have your own opinion and by your votes must have your influence in determining what these conditions may be. I cannot impress upon your minds any more important truth than this, that your ballot is your own, to do with it what you please. And that there is nobody that must be satisfied with your vote except your judgment and conscience. Let me leave with you just one parting word. Let me urge you, whatever may be your views on political questions, whatever may be your ideas as to the policies proposed from time to time by various parties, let me urge you to make it your highest ambition to prove yourself worthy of that greatest of all names—an American citizen.

EGGS FOR A PISTOL.

A Chicago Man Tries a New Plan, But It Didn't Work.

Store hold-ups with eggs as deadly weapons is the latest. Ed Bernard, a smooth-faced young man of 21, is the originator of this novelty in the robbery line. He failed in his purpose, and Justice Dooley made him pay a fine recently and promise to leave the hold-up business altogether.

Mrs. Ed Chanock, who keeps a little grocery store in the basement of 112 West Taylor street, was the victim of the attempted robbery. Her excitement had not yet calmed when she related her story to Justice Dooley.

"I was in the store yesterday afternoon," she said, throwing in an elaborate gesture, "when in came this fellow here. Yes, that's the man. I never saw him before, but I could swear to him as long as I live. As long as I live, your honor. He came to where I was, near the case of eggs, and he says to me:

"'How much are these eggs?'

"'Twelve cents a dozen,' says I, and with that that he put one in his pocket.

"'Do you want one or two?' I asked him. You know, judge, we sell things in any quantity, and we sell them cheaper than——"

"Never mind about that," interrupted the magistrate. "What did this man do?"

"Now, don't, judge," said Mrs. Chanock. "Let me tell this the way I want to. Anyhow, he picked up three or four eggs, and he raised his hand with them in it, and he came up close tome, and he said:

"'Have you got any money?'

"I told him to get right away from me, and he said if I didn't give him some money he would throw those eggs at me, and I screamed and called for my husband, and my husband came from up stairs and they had a fight there, and the fellow went and smashed a whole lot of eggs out in front, and I ran for an officer, but I couldn't find any, but pretty soon one came, and I had the fellow arrested, and——"

"Wait just a moment, madame," said Justice Dooley. "Just a moment and get your breath."

"And that's all," concluded the woman.

Her husband corroborated her and Bernard was fined $3 and costs for disorderly conduct.—Chicago Journal.

Circumstantial Evidence.

A gentleman in a country town, says the New York Ledger, recently become conscious of most suspicious glances cast upon him by his neighbors and acquaintances. Then he became aware that his footsteps were dodged.

A constable was occasionally seen around his house, and subsequently a stranger, who afterward turned out to be a detective, appeared. Tortured and troubled, the gentleman at last asked a friend the meaning of it all.

"Don't you know?" said he. "They suspect you of murder."

"Of murder?" said the horrified man. "What do you mean?"

"You received a postal card last week?"

"Very likely I received a dozen."

"But on this one were written these words: 'Be sure and save the son, but kill the father,' and the postmaster read——"

But at this a smile, ending in a laugh, broke in upon the dialogue. The postal card had come from a theatrical manager, for whom the gentleman had written a play, which the manager wanted amended in certain particulars.

Catching Fish.

A curious plan for catching fish is used on the big river Columbia, North America. A number of wheels are set up in the middle of the stream, which, as they turn round, catch up the fish and cast them into troughs by the river's banks. The salmon are then canned and sent all over the world. As much as five tons of fish a day have thus been taken.

PILLOWS FOR THE PILLARS.

How Leading Church Attendants Were Rebuked for Drowsiness.

The Tyringham Gazette, one of the most interesting papers published in New England, tells about a practical joke which was played lately in the town of Richmond, Vt. Upon a certain Sunday morning the congregation of the Second Methodist Church were amused or horrified—according to the age and temperament of the different members—to observe three large white-covered pillows, such as are commonly used upon beds, in three pews. In each case the pillow was comfortably disposed at the head of the pew, as if to invite sleep, and in each case the customary occupant of the pew was notorious for sleeping in church. The three persons thus distinguished were very angry. One of them openly accused the pastor of contriving to insult him; the pastor in turn, or one of his adherents, threw out dark insinuations against the leader of the choir, who had lately been deposed—and in short the whole congregation were set by the ears.

If, indeed, it was the minister who did the thing he can hardly be blamed. It must be very exasperating, after one has sat up late on Saturday night to finish a sermon—I understand that ministers always postpone this work until Saturday—to have people sleep through the delivery of it. A particularly sad case of this sort occurred in a village with which I used to be familiar. The church was a small one, and upon the Sunday that I have in mind a distinguished person, a member of the United States Senate, was present. His visit to the town had been expected, and the minister, a young man who was considered to have an unusual gift of preaching, had made a special effort to prepare a discourse worthy of the occasion. He delivered the text and had proceeded some distance into his subject with much success. The great man listened attentively and once or twice he was thought to nod—we were all looking at him—as if in approval of the ideas advanced. But alas! as time went on, as the bees hummed more and more drowsily outside, as a little breeze sprang up and rustled the leaves of the maple trees amid which the church stood, the Senator's attention relaxed; at last his eyes closed, his jaws fell and he slumbered perceptibly. As luck would have it, the minister was at that moment approaching the climax of his subject. He stopped, took a few swallows of water, blew his nose, did everything that could be done to give the stranger time to wake, but all to no purpose. He was forced to resume his sermon in a crestfallen manner, nor did the great man arouse himself until the discourse was finished and the closing hymn had been given out.—Boston Transcript.

AFRICAN ETIQUETTE.

The Wisest Plan to Follow in Visiting the Big Native Chiefs.

In African travel it is always wise to visit the biggest chief in any part of the country. One can always learn from other chiefs at a distance who they are and something of their character. In approaching them, always send word of your coming, and get, if possible, information in advance of the feeling of the chief toward whites. Upon nearing the village, send on ahead to announce your arrival, and wait until your messenger returns with some of the villagers to escort you to their chief. Greet the chief civilly, and ask him to send one of his people, to show you a good place for your tent, if you decide to camp in the village, which I have done invariably in this country, though it is not always advisable in every part of Central Africa. When you have rested the chief will come to see you. Then state to him your business, talk frankly with him and explain plainly your needs, whether you want guides or to buy food.

I seldom stayed in a place more than one day, and generally the first night I called the chief privately into my tent, had a long talk with him, and gave him a present, consisting generally of a good cloth, four yards of American, four of wide blue, four of narrow calico, and about an egg-cup full of beads, and sometimes an empty bottle or two. Invariably I received next day the co-operation of the chief in every way, and also a big goat or sheep or bullock, and fifty or sixty pounds of flour. Sometimes I gave a small additional present before leaving. If the chief took a fancy to any particular thing, and I could spare it, I did so. Sometimes one wanted a sheath knife, and another a hat. Old Kambuidi was determined to have a shirt. He wanted a candle, matches and needles, which I gave him; and as I had previously given him cloth I suggested, as a feeble sort of joke, that, as he now had cloth and sewing materials and light, he might sit up at night and make a shirt. Immediately the old fellow replied: "It is the candle that is interfering with my success. Here, take back the candle and give me the shirt." I finally yielded, and gave him a much-patched garment, which satisfied him.—Century.

Clothes Hooks.

A practical innovation has been introduced in a Berlin restaurant, where the clothes-hooks are arranged in such a way that, after hanging a coat on them, they can be locked by means of a snap lock in the upper hook or hat-rack. Regular guests receive a key, while transient guests have to ask the waiter to return them their overcoats. Since the introduction of this patent hook, not an overcoat has been stolen in the place, while previous to that time considerable trouble arose both to the proprietor and guests because of sneak thieves. The new hook is very simple; the lower part of it is on a hinge, and the lock is attached to the upper arm, being out of harm's way.

BUTTERFLIES.

Out in the churchyard the grass grew deep,
Where the peaceful dead were lying;
Over their quiet and holy sleep
The butterflies white were flying,
And one little child was playing there
In the churchyard, sunny and still;
He'd wandered away, in his innocent play,
From the litle white house on the hill.
"Butterflies, butterflies!" cried the child,
As he played on the grassy sod,
"You're the souls of the little dead children here Fluttering up to God."

Out in the churchyard a place new-made,
Waits for the innocent dead;
Still, for the dear little sleeper, there
Waited his quiet bed.
And a long farewell they say over him,
With kisses on lip and brow;
And, with flowers sweet at head and feet,
He goes from his mother now.
Butterflies flutter above her head,
As she kneels on the grassy sod,
And the little white soul of her precious one
Flutters away to God.

UNDER FALSE COLORS

Under the ice of Cape Gris Nez two vessels were hove to within fifty yards of each other. Boats were coming and going between them, and on the quarter deck of the larger vessel seven dejected-looking English sailors were drawn up under a guard of marines.

From the maintops of both flaunted the tricolor of France, with this ominous difference: that on the smaller vessel it surmounted the union jack of England.

The brigantine Firefly was in the hands of the French. The lumbering old coaster, bound from London to Chichester harbor, with a genral cargo, had been blown off her course by contrary winds to the wrong side of the channel; the forty-two gun frigate Alceste had pounced upon her, and now her skipper, Jacob Dempster, was ruefully giving an account of himself on the frigate's quarter deck.

"Ha! say you that?" exclaimed the French captain, who spoke English well. "Your ship is of Bosham, in the harbor of Chichester? Know you the manor house at Bosham, owned, but not inhabited, by one Squire Bullard?"

"I do—seeing as I live within 100 yards of it," replied the rugged old mariner, sullenly.

"Certain French officers are residing there? Prisoners of war on parole?"

"They were, when I left for London, three weeks back."

Captain Fournier of the Alceste turned and addressed himself with much gesticulation and excitement to a group of his officers, who stood a few paces in the rear. The captured skipper fell back and spoke with his companions in misfortune.

"There's something in the wind, lads; the Mounseer captain has been making kind inquiries about the prisoners at the manor house," he growled.

Captain Fournier, having finished his consultation, again came forward.

"M. Dempster," he said, "my brother, the Lieutenant Camille Fournier, is one of the prisoners living at the manor house of Bosham. He cannot attempt to escape himself because of his parole, but that makes no reason why I should not release him by force. I propose to put a hundred of my men in the Firefly, which as a ship of Bosham will not be suspected till too late for prevention, and run in and effect my purpose."

Jacob Dempster laughed sourly. "I'd like to see you try it," he replied. "Don't you know that Bosham lies six miles from the sea? You'd be stuck on a mud bank before you'd done a mile of the creek."

"It is you who will pilot us, my friend—in return for your liberty," he said. "My men will remain below for concealment, while you and your crew work the vessel, as though in due course returning home."

"What—me steer a pack of Frenchmen up Bosham creek to the doors of my native village! I'll see you in Davy Jones' locker first!"

A murmur of approval came from the prisoners behind him, but Fournier, a cynical, cruel-looking man, merely smiled. "I have so far omitted to state the alternative," he said. "If neither you nor any member of your crew will steer the brigantine up the creek I will hang you all at the yard arm within five minutes."

There was a moment's dead silence, and the old skipper turned and faced his crew.

"What say you, my lads?" he asked quietly. "I'm for hanging."

A lip or two among the married men twitched as they thought of wives and little ones, but the answer was unmistakable, "We're with you, Jacob."

Not quite, however, as it proved. One voice among the Firefly's company was silent, and all eyes turned on the tall, blue-eyed young fellow in the center of the line in amazement. Was Greg Applegarth, of all men, going to turn traitor?

The French captain, whose quick eye had already singled him out as a dissentient, put the question point blank:

"You, there, are not so foolish as these others—you will steer the brigantine to Bosham?"

Avoiding the withering glance shot at him by old Jacob, the young man raised his head for a second and answered:

"Yes, I'll pilot her up the creek—if so be as you'll spare my mates' lives as well as mine."

"Yes, certainly—unless they attempt to thwart me," said Fournier, contemptuously. "Mind this, though," he thundered, changing to sudden fury. "If by the act of any one of you my plan fails I will not only hang you all, but I will burn every house in the village. It is a secluded spot, far from garrisons, I see by the map, and many things would happen before help could arrive."

Having selected 100 of his best men, under a proper complement of officers, Captain Fournier sent them aboard the Firefly, and followed with Greg, for he meant to lead the enterprise in person, leaving the Alceste in charge of his first lieutenant.

As soon as the transfer was complete and a rendezvous appointed with the frigate the French flag was hauled down on the Firefly and she stood across for the English coast. Greg Applegarth was permitted to remain on deck, but Jacob Dempster and the rest of his crew were thrust into the hold, where they passed their time in cursing their comrade's treachery.

That the traitor should be Greg Applegarth was the most astonishing fact of all—especially to old Jacob, who was aware of certain tender passages between the smart young sailor and his own wayward daughter Peggy.

The prisoners of war were permitted by the Government to rent the manor house and live there as they pleased, provided they kept to the stipulations of their parole, which demanded that they should make no attempt to escape or go farther than two miles from their dwelling.

Till the French prisoners of war were quartered at the manor house, Greg and Peggy had been regarded as good as promised to each other, and it had only been of late, since Camille Fournier had taken to speaking to the girl that a coolness had sprung up between them.

Camille Fournier, the brother of the captain of the Alceste, had early contrived to scrape an acquaintance with Peggy Dempster, and the vivacious village beauty had been flattered into allowing a warmer flirtation than she had perhaps intended.

They were always loafing about the village, with nothing whatever to do but kill time by making eyes at the women folk. Hence the patriotism of the husbands and fathers in the Firefly was all the greater in choosing death rather than the dishonor of aiding the escape of those whom they had good reason to wish elsewhere.

Peggy was leaning over her father's garden gate one evening, saying good-night to the French officer, who was too much engrossed to notice that Greg Applegarth was coming up the road.

"Would that my captivity could endure forever," Camille said. "How shall I ever tear myself from your sweet presence, Mistress Peggy, when I return to France?"

"There is a way out of that difficulty; you might ask me to come, too," replied the thoughtless girl.

"I will bear that in mind," said Camille, not suspecting, in his vanity, that the words were meant for other ears than his.

Greg Applegarth had referred to this incident only the day before the capture of the Firefly, and had expressed a bitter hatred of all Frenchmen in general and of Lieutenant Camille Fournier in particular.

And now here he was, to Jacob's amazment, assisting not only the nation, but the individual, to defy his own country and to land an armed force on her shores.

Questioned by Captain Fournier as to his reasons for not following their example, he replied with a grin that he was not so fond of his country as to want to die for her when there was a plain way out.

The Firefly was captured on a Saturday, and it was not till dawn was breaking on Sunday that Greg was called on to act as pilot, when the brigantine was rounding Selsea Bill. As the vessel was now in the fair way for Portsmouth and British cruisers swarmed like wasps about the entrance of their nest, the French seamen lay concealed below, except half a dozen dressed in garments taken from the English sailors' stock. Captain Fournier, pistol in hand, stood close to Greg, alert for the first sign of treachery.

Before running for Hayling Island to make the entrance of the creek he found it necessary to execute several maneuvers which took a good deal of time, explaining the necessity of them by the numerous shallows he had to avoid.

When at length he put the helm up and stood boldly into the creek on the half flood the wind swerved from behind, but presently a sharp bend in the narrow passage made the sails useless and the boats were ordered out to tow.

The brigantine emerged from the narrow gut of the winding creek into the broader waters at the village just as the bells of Bosham church ceased ringing for morning service.

The French captain was burning with suppressed excitement.

"Where is the manor house where my brother lives?" he asked, as Greg gave the wheel a turn and brought the Firefly round.

"There, yonder—back of the church," was the reply. "I've fetched you up right opposite to it—as near as I dare go. You'd best anchor here."

The French captain gave the necessary orders, and at once set about making his dispositions for landing his entire force, except a sufficient guard for the prisoners.

Though the landing entailed several journeys in the Firefly's boats, it was rapidly effected, and with Fournier at its head the party started for the manor house under Greg's guidance.

Only a hundred yards of marshy pasture land lay between the creek and the moat, but the young sailor lad led the Frenchmen a long slant up the meadows and back again before finally approaching their goal. The captain looked at him once or twice suspiciously.

"You don't want your men stuck in the mud," said Greg, and he pointed convincingly to a quagmire they were passing.

After half an hour's wandering to and fro in the meadows he led the party up to the bridge over the moat, and they entered the grounds of the manor house from the rear. As they filed round to the front, a group of men who were sitting under a tree on the lawn started on seeing the familiar uniform. A minute later Captain Fournier had embraced his brother and explained the situation.

The prisoners of war were in an ecstasy of delight at the prospect of, as one of them facetiously put it, being "brutally dragged from their parole," but on the captain proposing an immediate return to the boats, Camille waved his hand gayly in deprecation.

"Wait a brief time, my brother," he laughed. "The little god Cupid demands it, and we are quite safe from opposition here. There are not twenty able-bodied Britons in the place. Most of them are in church, and they are all unarmed."

"Ah, ah! you have been amusing yourself," said the captain. "Well, hasten and say your adieus to the fair one, for I am anxious to be gone."

"It is not a matter of farewell, nothing so dismal," replied the younger brother, complacently twirling his mustache. "The fair one is ready to accompany me whenever I take my departure, but unfortunately she is in church, and likely to remain there for another hour. I have heard that the priest of Bosham is a cleric of long wind."

"Write the lady a note, asking her on some excuse to leave the church," he said. "I have with me an English sailor who shall deliver it."

Camille scribbled a few lines on a leaf in his pocket book, folded it and handed it to his brother, who called Greg to him.

"You know this lady by sight?" he asked, pointing to the superscription.

The young sailor's face was as steady as a rock as he answered in the affirmative.

"Take it to her in the church, then, and return yourself immediately. If you do not return I will march my men to the church and fire upon the people," said Fournier.

Greg disappeared in the shrubbery which adjoined the churchyard.

Pushing open the door, he removed his cap and tiptoed reverently up the aisle toward the chancel, where Peggy Dempster was seated with the choir.

But without approaching the choir Greg ran quickly up the pulpit steps. Mr. Gillyflower turned upon him angrily, but on hearing the words which were rapidly whispered in his ear the vicar looked first startled, then shrewdly intelligent. His communication finished, Greg left the church as quickly as he had entered, with Camille Fournier's note still in his pocket, and without once looking at Peggy.

On the manor house lawn, where the French seamen made a picturesque group under the trees, Greg's return was hailed with acclamation by the officers—by the two Fourniers especially.

"What did she do when you gave her the note?" asked Camille eagerly.

"She just did nothing," was the unconcerned reply.

"You see, my dear Camille, she has changd her mind," said the captain. "Come, let us be off out of this."

"What matter so long as I gain my purpose?" retorted the lieutenant brutally. "No, take the others and sail away if you please. As for me, nothing will move me unless I can take the fair Mlle. Dempster."

Captain Fournier bit his lip, but gave in. At most it only meant waiting until the close of the service, which could not now be long deferred, and in the seclusion of the manor house grounds the presence of the landing party would,, in the meanwhile, remain undetected.

But when the minutes grew into an hour and a half, yet no signal was given by the man posted in the shrubbery to watch the church door, the captain began to fume and stamp with rage.

He finally threatened to turn the pretense of a forced abduction into a reality and carry Camille on board the Firefly whether or no.

"If you do that," said the lieutenant, "my first act on reaching France will be to demand of you satisfaction."

At last the elder Fournier's patience was exhausted.

"Fall in, men," he said to his crew. "We will put the cloture on this loquacious priest, and take the girl from under his nose. Perhaps that will satisfy you, ingrate?" turning to Camille.

"Excellently well," replied the lieutenant, and with the jaunty quickstep of France the column tramped into the shady churchyard, where the sonorous tones of Mr. Gillyflower were plainly audible.

"Peste upon the fellow," muttered the captain, telling off twenty men to accompany him and his brother into the church.

Greg, who had followed closely at his elbow, plucking him by the sleeve, said, quietly:

"It will be a long time before you see France again, captain. See there!" And, leading him to the churchyard wall, he pointed mockingly at the Firefly. The brigantine lay high and dry on the mud at her anchorage, and would not float again for ten hours at least.

For a moment the brave lad's life trembled in the balance. Then, with a bitter oath, the captain put up his pistol he had drawn.

"If you do the folk no harm you'll be made comfortable, I expect," said Greg, with a grin, for he had foreseen that, with retreat cut off, Fournier would dare no excesses. "You see, I remember how the tide would serve to-day and I timed so as to run you in at church time. I knew Peggy would be there with the choir, and that that spark would never move without trying to take her along. I allowed that by when the people came out the vessel would be hard and fast, but it was you who gave me the chance to tip the parson and hint to let 'em have an extra dose and send word to the volunteers from Chichester. Till you gave me that note I was getting anxious lest the brigantine find enough water after all. Parson must be about winded by now, but there are the drums of the volunteers. There's 400 of them, so you won't be disgraced by receiving 'em civilly."

So, after all, that was the kind of traitor Greg was. His chief reward lay in the removal of all the French prisoners—new as well as old—to safer quarters, as he had hoped from the first.

And Peggy said: "It would have been nicer of you to have given me that note silly.—You were never that foolish as to think I would have gone with him."

Bottling the Breath.

Mountain climbers will be interested to read of the successful experiments of Dr. Berson of Stassfurt, who, by means of "bottled breath," has been enabled to ascend to great heights, both on land and in balloon. The doctor, when endeavoring to get further above the level of the sea than anyone else has ever climbed or flown, carries along a cylinder of compressed oxyget, fitted with a tube for breathing. Whenever he experiences discomfort on account of the rarity of the atmosphere a few whiffs from the cylinder suffice to restore him. Dr. Berson, by means of this device, recently ascended to an altitude of 31,300 feet, which is 2,000 feet higher than the summit of Mount Everest.

made, in this country. By that wonderful geometrical process of which nature is so lavish, they have borne seed and given forth the principle of life to 3,000,000, the number in pots today; of the fifty varieties of palms there are five kinds that adorn the homes of our people. The other variety have chiefly a botanical interest.

There is the Bourbon fan palm, the commonest variety; the wax palm, a long, slender-leaved plant, resembling the feathers in a big chief's war bonnet; the Blackburn palm; the "Fountain," from an island near Australia; Canary Island palm, the best for house culture, and sugar palm, indigenous to India. From it the natives extract large quantities of sugar for exportation to foreign countries.

TO FIND DIRECTION.

With a Watch a North and South Line May Be Fixed.

Few of the many persons who carry watches are aware of the fact that they are always provided with a compass, with which, when the sun is shining, they can determine a north and south line. All one has to do is to point the hour hand to the sun, and south is exactly half way between the hour and the figure 12 on the watch. For example, suppose it is 9 o'clock in the morning. Follow the rule given above and we will find the south as indicated below. Prolong this line across the face of the watch and you have a north and south line, and from this any point of the compass may be determined. This may seem strange, but the reason is plain. While the sun is passing over 180 degrees (from east to west) the hour hand of the watch passes over 360 degrees (from 6 o'clock to 6 o'clock). Consequently the angular movement of the sun in one hour corresponds to the angular movement of the hour hand in half an hour. Hence if holding the watch horizontal we point the hour hand toward the sun the line from the pivot of the hands to a point midway between the hour hand and 12 o'clock will point to the south. Of course, the watch must be set to correct local time; if it is set to standard time the difference between local, or real, and standard time should be ascertained and allowance made therefor.

High Mountain Climbing.

Aconcagua, the highest peak on the western hemisphere, is to be attempted again this fall by Mr. E. A. Fitzgerald, who explored the New Zealand Alps. If he succeeds in getting to the top, which is 23,200 feet above sea level, he will beat the highest mountain climbing record, Sir W. M. Conway's 22,600 feet ascent of Pioneer Peak in the Himalayas. Dr. Gussfeldt has tried Aconcagua, but got into trouble with his guides and had to turn back 2,000 feet from the summit. Mr. Fitzgerald will have in his party the Swiss guide Zurbriggen, who accompanied him in New Zealand and was with Conway in the Himalayas.

A Little African Allegory.

Makamda, Makanjira's Ambassador, told the following story on coming to the fort. He said that among the animals the rabbit had the reputation of knowing good places in the forest and on the plains. When elephants, zebras, leopards, and even lions, decided upon having some jollification, they called in a rabbit and asked him to provide a suitable place for the entertainment; he also was supposed to be an expert at drumming. Then Makamda said, "I am the rabbit, and I come from Makanjira; he is the lion, and sends me to search a suitable place."—Century.

TWO PLATFORMS

We have been several times asked to publish both the democratic planks relating to the coinage of silver, that of 1892 and that of 1896, so people would be clear as to each. Here they are:

PLANK OF 1892.

"Section 7. We denounce the Republican legislation known as the Sherman act of 1890 as a cowardly makeshift, fraught with possibilities of danger in the future, which should make all of its supporters, as well as its author, anxious for its speedy repeal. We hold to the use of both gold and silver as the standard money of the country and to the coinage of both gold and silver without discriminating against either metal or charge for mintage, but the dollar unit of coinage of both metals must be of equal intrinsic and exchangeable value or be adjusted through international agreement or by such safeguards of legislation as shall insure the maintenance of the partry of the two metals and the equal power of every dollar at all times in the markets and in the payments of debts; and we demand that all paper currency shall be kept at par with and redeemable in such coin. We insist upon this policy as especially necessary for the protection of the farmers and laboring classes, the first and most defenseless victims of unstable money and a fluctuating currency.

PLANK OF 1896.

"We declare that the act of 1873 demonetizing silver without the knowledge or approval of the American people, has resulted in the appreciation of gold and in a corresponding fall of the prices of commodities produced by the people; a heavy increase in the burden of taxation and of all debts, public and private; the enrichment of the money-lending class at home and abroad, the prostration of industry and the impoverishment of the people.

"We are unalterably opposed to monometalism, which has locked fast the prosperity of an industrial people in the paralysis of hard times. Gold monometallism is a British policy, and its adoption has brought other nations into financial servitude to London. It is not only un-American but it is anti-American, and it can be fastened on the United States only by stifling that spirit and love of liberty which proclaimed our political independence in 1776, and won it in the war of the revolution.

"We demand the free and unlimited coinage of both silver and gold at the present legal ratio of 16 to 1, without waiting for the aid or consent of any other nation. We demand that the standard silver dollar shall be a full tender, equally with gold, for all debts, public and private, and we favor such legislation as will prevent for the future the demonetization of any kind of legal-tender money by private contract.

Sherman For Silver.

Silver is the money of the poor and we call Senator John Sherman to the witness stand to prove it. Here is what he said, as taken from his volume of speeches, page 530; "These two metals, gold and silver, have traveled side by side from the beginning of time. The records of human history do not go back to a time when they did not move together. They have varied in value, sometimes one and sometimes the other being higher, but they have gone on together, gold the money of the rich, silver the money of the poor, the one to measure acquired wealth, the other to measure the daily necessities of life. And, sir, no act of parliament, though it may disturb for a moment the relations of the two metals, can destroy the use of both of them by mankind."

Growing Children

One-third of all the children die before they are five years old. Most of them die of some wasting disease. They grow very slowly; keep thin in flesh; are fretful; food does not do them much good. You can't say they have any disease, yet they never prosper. A slight cold, or some stomach and bowel trouble takes them away easily.

SCOTT'S EMULSION of Cod-liver Oil with Hypophosphites is just the remedy for growing children. It makes hard flesh; sound flesh; not soft, flabby fat. It makes strong bones, healthy nerves. It changes poor children to children rich in prosperity.

THE FARMER.

As He Was and as He Is.

Would not even that much inflation do great harm in dislocating existing business conditions?"

History has answered that question so conclusively that argument is unnecessary. In 1849-56 the specie inflation throughout the world is alleged to have been some 25 per cent, and in this country there was a general currency inflation of 40 per cent. Was anybody badly hurt? Look over the papers of that time and see if you can find any complaints from the farming regions. Do not economists of all schools agree that the 12 years immediately preceding our civil war were the golden age of the American farmer, if he ever had one? Again, from early in 1862 to early in 1865 the currency of this country was inflated at least 150 per cent. Some harm was done, of course, because the inflation was rapid and tremendous. It was six times as great as any inflation now possible from the free coinage of silver, but the only serious evil in it was that it gave occasion for a subsequent contraction.

Judge.

The Benefits of Expansion.

I might quote all the economic writers, from Adam Smith down, to the effect that the volume of money is the main factor in fixing the general price level. You will find the doctrine ably set forth in the works of Adam Smith, John Locke, David Hume, John Stuart Mill, David Ricardo, William Stanley Jevons and by all the French and American economists. The appalling effects of long continued contraction and the almost marvelous benefits resulting from a liberal increase in the coin supply are thus beautifully set forth by Sir Archibald Alison in his history of Europe:

"THE TWO GREATEST EVENTS THAT HAVE OCCURRED IN THE HISTORY OF MANKIND HAVE BEEN DIRECTLY BROUGHT ABOUT BY A CONTRACTION AND, ON THE OTHER HAND, AN EXPANSION OF THE CIRCULATING MEDIUM OF SOCIETY. THE FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE, SO LONG ASCRIBED IN IGNORANCE TO SLAVERY, EGOTISM AND MORAL CORRUPTION, WAS IN REALITY BROUGHT ABOUT BY A DECLINE IN THE SILVER AND GOLD MINES OF SPAIN AND GREECE, AND, AS IF PROVIDENCE HAD INTENDED TO REVEAL IN THE CLEAREST MANNER THE INFLUENCE OF THIS MIGHTY AGENT ON HUMAN AFFAIRS, THE RESURRECTION OF MANKIND FROM THE RUIN WHICH THOSE CAUSES HAD PRODUCED WAS OWING TO A DIRECTLY OPPOSITE SET OF AGENCIES BEING PUT IN OPERATION. COLUMBUS LED THE WAY IN THE CAREER OF RENOVATION. WHEN HE SPREAD HIS SAILS ACROSS THE ATLANTIC, HE BORE MANKIND AND ITS FORTUNES IN HIS BARK. THE ANNUAL SUPPLY OF THE PRECIOUS METALS FOR THE USE OF THE WORLD WAS TRIPLED. BEFORE A CENTURY HAD EXPIRED THE PRICES OF EVERY SPECIES OF PRODUCE WERE QUADRUPLED. THE WEIGHT OF DEBT AND TAXES INSENSIBLY WORE OFF UNDER THE INFLUENCE OF THAT PRODIGIOUS INCREASE."

Judge.

Puck.

The Wages of Labor.

He might have added, and this point seems to worry our monometallist friends, that the wages of laborers rose considerably faster than the prices of necessaries. Even so did they in 1848-56. And why not again? In truth the wages of more than half our laborers have got to rise before there can be a rise in necessaries. Monometallists have conveniently overlooked the fact that 60 per cent of the laborers in the United States do not work for fixed money wages; they produce, and what they sell the products for constitutes their wages. It is self evident, therefore, that a rise in the price of the product is itself a rise in wages. This class includes all the farmers, cotton, sugar and tobacco growers, vegetable gardeners, fishermen, growers of all kinds of live stock for food, and many others that I cannot detail. One of the worst errors of the monometallist is in assuming that the great mass of our workers are hired laborers, and they get that impression from such misleading documents as the Aldrich report, about which so much has been said. Examine that report carefully and you will find that the workingmen in all the trades mentioned in it do not together number quite one-fourth as many as the farmers of the country.

Judge.

And their method of treating this subject accounts for a very large part of the ill humor among farmers. In spite of the census and common sense, our alleged statesmen and economists insist on treating the subject as if the farmer were not a laboring man. A congressional committee is appointed to go out and prove that wages have risen, and of course they prove it. But how? They take the highest wages paid to the most skillful laborers in the highest priced cities at the busiest season of the year. As a rule they take only those laborers who are in well organized trades unions, although they are but a tenth of the laborers of the country, and they are extremely careful not to take into the account the number who are earning no wages at all, which is a pretty considerable item when you reflect that in Ohio, for instance, the coal miners only averaged 148 days of full work last year. If you will take all laborers, especially all who produce the necessaries of life from the soil, and count lost time, you will find that since 1873, except in cases where they have been abnormally kept up by trades union methods, wages have declined in the same ratio as commodities.

N. Y. Herald.

The Farmers' Meager Income.

A rise in the price of necessaries then would of itself be a rise in the wages of 60 per cent of the laboring producers. But would it stop there? Certainly not. The farmers would first pay their pressing debts and set the money in motion. They would then supply themselves with those things they have wanted so long and been compelled to do without. All the country merchants and all the country artisans immediately dependent on the farmers, such as blacksmiths, cobblers, carpenters, painters and the like, would immediately share in the gain, and all others in the improvement due to a general gain in trade. Our agricultural department has shown that the farmers' income has declined over $6 per cultivated acre. THAT MEANS THAT FOR THE WHOLE COUNTRY THEY ARE RECEIVING ABOUT $1,800,000,000 (EIGHTEEN HUNDRED MILLION DOLLARS) LESS THAN THEY DID A FEW YEARS AGO. NOT RECEIVING IT, OF COURSE THEY CANNOT SPEND IT. HOW CAN THERE BE WORK FOR CITY LABORERS OR PROSPERITY FOR ANYBODY WHEN THE FARMERS ARE SPENDING $1,800,000,000 A YEAR LESS THAN THEY NATURALLY WOULD? THERE IS NO CONGRESS WISE ENOUGH TO DEVISE A TARIFF THAT WILL HELP WORKMEN IN MANUFACTORIES SO LONG AS THE FARMERS CANNOT BUY THEIR PRODUCTS.

N. Y. World.

"Would free coinage raise prices to the old standard?"

It would not. Nor is it desirable that it should. As we have been running down hill for 20 years I should not complain if we were seven years in getting to the top again. The great thing to do, and the one thing that must be done if we are to avert general paralysis, is to stop the decline where it now is and then change from a falling to a rising market. That will give us time to breathe. It will stimulate enterprise. No man will invest money now with even chances of having his investment decline on his hands. But give a reasonable assurance even of a trifling advance and everything will at once put on new life. I need cite no proofs of this. It is the universal experience of all countries and in all times.

N. Y. Herald.

Honest Money.

"But you concede, if I understand you, that a part of the decline in farm produce prices has been due to greatly increased production?"

Unquestionably. No intelligent man denies it. How much is due to that and how much to monometallism we cannot figure out to a cent, but I think we can come much nearer to it than the monometallists admit. All past experience has shown that increased production of the necessaries of life does not of itself reduce prices in the exact proportion of the increase, for increased demand comes in and very frequently offsets all the gain in production. For convenience's sake I will state in the briefest possible form what silverites believe on this subject. We maintain:

Puck.

1. That there is not enough gold in the world and cannot be enough produced to maintain the present level of prices. If monometallism prevails, there must be a still further shrinkage. I dare not conjecture how far it will go, but I am certain that it will not stop short of 40 cent wheat and 4 cent cotton and other things in proportion. Gold will then be a far more "honest money" than now, for it will buy much more. You see how neat and complete this honest money argument is and how it rapidly grows stronger as prices go down, for, if a dollar which will buy 2 bushels of wheat and 16 pounds of cotton is more honest than a dollar which will buy 1 bushel of wheat and 8 pounds of cotton, then a dollar which will buy 4 bushels of wheat or 32 pounds of cotton will be twice as honest as the one we now have.

2. That there is not enough of both gold and silver to restore the prices of 1870-3 or of 1880-3.

A Real Gold Basis.

3. That in consequence of the much greater increase of population and production than of the metals, if there had been no demonetization, both gold and silver would have gained greatly in value since 1873. The villainy of monometallism lies in the fact that all the gain has been concentrated in gold. By way of general conclusion, I believe that monometallism for the world is impossible, and that Europe only maintains it on the condition that other nations do not. In fact, if it is to be maintained in this country and Europe, we must prepare for another shrinkage so great that the people will not endure it. There is a spirit abroad in the country now that is not very pleasant to think of, and if there is another turn of the screw—and there must be several turns before we get down to a real gold basis—it is much to be feared that there will be something like general bankruptcy and repudiation. Just consider this fact: The national, state, provincial, municipal and railroad debts of the world, those debts which are funded and permanent, the interest only being paid, now amount to at least $40,000,000,000, and the interest on it is over $2,000,000,000 per year. IT NOW TAKES ALMOST EXACTLY TWICE AS MUCH CORN, WHEAT, BEEF, PORK, COTTON AND OTHER EXPORT PRODUCTS TO PAY THAT INTEREST AS IT DID WHEN THE DEBTS WERE CONTRACTED. DOES HONESTY REQUIRE THAT THE LABORING PRODUCERS OF THE WORLD SHOULD PAY 100 PER CENT MORE THAN WAS ORIGINALLY CONTRACTED FOR?

Puck.

"Well, granting that many things have been done to the injury of the farmer, what can we do at this late day to remedy them?"

A Word of Counsel.

We can at least reverse the machine. We know what has hurt us, and we can put a stop to it. One man just now stands for all that has hurt the farmer. William McKinley is the political incarnation of those enormous land grants and subsidies which made millionaires by the hundreds; of the war tariff in time of peace, which transferred $12,000,000,000 in values from the west to the east and from the country to the great cities; of the national banking system, the demonetization of silver and the enormous increase in the power of gold; of Creole Mother and force bills, of vastly increased government expenditures and every extravagant scheme for building up great corporations. He represents it all and glories in representing it. He tells you with refreshing candor that if he can have his way you shall have a great deal more of that sort of thing. A vote for him is a vote to indorse it all and open the way to a much greater advance in the same direction. A vote for him is a vote for gold monometallism and lower prices for farm produce.

Commercial Advertiser.

William Jennings Bryan, on the other hand, stands for a restoration of the bimetallism of the constitution and against the things above mentioned. All other classes are striving to get more for what they sell, and why not you, the farmers? Railroad managers meet in high conclave to make profitable rates on freight; manufacturers do the same for their profit; brokers labor to advance stocks. All these vote and use the government to make money, and all denounce you farmers as no better than thieves for doing the same thing. Vote, as justice requires, to restore the old contract. Vote to help yourselves. Vote for Bryan, the money of the constitution and the uplifting of the agricultural interests.

MRS. N. C. MILLER,

Of Fort Wayne, Ind., writes on Nov. 29, 1894: "I was afflicted for forty years with heart trouble and suffered untold agony. I had weak, hungry spells, and my heart would palpitate so hard, the pain would be so acute and torturing, that I became so weak and nervous I could not sleep. I was treated by several physicians without relief and gave up ever being well again. About two years ago I commenced using Dr. Miles' Remedies. One bottle of the Heart Cure stopped all heart troubles and the Restorative Nervine did the rest, and now I sleep soundly and attend to my household and social duties without any trouble.

In a recent letter to the manufacturers Mr. W. F. Benjamin, editor of the Spectator, Rushford, N. Y., says; 'It may be a pleasure to you to know the high esteem in which Chamberlain's medicines are held by the people of your own state, where they must be best known. An aunt of mine, who resides at Dexter, Iowa, was about to visit me a few years since, and before leaving home wrote me, asking if they were sold here, stating if they were not she would bring a quantity with her, as she did not like to be without them." The medicines referred to are Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, famous for its cures of colds and croup; Chamberlain's Pain Balm for rheumatism, lame back, pains in the side and chest, and chamberlains, Colic, Cholera and Diarrœha Remedy for bowel complaints. These medicines have been in constant use in Iowa for almost a quarter of a century. The people have learned that they are articles of great worth and merit, and unequaled by any other. Insure vs Twins.

The latest insurance idea has been been brought out by one of our strongest insurance companies, with the best of backing. It is to insure married people against twins, and triplets. Now just what reason a man has to ask insurance against these double and triple blessings, we cannot see, but suppose it will act as a nerve soothe against these unforeseen accidents. But joking aside, it is quite an idea and may prove popular in Auburn, if things keep on as they have been doing.

Don't Bet.

Goshen Times.

It should be remembered that a bet on the election disqualifiesa voter. One man can bet small sums with a dozen or more and thus keep them frem voting by challenging at the polls. The scheme was attempted Saturday evening, the wagers being on general results for $3 even money, and was snapped up in a hurry by Republicans until they saw through it. Don't bet.

INFAMY HOLDS HIGH CARNIVAL

The Indianapolis News and Sentinel Ventilate the Republican Plot to Corrupt the Populist Leaders and Prevent the Union of the Indiana Silver Forces.

$75,000 TO PREVENT FUSION.

Indianapolis Sentinel.

The exposure in The Sentinel Friday morning of the wholesale bribery which is now being attempted by the Republican state central committee to prevent the fusion of the Democrats and Populists of the state is regarded as the most important disclosure that has been made since The Sentinel exposure of the Dudley outrage in 1888.

It has developed that the attempted crimes of the Republican state committee set forth in the statements published Friday morning are but a small part of the scheme of that organization, for the execution of which fully $100,000 has been set aside for purposes of corruption. Of the $750,000 which Mark Hanna has agreed to dump into the state through W. T. Durbin and the finance committee, $100,000 was to be used solely for the purpose of preventing fusion. Not only was the state Populist organization to be bought by wholesale bribes of money, if it were possible, but the committee of 13, which had plenary powers regarding the electoral ticket. was to be made the tool of the Republican state committee and the rest of the money was to be devoted to preventing fusion in the counties on legislative and county tickets. This work has been going on for fully six weeks, and in no less than 30 counties of the state agents of the Republican state committee have made offers of large sums to the Populists to prevent fusion, and in some counties this money has been accepted, though without the knowledge of the state Populist organization. In Pulaski county these bribes have been offered and L. W. Hubbell, the state committeeman from that district, has in his possession the facts which will show how the Republicans went to work there to carry out their designs by means of the wholesale use of money. In Marshall county the same tactics have been pursued and in other counties of the northern part of the state thousands of dollars have been offered the Populists for refusing to co-operate with the Democrats in the cause of silver.

The whole scheme is now being gradually disclosed and it shows that there was early in the campaign an arrangement in the Republican committee meeting to set aside as much money as was necessary to buy the entire Populist party in the state if possible. This money has been present at every convention and conference. That it has been refused in a large number of cases is proved by the fact that there has already been fusion in 27 counties of the state on 27 members of the legislature, eight senators and five congressmen. In several other counties there has been fusion on the county tickets.

Attempt to Bribe Rosenheiner.

Julius Rosenheiner of Center, Howard county, chairman of the Populist state committee, now tells the story of the attempt to bribe him. Mr. Rosenheiner has been a prominent worker in the Populist party and was another member of the committee of 13. He says that on the Saturday night before the meeting of the committee there left Indianapolis on the midnight train a representative of the Republicans who went to Kokomo, took a carriage and drove out to his house.

"This man," said Mr. Rosenheiner, "came to my house and represented himself to be a correspondent or reporter of the Chicago Chronicle. He began in a rather suspicious manner, inquiring as to how I stood on the question of fusing on the electoral ticket with the Democrats, and I frankly told him how I felt. He said the Chicago Chronicle was interviewing the members of the committee and he desired to get from me my exact position and to assure himself that this was how I was going to vote in the committee meeting.

"I had in my pocket letters from other members of the committee telling me of the efforts that had been made to bribe them and acquainting me with the way the bribers went about getting to an understanding with the members of the committee. I felt right away that this man was the one sent to me. I never let on, however, that I suspected anything and listened to him talk.

It Was 'Squire Feibleman.

"There were some persons near when he was talking to me and this seemed to make him nervous. He asked to have a strictly private talk with me, but I declined to allow this, as I felt certain just what he wanted He made use of several insinuations which I think I understood, but did not let on, and then finding that he could not get a chance to talk privately to me, he left. He did not make any offer of money to me and I think I know what he was after."

"Who was this man, Mr. Rosenheiner?"

"'Squire Feibleman of this city."

"Have you inquired since coming here whether Mr. Feibleman has any connection with the Chicago Chronicle?"

"I have, and I have found that he has nothing whatever to do with that paper—or any other paper, I believe."

"Do you think he called upon you for the purpose of making the same kind of a proposition that was made to others of the committee on behalf of the Republican state committee if he had been given a chance?"

"I do."

Mr. Rosenheiner desires that some arrangement be made between the Democrats and Populists and will work for that purpose. He represents the broader-minded and more conservative element of the party leaders and is being supported by some of the other prominent leaders.

Created Consternation.

The exposure of the attempted bribery has created consternation at Republican headquarters, and on Friday there was a hurried conference at the committee rooms. There was scurrying to and fro and a number of telegrams were sent out. It is thought there will be a called meeting of the committee within the next few days to take some action toward preventing the whole scheme from becoming known and toward fortifying themselves against whatever action may follow this attempted violation of the laws by influencing votes through the wholesale use of money. There were fears expressed by some of the Republicans that the federal authorities would take cognizance of the matter, while others endeavored to give the impression that the whole thing was a joke and should not be seriously considered. Chairman Gowdy was somewhat evasive in the matter. He refused to discuss the matter when asked, contenting himself with the evasive remark: "This committee has had no meeting with the Populists, and I suppose the Populists have concluded to put up a ticket because they desire to have an organization after the election."

In Democratic circles the exposure of the scheme was startling. Leaders could scarcely believe that a state organization like the Republican committee would ever dare attempt such high-handed criminality as to endeavor to buy the state organization of another party and by the use of thousands of dollars try to perjure leaders of that party. The general opinion was that the scheme excels anything ever attempted or even seriously considered by a party organization.

Conference of Populists.

Populists on Friday, who were still in the city, held a conference and the exposure was the sole topic discussed. While many of the leaders knew of the attempts that had been made and realized that the Republicans had many thousands of dollars set aside to buy up them and their associates, the flagrancy of the crime had not occurred to them until they had been thus forced to consider it in its proper light. There was general indignation expressed and when the conference adjourned there was a general feeling that some arrangement with the Democrats for the purposes of fusion should now be made by all means to throw off all shadow of suspicion. Indigation at the corruption attempted by the Republicans and the consequent insult cast upon themselves was freely expressed and there is now a general desire upon the part of the better element of Populist leaders to get at some kind of an understanding with the Democratic committee as soon as possible. It is probable that there will be another conference between the subcommittee and a subcommittee representing the Democrats.

Cannot Deny It.

There was no attempt made to deny the truth of the attempted bribery upon the part of the Republicans. Not a prominent Republican in the city Friday but tacitly admitted the facts as stated or said he had no means of knowing what the committee was doing to prevent fusion. There was no indorsement of the wholesale use of money in the manner attempted by the committee, however. In fact, several prominent Republicans said they thought the thing the most disgraceful proceeding that had ever come to light and were convinced that it would lose the Republicans thousands of votes in the state.

"That kind of business won't do," said a prominent Republican yesterday, and one who is close to the state committee. "We did not need to resort to that kind of work, and some one will have to suffer for bringing this disgrace upon the party. I had received intimations of what was going on some time ago, but it was not told me that such large sums were necessary to do the work. I was given to understand that a little traveling expense and a few things like that were all that would be required, but when it comes to buying men at $2,000 each and then paying the campaign expenses and telling men to name their own price and fix their own salaries, all involving an expenditure of from $50,000 to $100,000, that is a different matter, and now that it has come to light something must be done."

Chairman Rosenheiner's Views.

Chairman Rosenheiner of the Populist state committee is still in the city. He says the Populists are determined to force Mr. Sewall from the national ticket. If that is done he says that in view of the exposure of the Republican bribery scheme fusion in this state will be an easy matter to arrange. "We expect," said he last night, "that our action will have much influence in other states; that is why we insist so strongly now that Mr. Sewall be taken from the ticket. This matter in this state could then be arranged all right."

Enormity of the Scheme.

The total sum which it is now known the Republicans have devoted to the purpose of bribing the Populists to prevent fusion reaches $75,000. Captain Shepard was offered the expenses of Populist campaign, which now has been figured at $5,000, and he was told to name his own salary, the sum of $1,000 being, as it is understood upon good authority, implied. In addition L. W. Hubbell of the committee of thirteen was offered $2,000 and then asked to name his own price. Five members of the committee are known to have been offered the same sum, which makes an aggregate of $10,000 for these men alone. In addition to all this the state Republican committee had set aside $500 for each county to buy local Populists and prevent fusion on legislative and local tickets.

Same In Other States.

The sum thus represented is enormous and is the largest corruption fund that was ever attemped to be used in this state for one purpose. Such a vast scheme could only have been entered into and arranged after due consideration and with the full authority of the finance committee, the Republican state committee and the national committee, with Mark Hanna behind it. That the same methods have been used in other states is a natural inference, and when the total sum necessary to effect this national party corruption is considered the figures represent an amount which could only be commanded by the corporate powers of the country to perpetuate a single gold standard and prevent a victory for silver.

FIEBLEMAN'S GAUZY STORY.

What He Confessed to the Indianapolis News Reporter.

Saturday's Indianapolis News.

The alleged attempt of the Republicans to influence the Populist committee of 13 by the use of money is a fruitful theme with the politicians. Julius Rosenheiner of Center, Howard county, the chairman of the committee, has made a statement in which he says that he was visited at his home by Charles B. Feibleman of this city, who represented himself as a correspondent for the Chicago Chronicle, traveling over the state to interview the members of the committee as to how they stood on the question of fusion. Mr. Fiebleman, he says, was very anxious to learn how he stood, but did not offer him any money.

Charles B. Feibleman is a lawyer at No. 90 East Court street, and was formerly a justice of the peace. He admitted frankly that Chairman Rosenheiner's story was substantially correct. "If there is anything wrong with my going to see him I would like to know what it is," said he. "He has a Jew name, and as I am a Jew, I had a curiosity to see a Jew who is a Populist. I understood that he lived at Kokomo, but when I got there I found that he lived out in the country twelve miles on a farm near the postoffice of Center. I drove out to see him and found several neighbors sitting with him in his front yard. I told him I would like to talk with him, and he invited me into the front room of his house. We must have talked for half an hour. No one was with us and if I had any thought of offering him a bribe I certainly had a good opportunity. I told him I was interested in learning how the members of the committee stood on the question of fusion. He said, as one member of the committee, he proposed to stand out for all the Populists could get; he had been in favor of standing for Bryan and Watson. I told him that was right; I encouraged him in that position. He said he did not depend upon the daily newspapers for his political news, but obtained it through correspondence with the leading Populists all over the country. We talked, as I have said, for fully half an hour, and as he says, I made no effort to bribe him.

This Is Pretty Lame.

"Whom did you represent on that trip?"

"I represented no one but myself. As a Republican I was anxious to know how he stood on the question of fusion, and, as I have said, I was anxious to see a Jew who was a Populist. I went to see him on my own responsibility, and paid my own expenses."

"Why did you represent that you were a newspaper man from Chicago?"

"I knew that if I told him I was a Republican and was from Indianapolis, I would not be able to get the information I was after. I have no money to bribe anyone with, and the thought of influencing him with money never entered my mind. I simply wished to learn how he stood on the question of fusion, and I succeeded in learning that."

"Are you the person who approached Silas M. Shepard, the member of the Populist committee from this district?"

"I am not. I have never had any talk with Mr. Shepard on the subject of politics."

The name of the person who did make a proposition to Mr. Shepard is still kept from the public. Mr. Shepard said that he did not care to say anything further on the subject, unless his story was denied by the Republicans. "There have been some minor errors in the stories that have been printed in the newspapers," said he. "The proposition was made on the Monday before the Populist state convention." He says it was not Mr. Feibleman who approached him.

THE "FIFTY-CENT DOLLAR."

There is no such thing as a 50-cent dollar. The only element lacking in silver today is that it is not received at the mints for coinage. Parity will be maintained by exact equality before the law. Silver dollars are the equal of gold dollars. Open the mints for the free and unlimited coinage of both gold and silver and then the silver in the dollar is just as good as the gold contained in the gold dollar. By law we fix the coinage of gold dollars on a basis of $20.67 per ounce. Now, let the United States restore the free coinage and fix the value of silver at $1.29 per ounce, and all this wild talk about the 50-cent dollar will forever cease. "The value of money is not in its substance, but in the legal force with which its substance is armed by positive law."—Steck's Axioms, No. 14.—By J. T. Cornforth.

To Measure Corn in the Crib.

Two cubic feet of sound, dry corn in the ear, will make a bushel of shelled corn. To get quantity of shelled corn in a crib of corn in the ear, measure the length, breadth and height of corn crib inside the rail; multiply first by second and product by third; divide result by two—giving bushel of shelled corn. Corn shrinks much in winter and spring and settles down.

To Measure Hay in the Mow.

Multiply feet in height by feet in width, and that product by feet in length. Divide by 512, and the answer will be in tons or parts of tons. Some allowance should be made for the condition of hay. The above is for dry, compact, but not pressed hay. This may be relied on as an approximate mode.

Cost of Producing Pork

One bushel of corn will produce 10½ pounds of pork, from which you can easily determine whether it is better to sell corn or pork.

Careful experiments have shown the following facts in regard to feeding corn to make pork:

50 pounds of corn fed whole and raw, makes 10 pounds of pork.

50 pounds of corn, fed ground and raw, makes 15 pounds of pork.

50 pounds of corn, fed [illegible] mented [illegible]

Medical.

To cure a Sting of Bee.

Mix common earth with water to about the consistency of mud. Apply at once.

For Toothache.

Alum reduced to an impalpable powder, 2 drams, nitrous spirit of ether, 7 drachms. Mix and apply to tooth.

For Felon.

Take common rock salt, dry in an oven, pound it fine and mix with spirits of turpentine in equal parts. Put it in a rag and wrap it around the parts affected; as it gets dry put on more, and in twenty-four hours you are cured.

Chapped Hands.

Powdered starch is an excellent preventive of chapping of the hands, when it is rubbed over them after washing and drying them thoroughly.

To Stop Bleeding.

Bind a handful of flour on the cut.

Croup.

Shave off in small particles about a teaspoonful of alum; then mix it with twice its amount of sugar to make it palpable, and administer it as quickly as possible. Almost instantaneous relief will follow.

To Clear a Tanned Skin.

Wash with a solution of carbonate of soda and a little lemon juice; then with Fuller's earth water, or the juice of unripe grapes.

Almond Cookies.

¼ lb. almonds or hickory nuts
1 piece of citron.
1 teaspoon cinnamon.
1 " cloves.
1 " allspice.
1 pt. of molasses, boiled and let cool.
1 wineglass full of brandy.
2 cents worth Baking Hartzhorn.
3 tablespoonsfull chocolate.
3 eggs.

Make dough before bedtime and work stiff, roll next morning and cut in squares. Frost on top and ornament with almonds if desired.

Chicken Cream Soup.

Boil an old fowl with an onion in four quarts of cold water, until there remains but two quarts. Take it out and let it get cold; cut off the whole of the breast and chop very fine. Mix with the pounded yolks of two hard boiled eggs, and rub through colander. Cool, skim and strain the soup into a soup pot. Season, add the chicken and egg mixture, simmer ten minutes and pour into the tureen. Then add a small cup of boiling milk.

Chocolate Caramels.

2 cups of brown sugar, 1 cup molasses, 1 cup chocolate grated fine, 1 cup boiled milk, 1 tablespoon of flour, butter the size of a large walnut; let it boil slowly and pour on flat tins to cool. Wash off while warm.

Beef Patties.

Chop fine some cold beef; beat two eggs and mix with the meat and add a little milk, melted butter and salt and pepper. Make into rolls and fry.

Steamed Brown Bread.

One quart each of milk and Indian meal, one pint of rye meal, one cup molasses, two tablespoonsfull of soda. Add a little salt and steam four hours.

Egg Puffs.

Soften a tablespoonful of butter to a creamy consistency by working it with a fork; beat three eggs to a froth and add them to the butter; add also a level teaspoonful of salt and six tablespoonfuls of flour. Beat all these together until they foam, then put them into buttered earthen cups or small tin pans, and bake in a hot oven for about half an hour, or until they are nicely browned. Serve hot for breakfast or luncheon.

Meats and their Accompaniments.

With roast beef, grated horse-radish.
Roast pork, apple sauce.
Roast veal, tomato or mushroom sauce.
Roast mutton, currant jelly.
Boiled mutton, caper sauce.
Boiled chicken, egg sauce.
Roast lamb, mint sauce.
Roast turkey, cranberry sauce.
Boiled turkey, oyster sauce.
Venison or wild ducks, black current jelly.
Broiled fresh mackerel, sauce of stewed gooseberries.
Boiled bluefish, white "cream" sauce.
Broiled shad, boiled rice and salad.
Compote of pigeons, mushroom sauce.
Fresh salmon, green peas, "cream" sauce.
Roast goose, apple sauce.

Stuffed Eggs.

Take hard-boiled eggs; shell them and cut in halves; take out the yolks and mix with bread crumbs soaked in milk, chopped capers and minced sar- vinegar, pepper and molasses (either leans, preferably the former) spoonfull of ginger, and when thoroughly mixed, add one well-beaten egg and one-half pint of milk, in a part of which should be dissolved one-half a teaspoonfull of soda. It may be necessary to use more liquid. It should be proportioned to the stiffness of molasses and flour. The original recipe calls for candied peel, but currants, sultanas or all three may be used. Turn into a buttered mold or bowl, and boil for three hours. —Ladies' Home Journal.

It is sometimes convenient to remember the following items of cook's measurement:

One pint of liquid equals one pound.
Two gills of liquid make one cupful.
Four teaspoonsfull make one tablespoonful.
Two round teaspoonfuls of flour will weigh an ounce.
Half a pound of butter will make one cup.
Four cups of flour make one pound.
Two cups of granulated sugar make one pound, but in powdered sugar it will take two and one-half cups to make one pound.

Household Hints.

Before putting down the carpet wash the floor with spirits of terpentine or benzine and you may be sure moths will give them a wide berth. This must not be done with a fire in the room, or with any matches or lights near.

Never put table linen into soapsuds until it has had all stains removed by pouring boiling water through them. This will remove all stains but iron rust; for that sprinkle on oxalic acid, wetting the spot with cold water. Rub gently between the hands, and it will disappear. If obstinate repeat the process.

Kerosene oil may be entirely removed from light carpets, rugs or woolen goods by covering the oil spot thickly with buckwheat flour and letting it remain twelve hours; then brushing it off and applying fresh flour until the oil has entirely disappeared.

A good way to clean lamp chimneys: Mix to a thick cream some powdered whitening, with a little vinegar and lemon juice. Rub well over the lamp chimney or globe to be cleaned, inside and out. Rinse in cold water, polish with a leather, and the glass will be as bright and clear as new. Another way is to hold them over the steam of a kettle and then polish with a clean soft rag. Salt is also used to clear smoke-stained chimneys.

Brief Hints

Paint upon window glass may be easily removed by rubbing with a cloth wet in hot, strong vinegar.

A little saltpetre added to the water in which cut flowers are put will keep them fresh a long time.

An essential article that should be found in every kitchen is a vegetable brush. Lettuce, spinach, celery and many other vegetables may be cleaned much more readily with one than with the hands.

A piece of horseradish root put into a jar of pickles will keep the vinegar from losing its strength, and the pickles will not be as liable to become soft or mouldy. This is especially good for tomato pickles.

The time of payment of a note must be stated absolutely and not dependent on a contingency.

Even if a note is lost notice of protest should be given.

Due notice to one is sufficient where two or more partners are jointly liable.

The loss of a note by theft or otherwise does not release the maker if the consideration and amount can be proven.

If a note is given as security, or in payment of a per-existing debt, the debt is revived if the note is dishonored.

"Value received," as usually writen in a note is not necessary to its legality, but should occur.

An "accommodation" note does not bind the maker to the party accommodated but binds him to all others precisley the same as if it were given for a "consideration."

If the letter containing a protest of nonpayment be put into the postoffice, and miscarries, it does not affect the party giving notice. Notice of protest may be sent either to the place of business or of residence of the party notified.

Highly Esteemed

In a recent letter to the manufacturers Mr. W. F. Benjamin, editor of the Spectator, Rushford, N. Y., says: 'It may be a pleasure to you to know the high esteem in which Chamberlain's medicines are held by the people of your own state, where they must be best known. An aunt of mine, who resides at Dexter, Iowa, was about to visit me a few years since, and before leaving home wrote me, asking if they were sold here, stating if they were not she would bring a quantity with her, as she did not like to be without them." The medicines referred to are Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, famous for its cures of colds and croup; Chamberlain's Pain Balm for rheumatism, lame back, pains in the side and chest, and chamberlains, Colic, Cholera and Diarrœha Remedy for bowel complaints. These medicines have been in constant use in Iowa for almost a quarter of a century. The people have learned that they are articles of great worth and merit, and unequaled by any other. They are for sale here by Davenport the druggist. 39

Insure vs Twins.

The latest insurance idea has been been brought out by one of our strongest insurance companies, with the best of backing. It is to insure married people against twins, and triplets. Now just what reason a man has to ask insurance against these double and triple blessings, we cannot see, but suppose it will act as a nerve soothe against these unforeseen accidents. But joking aside, it is quite an idea and may prove popular in Auburn, if things keep on as they have been doing.

Don't Bet.

Goshen Times.

It should be remembered that a bet on the election disqualifiesa voter. One man can bet small sums with a dozen or more and thus keep them from voting by challenging at the polls. The scheme was attempted Saturday evening, the wagers being on general results for $3 even money, and was snapped up in a hurry by Republicans until they saw through it. Don't bet.

INFAMY HOLDS HIGH CARNIVAL

The Indianapolis News and Sentinel Ventilate the Republican Plot to Corrupt the Populist Leaders and Prevent the Union of the Indiana Silver Forces.

$75,000 TO PREVENT FUSION.

Indianapolis Sentinel.

The exposure in The Sentinel Friday morning of the wholesale bribery which is now being attempted by the Republican state central committee to prevent the fusion of the Democrats and Populists of the state is regarded as the most important disclosure that has been made since The Sentinel exposure of the Dudley outrage in 1888.

It has developed that the attempted crimes of the Republican state committee set forth in the statements published Friday morning are but a small part of the scheme of that organization, for the execution of which fully $100,000 has been set aside for purposes of corruption. Of the $750,000 which Mark Hanna has agreed to dump into the state through W. T. Durbin and the finance committee, $100,000 was to be used solely for the purpose of preventing fusion. Not only was the state Populist organization to be bought by wholesale bribes of money, if it were possible, but the committee of 13, which had plenary powers regarding the electoral ticket. was to be made the tool of the Republican state committee and the rest of the money was to be devoted to preventing fusion in the counties on legislative and county tickets. This work has been going on for fully six weeks, and in no less than 30 counties of the state agents of the Republican state committee have made offers of large sums to the Populists to prevent fusion, and in some counties this money has been accepted, though without the knowledge of the state Populist organization. In Pulaski county these bribes have been offered and L. W. Hubbell, the state committeeman from that district, has in his possession the facts which will show how the Republicans went to work there to carry out their designs by means of the wholesale use of money. In Marshall county the same tactics have been pursued and in other counties of the northern part of the state thousands of dollars have been offered the Populists for refusing to co-operate with the Democrats in the cause of silver.

The whole scheme is now being gradually disclosed and it shows that there was early in the campaign an arrangement in the Republican committee meeting to set aside as much money as was necessary to buy the entire Populist party in the state if possible. This money has been present at every convention and conference. That it has been refused in a large number of cases is proved by the fact that there has already been fusion in 27 counties of the state on 27 members of the legislature, eight senators and five congressmen. In several other counties there has been fusion on the county tickets.

Attempt to Bribe Rosenheiner.

Julius Rosenheiner of Center, Howard county, chairman of the Populist state committee, now tells the story of the attempt to bribe him. Mr. Rosenheiner has been a prominent worker in the Populist party and was another member of the committee of 13. He says that on the Saturday night before the meeting of the committee there left Indianapolis on the midnight train a representative of the Republicans who went to Kokomo, took a carriage and drove out to his house.

"This man," said Mr. Rosenheiner, "came to my house and represented himself to be a correspondent or reporter of the Chicago Chronicle. He began in a rather suspicious manner, inquiring as to how I stood on the question of fusing on the electoral ticket with the Democrats, and I frankly told him how I felt. He said the Chicago Chronicle was interviewing the members of the committee and he desired to get from me my exact position and to assure himself that this was how I was going to vote in the committee meeting.

"I had in my pocket letters from other members of the committee telling me of the efforts that had been made to bribe them and acquainting me with the way the bribers went about getting to an understanding with the members of the committee. I felt right away that this man was the one sent to me. I never let on, however, that I suspected anything and listened to him talk.

It Was 'Squire Feibleman.

"There were some persons near when he was talking to me and this seemed to make him nervous. He asked to have a strictly private talk with me, but I declined to allow this, as I felt certain just what he wanted He made use of several insinuations which I think I understood, but did not let on, and then finding that he could not get a chance to talk privately to me, he left. He did not make any offer of money to me and I think I know what he was after."

"Who was this man, Mr. Rosenheiner?"

"'Squire Feibleman of this city."

"Have you inquired since coming here whether Mr. Feibleman has any connection with the Chicago Chronicle?"

"I have, and I have found that he has nothing whatever to do with that paper—or any other paper, I believe."

"Do you think he called upon you for the purpose of making the same kind of a proposition that was made to others of the committee on behalf of the Republican state committee if he had been given a chance?"

"I do."

Mr. Rosenheiner desires that some arrangement be made between the Democrats and Populists and will work for that purpose. He represents the broader-minded and more conservative element of the party leaders and is being supported by some of the other prominent leaders.

Created Consternation.

The exposure of the attempted bribery has created consternation at Republican headquarters, and on Friday there was a hurried conference at the committee rooms. There was scurrying to and fro and a number of telegrams were sent out. It is thought there will be a called meeting of the committee within the next few days to take some action toward preventing the whole scheme from becoming known and toward fortifying themselves against whatever action may follow this attempted violation of the laws by influencing votes through the wholesale use of money. There were fears expressed by some of the Republicans that the federal authorities would take cognizance of the matter, while others endeavored to give the impression that the whole thing was a joke and should not be seriously considered. Chairman Gowdy was somewhat evasive in the matter. He refused to discuss the matter when asked, contenting himself with the evasive remark: "This committee has had no meeting with the Populists, and I suppose the Populists have concluded to put up a ticket because they desire to have an organization after the election."

In Democratic circles the exposure of the scheme was startling. Leaders could scarcely believe that a state organization like the Republican committee would ever dare attempt such high-handed criminality as to endeavor to buy the state organization of another party and by the use of thousands of dollars try to perjure leaders of that party. The general opinion was that the scheme excels anything ever attempted or even seriously considered by a party organization.

Conference of Populists.

Populists on Friday, who were still in the city, held a conference and the exposure was the sole topic discussed. While many of the leaders knew of the attempts that had been made and realized that the Republicans had many thousands of dollars set aside to buy up them and their associates, the flagrancy of the crime had not occurred to them until they had been thus forced to consider it in its proper light. There was general indignation expressed and when the conference adjourned there was a general feeling that some arrangement with the Democrats for the purposes of fusion should now be made by all means to throw off all shadow of suspicion. Indigation at the corruption attempted by the Republicans and the consequent insult cast upon themselves was freely expressed and there is now a general desire upon the part of the better element of Populist leaders to get at some kind of an understanding with the Democratic committee as soon as possible. It is probable that there will be another conference between the subcommittee and a subcommittee representing the Democrats.

Cannot Deny It.

There was no attempt made to deny the truth of the attempted bribery upon the part of the Republicans. Not a prominent Republican in the city Friday but tacitly admitted the facts as stated or said he had no means of knowing what the committee was doing to prevent fusion. There was no indorsement of the wholesale use of money in the manner attempted by the committee, however. In fact, several prominent Republicans said they thought the thing the most disgraceful proceeding that had ever come to light and were convinced that it would lose the Republicans thousands of votes in the state.

"That kind of business won't do," said a prominent Republican yesterday, and one who is close to the state committee. "We did not need to resort to that kind of work, and some one will have to suffer for bringing this disgrace upon the party. I had received intimations of what was going on some time ago, but it was not told me that such large sums were necessary to do the work. I was given to understand that a little traveling expense and a few things like that were all that would be required, but when it comes to buying men at $2,000 each and then paying the campaign expenses and telling men to name their own price and fix their own salaries, all involving an expenditure of from $50,000 to $100,000, that is a different matter, and now that it has come to light something must be done."

Chairman Rosenheiner's Views.

Chairman Rosenheiner of the Populist state committee is still in the city. He says the Populists are determined to force Mr. Sewall from the national ticket. If that is done he says that in view of the exposure of the Republican bribery scheme fusion in this state will be an easy matter to arrange. "We expect," said he last night, "that our action will have much influence in other states; that is why we insist so strongly now that Mr. Sewall be taken from the ticket. This matter in this state could then be arranged all right."

Enormity of the Scheme.

The total sum which it is now known the Republicans have devoted to the purpose of bribing the Populists to prevent fusion reaches $75,000. Captain Shepard was offered the expenses of Populist campaign, which now has been figured at $5,000, and he was told to name his own salary, the sum of $1,000 being, as it is understood upon good authority, implied. In addition L. W. Hubbell of the committee of thirteen was offered $2,000 and then asked to name his own price. Five members of the committee are known to have been offered the same sum, which makes an aggregate of $10,000 for these men alone. In addition to all this the state Republican committee had set aside $500 for each county to buy local Populists and prevent fusion on legislative and local tickets.

Same In Other States.

The sum thus represented is enormous and is the largest corruption fund that was ever attemped to be used in this state for one purpose. Such a vast scheme could only have been entered into and arranged after due consideration and with the full authority of the finance committee, the Republican state committee and the national committee, with Mark Hanna behind it. That the same methods have been used in other states is a natural inference, and when the total sum necessary to effect this national party corruption is considered the figures represent an amount which could only be commanded by the corporate powers of the country to perpetuate a single gold standard and prevent a victory for silver.

FIEBLEMAN'S GAUZY STORY.

What He Confessed to the Indianapolis News Reporter.

Saturday's Indianapolis News.

The alleged attempt of the Republicans to influence the Populist committee of 13 by the use of money is a fruitful theme with the politicians. Julius Rosenheiner of Center, Howard county, the chairman of the committee, has made a statement in which he says that he was visited at his home by Charles B. Feibleman of this city, who represented himself as a correspondent for the Chicago Chronicle, traveling over the state to interview the members of the committee as to how they stood on the question of fusion. Mr. Fiebleman, he says, was very anxious to learn how he stood, but did not offer him any money.

Charles B. Feibleman is a lawyer at No. 90 East Court street, and was formerly a justice of the peace. He admitted frankly that Chairman Rosenheiner's story was substantially correct. "If there is anything wrong with my going to see him I would like to know what it is," said he. "He has a Jew name, and as I am a Jew, I had a curiosity to see a Jew who is a Populist. I understood that he lived at Kokomo, but when I got there I found that he lived out in the country twelve miles on a farm near the postoffice of Center. I drove out to see him and found several neighbors sitting with him in his front yard. I told him I would like to talk with him, and he invited me into the front room of his house. We must have talked for half an hour. No one was with us and if I had any thought of offering him a bribe I certainly had a good opportunity. I told him I was interested in learning how the members of the committee stood on the question of fusion. He said, as one member of the committee, he proposed to stand out for all the Populists could get; he had been in favor of standing for Bryan and Watson. I told him that was right; I encouraged him in that position. He said he did not depend upon the daily newspapers for his political news, but obtained it through correspondence with the leading Populists all over the country. We talked, as I have said, for fully half an hour, and as he says, I made no effort to bribe him.

This Is Pretty Lame.

"Whom did you represent on that trip?"

"I represented no one but myself. As a Republican I was anxious to know how he stood on the question of fusion, and, as I have said, I was anxious to see a Jew who was a Populist. I went to see him on my own responsibility, and paid my own expenses."

"Why did you represent that you were a newspaper man from Chicago?"

"I knew that if I told him I was a Republican and was from Indianapolis, I would not be able to get the information I was after. I have no money to bribe anyone with, and the thought of influencing him with money never entered my mind. I simply wished to learn how he stood on the question of fusion, and I succeeded in learning that."

"Are you the person who approached Silas M. Shepard, the member of the Populist committee from this district?"

"I am not. I have never had any talk with Mr. Shepard on the subject of politics."

The name of the person who did make a proposition to Mr. Shepard is still kept from the public. Mr. Shepard said that he did not care to say anything further on the subject, unless his story was denied by the Republicans. "There have been some minor errors in the stories that have been printed in the newspapers," said he. "The proposition was made on the Monday before the Populist state convention." He says it was not Mr. Feibleman who approached him.

THE "FIFTY-CENT DOLLAR."

There is no such thing as a 50-cent dollar. The only element lacking in silver today is that it is not received at the mints for coinage. Parity will be maintained by exact equality before the law. Silver dollars are the equal of gold dollars. Open the mints for the free and unlimited coinage of both gold and silver and then the silver in the dollar is just as good as the gold contained in the gold dollar. By law we fix the coinage of gold dollars on a basis of $20.67 per ounce. Now, let the United States restore the free coinage and fix the value of silver at $1.29 per ounce, and all this wild talk about the 50-cent dollar will forever cease. "The value of money is not in its substance, but in the legal force with which its substance is armed by positive law."—Stock's Axioms, No. 14.—By J. T. Cornforth.

DOINGS OF THE DAY.

SUMMARY OF THE NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Eventful Happenings in Every Known Hemisphere—Fires, Accidents, Crimes, Politics, Religion, Commerce and Crops, Sandwiched with Minor Affairs.

RACE WAR STARTED.

Negroes and Planters Go After Each Other with Guns.

On Colbert Reserve, ten miles from Florence, Ala., a negro named Patton quarrelled with a planter named Sherrod, and with a stone knocked him out of the buggy in which he was seated with his wife. Sherrod's brother went to call upon him and got mixed up in an altercation with a negress and some negroes interferred. At night a number of men met a crowd of armed negroes and exchanged several shots with them. John Rowell, colored, was killed. There is a great deal of excitement in that vicinity, and it is probable that some of Rowell's friends will take the matter up

Trade Review.

R. G. Dun and Co., in their weekly review of trade says: There is still no distinct improvement in business, although conditions favor it. Confidence slowly rises, speculative buying of materials for future use continues, imports of gold do not cease, and the Bank of England has not tried to check them by further advance in rates, as the weight of the demand now falls upon France. But an enormous business is being held back until the future is more clear. In cotton, hides, wool and pig iron buying openly speculative in character marks the current business. Resumption of work by a good part of the Fall River cotton mills, and advances in some kinds of cotton goods, helped to raise the price of middling uplands to 8⅝ cents again, though realizing sent it down to 8¼.

Off for the Bosphorus.

London special: The St. James Gazette publishes a special dispatch from Washington in which it is stated that President Cleveland is determined that the United States cruiser Bancroft, now on her way to Turkish waters, shall enter the Bosphorus. The Government at Washington, the dispatch says, is fully informed of the plans of Lord Salisbury, and if the ships of the British fleet force the Straits of Dardanelles, the American war ships will follow and preserve order without engaging the Turkish forts. Several of the leading provincial papers, including the Leeds Mercury (Liberal) and the Yorkshire Post (Conservative) concur in the view that the joint tour of the British and American warships would be a magnicent co-operation.

State Liquor League Meets.

The Indiana State Liquor League has just held its annual meeting in Indianapolis. Eighty delegates, representing as many subordinate organizations, were in attendance. Mayor Taggart welcomed the delegates in a speech in which he said the saloonkeepers are engaged in a legal business and had a right to the protection of the law. The league determined to oppose the candidacy for office of all men, regardless of party, who are not in sympathy with their business. The Nicholson law was denounced, and the people were called upon to assist in getting it off the statute books.

Immense Gold Chunk.

The largest chunk of gold that has ever been in New York, was wheeled down Broadway a few days ago. It was taken from the Grand Central depot to the United States Assay Office, in Wall street, in a common express wagon, guarded by five detectives. The big lump weighs 4,737 ounces, and it is worth $85,000. It was shipped to the Assay Office by the Bank of Montreal, Canada, and belongs to the Cariboo Mining Company of British Columbia.

Here's a Novel Convention.

About sixty delegates to the tenth annual convention of American Cemetery Superintendents are in session at the Planter's Hotel, St. Louis. Much of the time has been taken up with a lively discussion as to whether bicycle riders should be admitted to the cemetries, that is, before they come to stay. It was finally decided by a vote of 26 to 16 that they should be, under proper restrictions.

In a Cellar.

The bodies of Hasley Petitt, aged 4, and Charley Waters, aged 3, were found in the cellar of Mr. Petitt's house at Bonner Springs, Kas. Near by was an empty gasoline can, while the clothing of the little ones was saturated with the fluid. There was no evidence of an explosion and the supposition is that the two children were overcome by the fumes.

The Rice Crop.

Consul Stang writes the Department of State, Washington, from Saigon, Cochin, China, that the Chinese rice crop did not suffer from inundations as was thought probable a few weeks ago.

Attractions at Robison Park.

Week September 24, Le Roy and Morris Troupe of Acrobats. Sept. 24, Farmers' Day.

Foul Play Suspected.

The unknown body picked up on the Pennsylvania track, near Orrville, Ohio, horribly mutilated, was identified as Will Hoffacre, Wooster, aged 23. Foul play is suspected. He had just been paid off, and had but a few pennies in his pockets.

Cuban General Roloff Arrested.

General Carlos Roloff, a Cuban, was arrested in New York on the charge of aiding and abetting the sending ot fillibustering expeditions to Cuba. He was held in $2,500 bail by United States Commissioner Alexander.

Three Men Found Dead.

Charles McGovern, Charles O'Toole and George Stevens were found dead in a cabin a mile from Victor, Colo. The men, with Harry Doyle and John McDermott, had been occupying the cabin for some time and all had been drinking heavily. The two latter have been arrested on suspicion of poisoning their companions.

A Town Destroyed.

A special from Vreelandsville, Knox County, Ind., says that almost the entire business portion of that town was destroyed by fire. Residences, businesshouses, and shops were burned, leaving many families homeless.

THE PLOT FAILED.

Daring Attempt to Wreck the Midnight Express on the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Pittsburg special: According to stories told by passengers on the Pennsylvania Railroad, western express which left Harrisburg, west bound, at 11:55 o'clock, Thursday night, the train had a remarkable escape from train wreckers, near the village of Newport. The train was speeding along at its usual rate when a very sudden commotion was noticeable among the trainmen, but the passengers were not notified of the cause until they neared Pittsburg.

At a sharp curve, the story goes, the engine ran into a huge obstruction, composed of ties and old rails, and was heavy enough to have derailed the entire train had it been held in place. When the engine crashed into it, the obstruction slid along the tracks, owing to their wet condition, and fortunately did no damage beyond breaking the pilot and some of the fixtures on the front of the engine. This is the second attempt to wreck a train at this point within two weeks. The Pennsylvania is making an effort to discover the miscreant.

Suicide and Murder.

Mary Bidwell, a daughter of Marion Bidwell, a prosperous farmer near West Jefferson, Ohio, gave birth to an illegitimate child the other day, and then cut her own throat. To her father and George Mills, her step-brother, she said that the father of the child was Harry Wilkins, a young farmer living two miles from the Bidwell place. The girl's two relatives agreed to go to Linden to swear out a warrant for Wilkins' arrest. But without saying a word to anybody, George Mills, the step-brother, went to the Wilkins place, met young Wilkins driving out from the yard, and, telling him what he had come for, shot his neighbor through the breast. Farmer Bidwell had procured a warrant, and when the Sheriff came to serve it he found Wilkins in mortal agony. Mills gave himself up. The girl is expected to recover, but there are little hopes of Wilkins, who denies that he was intimate with her.

Old Dry Goods House Fails.

Coffin, Altemus & Co., the oldest and one of the largest wholesale dry goods houses in Philadelphia, has made an assignment to John Lowber Welsh. The reasons given are inability to secure loans through the ordinary channels by discounting paper and large holdings of unproductive real estate. The firm did a business of hundreds of thousands of dollars yearly, and it is probable that the liabilities will be close to $500,000, with the assets possibly sufficient to cover this amount. The firm owns the famous summer resort Devon Inn, Pa.

The Competitor's Crew.

London special: The Standard's Madrid correspondent telegraphs that the Spanish newspapers are making an outcry because the naval and military Supreme Court has annulled the sentence passed on the crew of the filibustering schooner, Competitor, and directed that they be given a new trial before an ordinary court martial in Havana. Spain will now negotiate with the United States regarding the jurisdiction of the control court. A decision will not be given for some months. The decision can not entail death.

Shot Dead by a Mob.

Tom White, a colored citizen of Crittenden County, Kentucky, a few days ago discovered that his wife and a white man were intimate. He whipped her and she threatened his life. A party of ten went to White's and shot him dead. White's wife and seven men, some of them of well-known white families, have been captured. The men made a confession, and all are now in jail at Princeton, Ky. Three are at large.

Turn of Fortune's Wheel.

Parkersburg (W. Va.) special: Eighteen months ago Irving Grandin, a poor man, bought a farm of twenty acres on Broad Run, near St. Mary's River, at about $8 an acre, built a small house upon it and endeavored, by working it, to support his family. He has now five producing oil wells upon the property, his daily royalty from which is double the original price of the tract.

Train Goes Through a Bridge.

Eureka (Cal.) special: A train on the Mad River and Arcata road went through the Mad River bridge Monday. Six cars loaded with passengers dropped thirty feet into the dry bed of the river. Annie Holt and Sandy Cameron were killed and ten others seriously injured. The accident was caused by the giving away of a span of the bridge over which the train was passing.

Cotton Mills Shut Down.

The Nashville Cotton Mills at Nashville, Tenn., shut down for six weeks. The present high price for cotton is assigned as the cause. The mills have been running with a short force for some time, and the shut-down throws over 200 hands out of employment. The full force is 1,000 hands.

Burned to Death.

The Capital Furniture Factory at Sacramento, Cal., was destroyed by fire. Jacob Heintzman, employed as watchman, was burned to death.

Gold Found in Indiana.

Traces of gold have been discovered in the William Bryan farm, five miles south of Bedford, Ind.

HEAVY VOTE IN MAINE.

Republicans Make Tremendous Gains in Pine Tree State.

Maine went Republican in Monday's election by from 40,000 to 50,00 plurality, the largest in the history of the State. It proved a landslide far beyond the claims or expectations of the party managers in the State. Llewellyn Powers is elected Governor, and Congressmen Reed, Dingley, Milliken and Boutelle are returned by largely increased pluralities over those of two years ago. Indications are that the total Republican vote will reach 82,112, a gain of 12,523 over two years ago. Mr. Reed's plurality will reach 10,000, the largest he has ever received. The returns show a majority of about 12,000 for Mr. Dingley for Congressman from the Second district, over 10,000 for Mr. Milliken in the Third district and practically the same for Mr. Boutelle in the Fourth district.

The total vote in the State will probably reach 110,000, which is the largest ever cast in the State election during a presidential campaign. From returns at hand Chairman Manley estimates the Republican plurality at 50,000. It is the general estimate that the figures will be the largest ever given in Maine. Secretary Beane of the silver Democratic State committee concedes the election of the Republican ticket by over 40,000 plurality. He said: "I am satisfied Powers' majority will be over 40,000. It is much greater than I expected. I have nothing to say of the result."

The city of Bath, the home of Arthur Sewall, gave a plurality of 782 for Powers, which is the largest Republican plurality ever given there. Congressman Dingley gained 24 over his 1892 plurality in the same city. Augusta gives a Republican plurality of 957, the largest in the history of the city. More than one-third of the former Democratic vote went Republican. Portland's complete vote gives Powers a plurality of 1,937, a gain over 1892 of 1,451. Reed's plurality in Portland is 2,330. Powers has a plurality in Bangor of 811, a gain of 447 over 1892. Aroostook County gives the Republican ticket 4,000 plurality. Congressman Boutelle runs ahead of his ticket.

All the towns in Androscoggin County give Powers, 5,612; Frank, 2,294; Ladd, 184; Bateman, 352; Clifford, 32. This is a Republican increase over 1892 of 1,286.

There were only a few local contests to arouse factional fends, and order was preserved at the polls throughout the State without much difficulty. In all the strife and contention during the campaign the contest was remarkably free from personalities.

The most effective work was done from the stump, and never did a more formidable array of campaign orators expound Republican doctrines in a New England State. But the struggle was not entirely one-sided. With internal dissensions and a lack of funds to contend with, the Democrats made a very strong fight, especially in the cities. Candidate Frank did good work on the stump, and, while the speakers generally from outside of the State were not orators of great fame, their work was productive of some results.

The Prohibitionists conducted their campaign on practically the same lines as in past years. In none of the congressional districts was there a close contest. All of the Democratic candidates for Congress evidently believed that it was impossible to defeat the Republican nominees and their canvass was not very active. Mr. George E. Hughes, chairman of the Democratic State committee, says that before the campaign opened it was evident that it was absolutely impossible for the Democrats to carry the State, and it would have been the height of folly to have made the attempt. He declares, too, that the Republican managers worked night and day and spent thousands of dollars in campaigning.

MAY CALL AN EXTRA SESSION.

Belief that Congress Will Have to Consider the Increasing Deficit.

Washington dispatch: It is said at the Treasury Department that recent political events have not impaired the conviction held by finance officials that an extra session of Congress must be called to provide additional revenue to wipe out the deficit. The treasury showing has been very bad since July 1, and during the two months and a half a deficit nearly equal to that of the last fiscal year has accumulated. This is $10,000,000 worse than the showing for the same period 1895. The receipts for the ten weeks ending Sept. 12, 1895, were $69,035,967, and the expenditures were $83,154,148. The receipts for the same period this year have been $64,653,262, and the expenditures have been $88,602,144.

The increase of expenditures has been chiefly due to the payment of $5,000,000 for the sugar bounty, whose constitutionality was upheld by the Supreme Court, against the ruling of Controller Bowler. The falling off in receipts has been entirely in customs, which paid $35,699,683 for the first ten weeks of 1896, and have paid only $29,649,113 for the corresponding weeks of the fiscal year 1897. The internal revenue receipts advanced from $29,707,211 last year to $30,816,068 this year, and they are not likely to fall back. The general treasury balance is now $61,000,000 more than a year ago, and stands at $242,854,715. This $61,000,000 is all that remains of the $111,000,000 realized from the last bond sale. The difference has gone to bridge the deficit for last year, and to cover the redemption of some Pacific Railroad bonds. The month of September showed a surplus last year, and may do so this year, but the receipts for twelve days are already nearly $1,000,000 less than a year ago.

DANIEL W. JONES,

Arkansaw's Governor-Elect, Is Considered a Shrewd Politician.

Gov.-elect Jones is known throughout Arkansas as "Dan W." The Joneses are thick in Arkansas and the more prominent of them wear nick names so as to distinguish them from each other. "Dan W." was born in a little hamlet in Texas fifty-two years ago. He was the only son of a doctor who mapped out a medical career for him. "Dan W." preferred the law and tackled it early. He was also something of a fighter, and he distinguished himself in the Confederate ranks during the war. When peace was proclaimed he returned to his law books. In 1872 he moved from Texas to Washington, Ark., and entered into law partnership with Senator Jones, the present chairman of the Democratic national committee. There is no relationship between these two Joneses. In 1874 "Dan W." was elected prosecuting attorney of Washington County and later Attorney General of the State of Arkansas. After holding this office for two terms he moved to Little Rock, resumed his private law practice and formed the partnership of "Dan W." Jones and McKay, which still exists. He has the name of being one of the shrewdest politicians in the South. When fighting for the nomination for Governor he declared that he would bolt from the Democratic party if the Chicago convention should declare for a gold standard. On this issue he won the nomination. The Governor-elect has two daughters and three sons, and Mrs. "Dan W." is living.

ALLEGE A DYNAMITE PLOT.

British Police Claim to Have Unearthed a Conspiracy.

The arrest of Tynan and other Irish Invincibles is, it is thought, merely the opening chapter of a story soon to be published in all completeness—a story that will astonish America and shake England from center to circumference, a story that will reveal all the details of the boldest and most desperate conspiracy known to modern times. The arrest brings back with clearness recollection of the Phoenix Park murders. That crime fills many, and they the darkest, pages in Irish history. As a crime, simply, it was so coolly planned and so dastardly executed that no historian of this or any other age can pass it by. It was magnified by a series of sensational criminal events that grew out of the blood-stained grass in Phoenix Park. It gave birth to one of the most sensational happenings of any time—the trial of a great party leader and recognized chief of a people as accessory to the murder, for such, in fact, was the parliamentary inquiry into the charges brought by the London Times against Charles Stewart Parnell. And now, after fourteen years, the arrest of Tynan opens a field for limitless speculation as to where its consequences will end.

London is thoroughly startled over the disclosures following the arrest of the Irish Invincibles, P. J. P. Tynan and Edward Bell. Several facts in connection with their apprehension are causing amazement. The arrests of J. Wallace and John F. Kearney at Rotterdam and the capture of a number of infernal machines in their possession, together with the documents found upon the prisoner Bell in Glasgow, go to show the existence of the most important dynamite conspiracy ever hatched. Information in the possession of the officials at Scotland Yard, consisting of papers written in cipher, of facts gathered from private sources and other evidence not yet made public, leave small doubt that the plot provided for the assassination of the Czar of Russia and of Queen Victoria during the Czar's visit to London.

The forces of the dynamiters were to have been concentrated upon London, where it was planned to give many dynamite demonstrations in quick succession about the time of the assassination of the Czar and the Queen. While action was being carried forward in London Bell was to have attended to several dynamite outrages in Scotland for the purpose of distracting the authorities. That much, at least, is given out at Scotland Yard, and more, it is said, of even a more startling nature will follow. The Scotland Yard detectives acted promptly and quickly. They had been dogging the steps of the conspirators in America, and police agents followed the Invincibles everywhere after their arrival in Europe.

This conspiracy goes back to the murder of Lord Frederick Cavendish and Mr. Burke in Phoenix Park, Dublin, in 1882. The warrant on which Tynan was arrested was that which was issued fourteen years ago charging him with participation in the Phoenix Park crime. That he was let go at that time is considered a triumph of detective strategy. For fourteen years his every movement has been watched, and there is no doubt that the details of the vast conspiracy, with all its ramifications, will be laid bare. A significant feature of this situation is that the information which explained to the police the meaning of Tynan's actions and the purpose of his trip to Europe is said to have come from some of the political prisoners who were recently released by the Government. These men had left America for England thoroughly disguised and under assumed names. That some of them were arrested on board ship before landing, on warrants written in their true names, was startling.

It is plain that the motive for betraying their partners was a powerful one. To protect those who gave this information to the police the Government released several of them at the same time. It is stated by the London Globe, which has close relations with the Government, that the police have long been aware of an extensive revival of feninism and that several big force blows were in process of planning by the leaders. It was designed to give the demonstrations at English centers, especially London.

William Hopps, of Baltimore, has been elected President of the National Hay Association.

SHIP TEXAS AGROUND.

Big Battle Ship Went Broadside on Newport Beach.

The big battleship Texas, of the United States navy, went hard aground off Goat Island, near Newport, R. I. The leviathan, so formidable when in her element, was absolutely helpless and at the mercy of the wind. If a storm had arisen before she was released the chances are she would have been beaten to pieces. This magnificent bit of naval architecture, which cost the people of the United States something like $3,000,000, was subject to the caprice of the weather until the tide came in, when tugs got her back into deep water.

The Texas left the North Atlantic squadron for the purpose of getting a supply of torpedoes. When she reached the harbor the tide was running out strongly and was at about half ebb. She steamed slowly to her anchorage ground, west of the torpedo station, and dropped anchor in the usual place, a half-mile from shore. The order was given to stop the engines, but for some reason not explained the machinery continued to work, and the powerful twin screws dragged the anchor until the boat pushed her nose upon the sands.

When the boat finally came to a stand her bow stood about two feet higher than it should. Meanwhile the water continued to go out, rendering the great vessel more and more helpless. The tug Aquidneck came alongside in thirty minutes and began work, but it was soon discovered that the Texas was stranded.

CORN IS SAFE FROM FROSTS.

Conditions Generally Favorable for Harvesting the Crop.

Reports by States on the condition of crops show that the danger of frost has been generally passed. The general absence of rain in the Southern States has been very favorable for cotton picking, in which has been made rapid progress. The continued dry weather has impaired the outlook for top crop, which in many sections will be a complete failure. Continued cool and rainy weather has retarded the maturing of late corn in Iowa and Northern Missouri, and in North Dakota the crop was injured by frosts on the 9th and 10th. Cutting has progressed favorably, and husking and cribbing are in progress in Nebraska and Illinois. In the States of the central valleys the week has been especially favorable for plowing and seeding. Reports by States follow:

Illinois—Corn cutting has been pushed rapidly. The work will generally be finished this week. The grain is drying quickly and much of the crop will be safe to husk and crib within two weeks. Plowing and seeding in the dryer portions of the State have been much delayed, or entirely stopped, and rain is much needed, especially in southern counties. In the central section much uneasiness is felt in regard to seeding, owing to the great numbers of chinch bugs.

Iowa—The general condition of crops is very good. The bulk of the corn is practically safe from frost. For the complete ripening of the fall crop of corn from ten days to two weeks of dry weather is needed. More than the usual area of fall plowing will be covered, the conditions being very favorable.

Missouri—Corn is beyond injury by frost, and in some central and southern sections cutting is nearly completed. Potatoes will make an excellent crop. Pastures are in need of water.

Kansas—All corn, except some very late, is out of danger of frost. Haying has been retarded in some counties by rain, but the crop is fine and abundant.

Wisconsin—The rains of the past week have been well distributed and very beneficial, giving pastures a new start and putting the soil in good condition for fall seeding. Corn is nearly all out of danger from frost, and about three-fourths of the crop is in the shock. Buckwheat is maturing rapidly. The crop is only fair.

Minnesota—Thrashing in progress, though delayed by local rains. Corn generally safe and much cut already. Plowing is going on, but most of the ground is very dry.

North Dakota—Thrashing progressing fairly well, being interrupted by rain last week. Wheat generally fair yield; some late sown wheat not yet ripe. Corn promises a good crop. Heavy frosts on 10th and 11th injured corn and killed vines and garden crops. Oats light crop, owing to rust. Other crops fair.

South Dakota—Temperature averaged below normal, with light to heavy frost in localities Friday morning, but no material damage. Snowers scattered and mostly light. Most corn matured and the latest generally safe from injury by frosts.

Nebraska—All but the latest pieces of corn matured, with shucking commenced, with a large yield. Rains here placed ground in excellent condition for plowing and seeding. Some fields of fall-sown wheat up in good shape. No damaging frosts.

Indiana—Warm, dry weather. Buckwheat filling out well and safe from frost; corn most all cut; plowing done; seeding delayed by dry weather; wheat and rye coming up nicely.

Ohio—Corn ripened rapidly and is generally out of danger of frost—much of it in the shock. Crop is very fine and fully equal to previous estimates. Tobacco nearly all secured in good condition. Fall plowing well advanced, with some grain sown. All fruit abundant and winter apples about ready for picking.

Michigan—Corn cutting and fall seeding have progressed rapidly. Bean harvest nearly completed. Buckwheat maturing nicely, and some has been cut. Late potatoes a light yield. Heavy rains are delaying farm work.

Mrs. Phoebe Kling of Evansville, surrounded with luxury in a happy home, committed suicide by shooting herself. Despondency, resulting from poor health, is the alleged cause of the act.

A reunion of the James Hollingsworth family was held at Anderson, 118 members of the family attending. Mr. Hollingsworth is 81 years old, and he claims to have the largest family in Madison County.

Thomas Bailey, a 17-year-old boy, living four miles west of Frankfort, while attempting to drive across the Vandalia track, ahead of a south-bound passenger train, was struck and instantly killed. His horses were also killed.

A suit for $5,000 damage has been begun at Anderson by Emma Hendricks against John R. Boston for injuries inflicted when the defendant was making a criminal assault upon her. Boston will fight the case to the end. He claims that it is a case of blackmail, pure and simple.

David Lenon, aged 28, died at his home at Desota, from injuries received by being knocked from a Lake Erie and Western Railway bridge at the edge of town. He had been up all night and laid down on the bridge and went to sleep. His scalp was torn from his head and he received internal injuries.

Henry Loop, a farmer, died at Peru under peculiar circumstances. About two weeks ago he went to sleep, and from that he never awakened. A physician was called after he had been asleep for two days, but could do nothing to arouse him. He had been sick during last winter, and had not fully recovered from its effects. It is presumed a pressure on the brain was the cause of his failing to sleep.

Edward Porter of Eldwood, who was reported killed by the cars at Ewing, Ky., arrived home the other day safe and sound, and was considerably surprised to learn that he was supposed to be dead. He was not at Ewing, Ky., and the Porter who was killed there was another one of the same name, which led to the mistake. His relatives were greatly worried over the matter, and are overjoyed at his safe return.

Will Wiseman of New Castle, a previously intelligent young man, aged about 30, became violently insane and was the terror of the neighborhood for a time. He tore all of his clothing from his body, and it required the efforts of four stout men to restrain him; he escaped and was chased ten miles before he could be captured and brought to jail. The cause of his sudden insanity is supposed to be due to studying over religion.

The Marion Cycle Company, manufacturers of the Halliday bicycle, at Marion, have assigned. Liabilities $40,000, assets $150,000. J. C. Tibbitts was appointed receiver. The Marion Bank is the principal creditor, the amount being $10,000. The next two largest creditors are the Acme Cycle Company of Elkhart, and the Shelby Tool Company of Shelby, Ohio. The cause of the assignment is the failure of Porter & Gilmore of New York.

The large shaft of the Isaac McIntosh Coal Company, Caseyville, north of Brazil, was destroyed by fire. Flames caught from the boiler in the shingle roof of the boiler room and spread to the tipple and blacksmith shop, destroying everything above ground and ruining the valuable machinery. The leading merchants of Greencastle, recently offered a series of prizes to fruit growers and gardeners of the county for the finest exhibits of fruits and vegetables. The responses were liberal, and the promoters of the enterprise took an original method of displaying the fruits. Each business house devoted one large show window to its special group of exhibits, and the result was that the stores were besieged with sightseers all day. The county is one of the leaders of the State in fine fruits, and many rare collections were shown. Liberal prizes will be awarded by judges.

Mrs. A. E. Linder, aged 61, who was run down by a Big Four passenger train, died of the injuries. She suffered intensely. Mrs. Linder was one of the pioneers of Anderson, and her funeral will be largely attended. She was struck by the engine while trying to cross the track.

CHAPTER IV.—Continued.

With the utmost calmness she began talking of herself in the third person, feigning to be her own maid. As such she behaved, remaining quietly where she was, for politeness is not a characteristic of the servants of Ecks.

"No, sir; I'm sorry, sir, she isn't at home, the fraulein, but if there's anything I can do, sir——"

The gentleman looked up disappointed. "I wanted it done at once."

Poor Elizabeth! Work to be done at once, and if it should now slip out of her hands!

"Couldn't you leave the work with me, sir?" she said. "The fraulein puts great trust in me, she does."

"Well, it's only a copy, after all," murmured her visitor, half aloud. "She may be able to do it, and I must have it. I'd like to have seen her, though. It's hardly a lady's work."

He was going to say something more, when the girl silenced him, saying sharply: "All right; I'll give it to her, sir. You'll find your way out, I suppose?"

The German took the hint and went, muttering some remark on this rudest of damsels.

"Well!" said Elizabeth, indignantly, as she looked after him, "that's the first time I ever had a gentleman leave me without even raising his hat;" then, amused at herself for so soon forgetting her role, she burst out laughing.

The work was done by evening and laid by Elizabeth on a table among several other papers which had, she thought, a legal appearance.

"Here he is!" cried Dorry, as the hall door bell rung. "I'll let him in."

The gentleman had evidently dressed himself with extreme care, being now in the lightest of kids, in honor, no doubt, of the English lady, who, as he probably gathered from her maid's account, must be still very young. He was himself extremely youthful, as Elizabeth now observed for the first time.

As he entered the room he smiled, looking at the two sisters, who had both risen; then began talking English:

"Who of the misses is the versionist?"

"I," replied Elizabeth.

"Ah, so. I haf left a pepper of judgments with your she-servant this morning, miss——"

"Yes, here they are," said Elizabeth, handing him a scroll. "They are all right, I think."

She then sat down and wrote out an account for 10 marks, saying, as she did so:

"You are the Herr Widmann, I suppose, mentioned in this paper?"

"No, miss," was the answer. "The Mr. Widmann in that pepper is an old; but I am but a parent of him, his niece—I should say, his nephew. He did ask me to come because I am knowing English, and can examine the pepper. He is schr elgen, my uncle—very quizzical, as you say in English."

Elizabeth approached the piano, and, smiling, folded up her mother's prospectus. This she then presented to her visitor, saying:

"As you like English, it may interest you to know that my mother gives English lessons."

The gentleman took the paper, with a slightly scornful expression.

"Lessons," he said, "them I have never taken. Your language, miss, is so facile that, with a perfunctory information of French (how I possess him) and a profound knowledge of the speech of the Fatherland, it is possible to teach it to one self. The grammar, which I know to the base, is to smile at—no genders, for instance, who form the cliffs in French. Truly, that German must be a noodle who cannot instruct himself in so simple a language, with to his aid a grammar and the plays to that gross poet Shakspeare. Observe how the word 'gross,' he is a German word. Your language is but a botch-botch of French and German."

Having said which, Herr Widmann, with German courtesy, bowed to the little professional woman as if she were a princess, and begged to recommend himself, which is the German form of taking leave. At the door he turned, however, and said, after a moment's hesitation:

"I think, miss, it is but right to tell you your she-servant is extremely unpolite, though I doubt not an honest maiden. She did receive me in the kitchen this morning, and stepped not down from a pinnacle where she was mounted, and did for the most part speak to me turning to me her back. I wish not to complain as regards me, but I think him my duty to inform you thereof in regard to other visitors who may come when you are gallyvanting."

Having thus crowned all his former malapropos, Herr Widmann, blissfully unaware of having couched his friendly warning in any but the most studiously polite words, a second time begged to recommend himself, and this time really departed, leaving Elizabeth speechless with amusement.

CHAPTER V.

Nora was going to give a concert. This was the present excitement. You had only to pass the chief music shop in Ecks to see a large printed announcement of the concert; and I hardly think you would have passed said shop at any hour in the day that you would not have seen one or other of Nora's family studying said announcement. Mrs. Denbigh, from the other side of the road, with a terrified expression; Tom, planted boldly right in face of it (you cannot imagine how strange it was to him to see Nora's name printed in fat black letters on yellow paper); Elizabeth and Dorry sauntering slowly past it, and looking at it furtively from the corners of their eyes.

Once indeed, seeing a decidedly English looking man standing before it, Elizabeth had deliberately paused a moment with Dorry, and had said aloud to her:

"Ah, an English concert, you see, Dorry. I should think, now, that would be interesting."

And the gentleman, who happened to know them by sight, had smiled as he soliloquized, "Funny little girls! I'll go to the concert; by Jove, I will!"

And who was making the concert dress? Not Nora. The little, dark figure, half hidden in a cloud of muslin, sitting in the window to profit by the last daylight, as she runs her needle deftly in and out, holding her work at arm's length—nobody can mistake her.

"Dorry, you'll hurt your eyes, child. Let me light a lamp."

"No, no, mother; we'll have to sit up late, anyway; and we burn such a lot of oil as it is. I can see quite well still, and I must go on sewing. Think only, to-morrow's the concert night."

The eventful night found Nora a picture; the frail, girlish figure, under middle height; the pretty face, with the great hazel eyes peering out of it; the long, white dress, that made her look almost like a child dressed up as a woman for the nonce; the long, golden-brown hair, fastened back by a white ribbon, and a tiny bunch of pink rosebuds—the only colored thing about her. Beside her stood her mother. None of the Denbigh girls could compare externally with their mother, not even the pretty child in white (for, despite her eighteen years, Nora looked yet a child). Tall, and dark as an Italian, with superb black eyes, even in her shabby black dress Mrs. Denbigh could not fail to attract notice.

CHAPTER VI.

Not far from her stands Elizabeth, looking rather well to-night, with her pale face slightly flushed, her eyes bright with excitement and her long hair hanging down in a great plait. Stooping down to put a finishing touch on Tom stands Dorry. Her face is paler than usual, her lips, as usual, are quite colorless, and there are telltale margins under her black eyes. But from underneath the little brown cap her pretty dark curls fall over her face. She has a pink shawl thrown about her shoulders, and Nora whispers to the mother:

"That's Dorry's color; how pretty she looks!"

At last the family start. Their remarks are characteristic as they reach the green room:

"Where will you sit, mother?"

"Up in the gallery, behind a pillar. I know a place, where nobody ever sits."

"Cheerful—we are at liberty to choose the grandest numbered seats in the hall. I mean to sit in the first row, number five, which is immediately behind the princess' fauteuil. And you, Dorry?"

"I shall sit a little further back, as I think we ought to spread ourselves over the hall, to hear what the people say. We'll sit near people who won't know we're sisters. Now listen. We must agree on a few signs. If I fold my arms, I am satisfied all is going well. If I put my hand up to my right ear, I want to tell you something. You do the same to me. But mind you speak of Nora as 'the artist,' in case any one should overhear. What a blaze of light!" (This as they entered the concert hall.) "Do you feel nervous, Elizabeth?"

"Well, yes; I'm quaking in my shoes. And you?"

"My teeth are clattering."

With which eminently comforting confessions the sisters part; Elizabeth to sit immediately behind the princess, or, rather, behind the princess' chair, that lady having not yet arrived, Dorry and Tim sitting somewhat further back. Then at last a little white figure enters, looks around, courtesys deep, and sits down before the hall of people. She then begins taking off her gloves, and plays, while she, the piano, and all the crowd of spectators swim before the eyes of three present; the dark figure concealed behind a pillar in the gallery, the girl leaning breathlessly forward in the front row, and the curly headed child in the middle of the audience. Then a pause; the first piece is over.

"Won't you clap, Dorry?"

"I should think I will, Tom!"

Up and down went her hands. Buttons broke, seams burst, palms ached; still she clapped. And Elizabeth, behind the princess' chair, followed her example.

What were the people laughing at?

Why, dear me! yes, every one had ceased clapping, and Tom and Dorry and Elizabeth were alone belaboring their hands.

It was the singer's turn now.

"Tom," said Dorry, "mind you clap for this gentleman as much as for the musician. Keep my place, dear, whilst I take a run over to Lizbeth."

"What is it, Betty?"

"I only wanted to ask you, do you see that gentleman over there?"

"I see. What about him?"

"He struck the ground with his cane when the artist played, and said something to the lady. I shouldn't be surprised if he were some grandee."

"Hush! the gentleman beside us is smiling. Why, he's the gentleman we saw looking at Nora's program, Elizabeth. Speak quite in a whisper. Here's the princess, and the artist has just come on again, and bows to her especially. Isn't it wonderful how she thinks of things? I wonder if the prince will go up and shake hands with her. No; I suppose he's going to wait till afterward. I think she looks decidedly distinguee, don't you?"

Dorry returned to Tom.

"How do you like it, Tom?"

"The concert? Not much."

Suddenly Tom cried, "Dorry!"

"What?"

"You see over there, five seats from us, a head? Well, that's Hans Meyer, and he's clapping. He told me he'd clap if he liked the way Nora played."

Suddenly he remarked that Dorry's expression had become thunderous. The reason of this was that, on looking down the row where she was seated, Dorry had seen an old lady fast asleep. Well, far was it from Dorry to grudge old age a nod in the proper place; but to fall asleep and snore—positively snore—in Nora's concert, that was too much. Tom followed the direction of Dorry's eyes, saw—and sympathized. At last it struck ten and the assembly broke up.

"Quite unusual for the princess to sit out a whole concert," said a lady to another, passing Dorry.

Dorry beamed and blushed; and the lady looking surprised and interested.

When they all reached home the wearied little artist flung herself into a chair. The roses had fallen from her hair, and the ribbon that tied it, loosened. All the bright curls tossed and falling about her face, she looked up.

"Oh, I'm so glad it's all—all over. I don't think I was born for this. It was so hard to bear up and play before so many."

CHAPTER VII.

If the reader has no objection to losing sight of the Misses Denbigh for some ten minutes, I should now like to introduce to him a lady of their acquaintance, Miss Smythe-Smythe, aunt to Tom Thomson.

It has been said that Tom Thomson was the tallest man in Ecks; no doubt height was a feature of the family, for his aunt, Miss Smythe-Smythe, was the tallest woman in Ecks.

Miss Smythe-Smythe was a most architectural lady; hers was the Gothic style. In speaking of her you found yourself instinctively using the language of art and architecture. You would catch yourself talking of her figure as the "draped column" (not that columns are usually draped), of her head as "the pointed cone," or "the apex to this pillar," just as naturally as, in alluding to her arms and neck, you would find yourself making use of such ridiculous words as "fluted," "spiral," etc. Add to this peculiarity of build that Miss Smythe-Smythe wore a black silk dress, a black silk cap and a black silk apron, and you will understand how extremely strange her appearance must have been.

Miss Smythe-Smythe was an acquaintance of the Denbighs. Mrs. Denbigh had just received a letter from her folded in three-corner shape, closed by a wafer and written in a hand falling at right angles. It ran as follows:

"Miss Smythe-Smythe presents her compliments to Mrs. and the Misses Denbigh, and requests the pleasure of their company to a cup of tea on Wednesday at 7 p. m. R. S. V. P."

This letter arrived on Saturday.

"Quite formal," said Nora. "We'll have to dress, mother; not full dress, of course, but handsome visiting dress. What are you laughing at, Dorry?"

"Nothing; I was only thinking we'll have to drive, of course; not in separate carriages; but in the family coach."

"Yes, indeed," said Elizabeth, "and I'll tell you what, girls! We won't make a display of jewelry, but a few of our ancestral diamonds will not be out of place."

"Very witty," said Nora, with the expression of keen appreciation which commonly comes over our faces at the exercise of wit at our own expense.

"Seriously, Lizbeth," she continued, "what are you going to wear? You can't wear that dress."

"Can't I? Then I think I must stay at home," said Elizabeth, smiling.

"Nonsense! That'd look poor!" cried Dorry.

Meanwhile Nora, with a calmness which was rapidly leading her mother to fear that she was suffering from momentary insanity, repeated, "Yes, she must have a new dress," this, looking at the lank girl with an eye, the expression of which was gradually changing from the pensive to the "I have it!"

Finally the "I have it!" look spreading all over her face, she walked quickly toward the table, took the books off it, then the cloth, and began holding up the latter critically to the light.

"Yes; not an ugly green, and green rather becomes Lizbeth—ink spots don't matter, can be hid in the puffing. Just enough for a polonaise, I think. Table, after all, mahogany. Come here, Elizabeth. Yes, the color is really charming. Mother, this'll make Lizbeth a dress."

So it was arranged, and, clad in the table cloth, metamorphosed into the most fashionable dress, with rosettes on her very shabby boots, and a "wisp" gracefully enveloping her neck, Elizabeth made her appearance at Miss Smythe-Smythe's house on Wednesday, Tom Thomson doing the honors; for his aunt was extremely deaf.

CHAPTER VIII.

Miss Smythe-Smythe was charmed to see Mrs. Denbigh and her daughters looking so well—would she (Mrs. Denbigh) excuse her telling her that she had a hairpin threatening to fall? Such charming girls, her daughters—would Miss Denbigh mind looking if that was a pin just before her foot on the carpet; so terribly dangerous to have pins lying about the floor. Did not Miss Eliza, or (what was her name?) Elizabeth (ah, charming name!), did not she look rather pale? She had a hair just hanging over her eyes, so liable to give one a squint—she hoped she was not offended at her telling her—and Miss Theodora ("Miss Theodora" had buried her face in her handkerchief, being only, after all, "naughty 14")—ah, laughing as usual, such a charmingly gay girl; but never giddy, she hoped, never giddy. What did they do with their time? Learned and taught! Ah, indeed! so very praiseworthy in young women to learn and teach. Would Miss Nora play something?

"Do, Miss Nora," said Tom earnestly, evidently ill-pleased at his aunt's patronizing manner; for Tom was a gentleman.

"Will you sing us something, if I do?" said Nora, gayly, sitting down at the piano.

"I will do anything you ask," was the gallant reply.

Nora played a nocturne. She did not usher it in by an impromptu of her own, a dashing series of chords, in the now accepted style; nor did she play it as if it came from her backbone. She played it very softly, very slowly, and with exquisite delicacy.

Then the tea was passed round. Miss Smythe-Smythe said nothing; she was not a talkative woman. Tom Thomson said nothing; he did not know anything to say. At last a bright idea struck him; the weather was still an untouched subject of conversation.

"And how do you find this weather agree with your flowers, Miss Nora?"

"Oh, very well," was the answer. "Every weather agrees with geraniums. Do you like geraniums, Mr. Thomson?"

"Yes, I'm very faund of that one yaunder," said Mr. Thomson, pointing to a flower of the genus geranaceoe standing on the window sill.

"It's a beauty," said Nora.

"Do you think so? I caul it—but, perhaps, I should not acknowledge that" (and Mr. Thomson blushed slightly).

"Oh, that's not fair," exclaimed Nora, laughing. "You must confess now."

"Do you aurder me to, Miss Denbigh?"

"Yes," in a decided tone.

"Well, then, I caul—that exceedingly pretty geranium 'Miss—Miss Denbigh.' There, now, is a confession! Is it not hauridly rude of me?"

"Not a bit," said Nora, her merry eyes dancing; "I think it is a very pretty idea; but, confess, do you call it 'Miss Denbigh' exactly?"

"What are you talking about, Tom?" asked Miss Smythe-Smythe.

"Bautony," was the answer her truthful nephew made.

"Indeed! That reminds me, are the saucers all right?"

Here Dorry, who had not yet opened her lips, thinking this would be a good occasion to show that she was not "shy" in company (so stupid for a great girl of fourteen to be shy!), replied at the top of her voice:

"Yes, thank you, Miss Smythe. Mine has a crack in it, but nothing goes through."

Mr. Thomson smiled as he explained that his aunt meant the saucers under the flower pots.

Poor little Dorry could say no more.

"Will you play us something more, Miss Nora?" asked Tom.

When she had ended his eyes were fixed on her, the great, meaningless, blue eyes she had so often laughed at. They were very kind eyes, as she now noticed for the first time.

"Do you like the aupera, Miss Nora?"

"Yes, very much," and Nora's eyes sparkled.

"Why, I never see you there, and I go almost every night with my aunt. Though she does not hear, she is faund of the aupera as a spectacle. Will you go with her sometimes?" asked Tom Thomson suddenly, as if recollecting something. "She is very kind, and—and—might be useful to you, Miss Denbigh. Ladies can be useful to each other sometimes, can they not?"

Thus it came that Tom Thomson gave up his seat in the "aupera" to the little artist, and the tall Scotchman, with the languishing blue eyes and the invariable flower in his buttonhole, answered all queries as to why he had abandoned one of his favorite pastimes of late with "The fact is, I gaut tired of it."

"I say, girls, Tom Thomson is an out-and-out nice man," said Nora, as she took Dorry's arm going home.

"How did you find that out?" asked Elizabeth, who was skeptical concerning the value of men generally, starting from the man Tom Denbigh.

"From a talk we had at the piano," and Nora repeated the substance of her conversation with the Scotchman.

"That is nice of him," said Dorry, enthusiastically, "for you know, girls, every one says he's not rich, though Miss Smythe is."

Horses Like Music.

The leading part of a circus is the ring, and respecting it we must say a word. Circuses differ in many important respects in different countries, but the size of the ring is the same all the world over, and that size is forty-two feet in diameter. This enables a performer trained in one country to perform in any other country. Likewise a horse broken in to the ring in one country is equally trained for all other countries. A curious thing is told by circus people in connection with horses galloping round the ring. The horses' feet fall noiselessly on the soft material composing the ring, and this the horse doesn't like. It likes to make a noise, and hear, as well as see and feel, that it is going and making progress. Horses toss their heads up and down in the stall for no other purpose than to make a noise with the halter chain. Noises amuse them just as they amuse children sometimes. When they are in the ring careering round upon the soft mould and clay, they get this amusement by striking their feet against what is called the fence—that is, the boarding that runs round the outer edge of the ring. You can always tell an old circus horse; for as soon as it begins to gallop round it goes click, click, at regular intervals against the fence with its hind foot, and so provides itself with music. Some circus men don't like this noise, and to prevent the horse making it, place boarding flat on the top of the fence all around. This projecting boarding compels the horse to keep a little in the ring and away from the fence, which it is then unable to strike.

Electric Stamp Cancellers.

The first application of electric letter cancelling machines in the United States was made recently in a new street railway mail car, especially built for the West End railway postoffice service in Boston.

The idea is novel, and will undoubtedly prove a great improvement in the service. Cancelling machines are in use in the Boston postoffice, where they were first introduced into this country.

In the street mail cars all the mail was cancelled when placed aboard the car, except the drop letters, which were cancelled with a hand stamp. Under the new arrangement, however, the mails can be put aboard the cars direct from the collectors, and the extra handling of the matter saved.

The new cars are built with new ideas, which were not possible in the old ones, as they were simply made over from the ordinary cars. The cancelling machine is in the corner, and power is received direct from the trolley and generated through a small motor. One clerk, with this machine, can handle, face and stamp six thousand letters an hour.

The car was inspected by Postmaster Covency, who seemed pleased with the new arrangement, and said:

"It is an admirable arrangement, and after it gets into good working order will probably do much to save important time, and thus increase the efficiency of the service. On the all-night circuit car is where the machine can best be put to practical use, as so much mail is handled, and the run is so long as to give plenty of time to work up matter."

He Began Young.

The New York Tribune tells the following story of the celebrated Brooklyn sculptor, Frederick MacMonnies: "When the boy was 7 years old he made one of his first pieces, which his mother now keeps in an honored position in her parlor. It is a miniature likeness of an elephant and is remarkably life-like in all respects. One morning the boy, with his playmates, went to town to see Barnum's big circus parade. The embryo sculptor took in the whole show from beginning to end, but was especially interested in a certain white elephant, then taking his first starring tour. Before the last notes from the bands in the procession had died away the boy was hurrying home. There he secured some clay, and in an hour or two he had molded the wonderful little image which many curio hunters would doubtless be glad to get at any cost."

The Mighty Amazon.

The Amazon is in every respect but length the great river in the world. At many points in its lower course so vast is its width that one shore is invisible from the other, the observer seeming to look out into a rolling sea of turbid water. It has over 400 tributaries, great and small, which rise in so many different climates that when one set is at flood height the others are at ebb, and vice versa, so that the bulk of the great river remains unchanged the whole year round.

Never Touched Him.

The stomach of an ostrich that died a few days ago in the menagerie in Central Park, New York, was found to contain a wooden clothespin, two pieces of glass, a mouth harmonica, a piece of umbrella handle four inches long, a metal skate key, a brass door key, a silk handkerchief, a horn comb, two pieces of coal, and three pebbles. Yet the ostrich did not die of indigestion, but tuberculosis.

WITH BABIES FOR BAIT.

Hunters in Ceylon Lure Crocodiles to Their Death.

The fondness of crocodiles for babies is used by hunters in Ceylon to lure the reptiles to death. A nice, fat baby is tied by the leg to a stake near some pond or lagoon where crocodiles abound. Soon the child begins crying and the sound attracts the crocodiles within hearing distance. They start out immediately for the wailing infant.

The hunter in the meantime conceals himself in the bushes or swamp grass near the baby, with a rifle in his hand projecting out and almost over the child. He remains perfectly quiet and the reptile, intent on its prey, notices nothing but the screaming and kicking child. As the monster approaches to within a few feet of the bait the hunter sends a bullet directly into the alligator's eye, causing instant death. A miss would mean death for the baby, but the hunters are expert shots and at the short distance at which they fire a miss is next to impossible. As a rule the sound of the firearm scares the baby worse than the presence of the crocodile's jaws and the rows of sharp and glistening teeth, but after being shot over a few times the child takes the shooting as a matter of course and pays little attention to it. So expert are many of the hunters that they do not shoot the alligator until it has approached to within a few feet of the baby. Then, with but a few inches of space between the muzzle of the rifle and the eye of the alligator, the fatal shot is fired.

LADY TENNYSON.

She Loved Her Husband and Home and Was an Ideal Poet's Wife.

Emily Selwood Tennyson, widow of the late poet laureate of England, died recently at the beautiful residence of the Tennyson family on the Isle of Wight. She had lived a secluded life, and, like her husband, was unknown in English society. She might have been distinguished and even brilliant in the best of English drawing rooms, as in her own, had she so desired. Her opportunities, not only by reason of the laureate's fame as the greatest of living poets, but through her own fine mind and innate gentility, had been ample. She preferred, however, the quiet of the delightful place in the pretty island off Portsmouth, the care of her roses, the pleasure she extracted from her piano, and the affairs of her household, to the gayety of city life or even the less severe burden of country society.

The poet and his wife were lovers even in their own old age. Lord Tennyson was 41 when they were married, and he had known her when she was a mere child. The marriage took place on June 13, 1850. Lady Tennyson was a fine musician and spent much of her time in arranging or composing pretty bits of melody, sometimes setting the line of her husband's sentimental sonnets to the airs she wove out of her thought.

School Theatricals a Century Ago.

Miss Agnes Repplier writes a little sketch entitled "At School a Hundred years Ago" for St. Nicholas. Of one form of diversion allowed the pupils, Miss Repplier writes:

Few things more amusing than Miss Witford's "Early Recollections" have ever been told in print. We know everybody in that school as intimately as Mary Witford knew them in the year 1796. The English teacher who was so wedded to grammar and arithmetic—Mary hated to study; the French teacher whom she both loved and feared, who had a passion for neatness, and used to hang around the children's necks all their possessions found out of place, from dictionaries and sheets of music to skipping ropes and dilapidated dolls; the school girls who came from every part of England and France; above all, the school plays—"The Search After Happiness," which they were permitted to act as a great treat, because Miss Hannah More had written it. If you know nothing about "The Search After Happiness" you have no real idea how dull a play can be. Four discontented young ladies go forth to seek "Urania," whose wisdom will teach them to be happy. They meet "Florella," a virtuous shepherdess, who leads them to the grove where Urania lives. Here they are kindly received, and describe all their faults at great length to their hostess, who sends them brimful of good advice to their respective homes. Think of a lot of real school girls acting such a drama, and speaking to each other in this sedate and meritorious fashion!—

"With ever new delight we now attend
The counsels of our fond maternal friend."

Their Customs.

A lady who dines with the family of a German professor found the table customs very odd. As soon as those at the table were helped they at once cut up all that was on their plates, and then putting their knives down leaned on the table with their left hands, and with their forks disposed of the food with celerity and without interruption. At supper the hostess ground and cooked the coffee at the table, and the butter was taken with individual knives out of an earthen pot that was used in common. Cheese was served and secured in a similar manner, and was smeared over thick slices of buttered bread. When the eating was finished everybody still sat and watched the hostess wash the dishes, which she did at table, using the snowiest of napkins, without wetting her fingers, while the master puffed a cigar.

The Crook.

In some parts of Scotland it was customary to carry a newly born child three times round the iron "crook" which hangs in the middle of an old-fashioned chimney, and serves to support cooking-pots, the ceremony being supposed to insure the infant's future prosperity. To double up the chain of the "crook" at night prevents witches coming down the chimney.

The New Watch.

The new watch is to have a phonograph cylinder hidden away, and at the hour and at each quarter of an hour a tiny voice will be heard giving you the exact time. You will simply touch a spring, hold the watch to your ear, and the little fairy on the inside will whisper the hour.

MAILS IN THE EARLY DAYS.

They Moved Slowly and the Letter Postage Was Very High.

"In Washington's first term an effort was made to speed the mails—to move them at the rate of one hundred miles in twenty-four hours, or about four and a half miles an hour," writes ex-President Harrison in his "This Country of Ours" article in the Ladies' Home Journal. "This would have been a notable advance, for the carriers were then taking nearly thirty hours between Philadelphia and New York. The roads were bad and there were many slow ferries. * * * In 1776 there were only twenty-eight postoffices in the colonies; in 1795 there were 453, and in 1895 there were 70,064. The rates of postage when the department was organized under the constitution were high; for thirty miles, six cents for one letter sheet; for sixty miles, eight cents; for one hundred miles, ten cents, and so increasing with the increased distance to the maximum, twenty-five cents for distances over 450 miles. Stamps were not in use in those days, nor was the sender of a letter required to pay the postage in advance. The postage, six cents or twenty-five cents, as the case might be, was written by the postmaster on the letter, and if the sender paid the postage the word 'paid' was added; if he did not the postage was collected of the person to whom the letter was addressed. These rates soon yielded a surplus over the cost of the service, spite of the franking privilege, which the law gave to Congressmen and the heads of departments. * * * The demand of the newspapers and periodicals of every class for cheap postage, seconded by their subscribers, has led to a reduction of rates greatly below the actual cost to the Government. In his report for 1892 the Postmaster General, after stating that the present letter rate pays twice the cost of the letter mail, says that the book and newspaper mail is carried at a loss of six cents a pound. In recent years the Postoffice Department has been characterized by a very progressive spirit, and it is now rendering, not a perfect service, but a high-class service. No other department has more nearly kept pace with the marvelous development of our country."

Mal-de-Mer.

None of the "remedies" discovered for seasicknes in the past have been very effectual. Something new is now suggested. Some years ago, when crossing the Irish channel on board a passenger steamer, with a very rough sea, it occurred to Mr. Thomas Moy that, as the motions of the vessel produced seasickness, it might be possible to so utilize such motions as to prevent that disagreeable malady. The vessel has three kinds of motions, a rising and falling motion of the entire vessel, an oscillatory motion logitudinally about its center of gravity, and a transverse rolling motion. Mr. Moy treated the longitudinal motions as having a tendency to drive matter centrifugally toward the head and stern, and the rolling motions as having a similar tendency to drive matter outwards from the center of such motions.

Now for details: "The entrance to the stomach," says Mr. Moy, "is on the left side of the body, the oesophagus end, and the exit is on the right side, the pyloric orifice; and my experiment consisted in utilizing the longitudinal motions so as to keep the food in the stomach, and utilizing the rolling motions so as to assist the natural operations of the oesophagus in propelling the food toward the pyloric orifice. This I effected by selecting a couch arranged in a line with the keel, lying with my head toward the engine room, and lying upon my left side." The experiment, Mr. Moy adds, was entirely successful, and he has always adopted it in rough seas when a suitable berth could be obtained.—New York Home Journal.

Electric Fans for the Sick Room.

Such weather as Philadelphia has recently experienced while enervating enough to healthy people, is particularly prostrating to those in ill health, and some scheme of obtaining a cool draught of air in the sick room is, in many cases, a matter of great importance. Obviously one of the best ways to secure this is by means of an electric fan, but, unfortunately, an electric circuit with which to operate it is usually not available. To overcome this difficulty a Philadelphia company rents an outfit consisting of a storage battery and electric fan, which will run continuously for more than a week at a time without attention, and which may be replaced by another and the discharged battery sent back to be recharged. Though this business of renting storage batteries for such purposes is a new one, it is undoubtedly destined to wide usage in this and other directions. For instance, many people would be glad to have a fan in the dining room during this extremely oppressive weather, and this company affords a means to secure this with slight expense and no trouble.—Philadelphia Record.

"Home, Sweet Home."

John Howard Payne is not often thought of as a dramatist, but his business was that of a playwright, and as author, actor and manager he achieved quite a measure of success, Kean and Kemble taking leading parts in plays of his composition. He is now remembered only as the author of "Home, Sweet Home," a song which occurs in the libretto he wrote for an opera by Bishop, Clari, the Maid of Milan, brought out at Covent Garden, London, May 8, 1823. In the published music this number is styled "a Sicilian air," and recent investigations have shown that there is a folk-song in Sicily having some resemblance to this famous melody. With the composition of the opera Payne had nothing to do; indeed, it is said that his musical accomplishments were extremely limited.

Dinner Table Decoration.

Sheaves of white, scarlet and rose-colored gladioli set in tall silver or crystal vases in a row down the center of a long table make an effective decoration for the late summer dinner table. A big basket of the same blooms, broad but not flat, should decorate the round table.

50-Cent Farmers

While the Dispatch is talking about 50-cent dollar, suppose we have a little essay about 50-cent farms. When we came into this county in 1869, farms were worth 100 cents on a dollar and now but 50. And these farms have some of them, had their full value added in improvements. And all this under, the republican financial plan. Will farmers go on trying this plan for 27 years more? If so, how much will they have left by that time? Something is wrong. Let some republican arise and tell what it is and how to cure it.

Greenback Dollars

The Dispatch quotes what we said about all our dollars being eqally good and all as good as gold, and to contradict us says we know that soldiers were paid in depreciated greenbacks, worth only 40 cents. Certainly, we knew of this, but it is not so now. We were not foolish enough to say that republican legislation had never made a 40-cent dollar. They are the only party that ever did, or ever will. But we insist again, that now, and for many years all our dollars are of equal value, and that at present there is not a party in the field making pledges to reduce the value of a single dollar. If the Dispatch knows of such a party let it show proof that they design doing such a thing.

Failed to Come.

Frank Seiler was to have held a joint political discussion at Summit Tuesday evening, with a man from Waterloo. But that day he received a card from his opponent, saying he would not be able come. Following this came a notice from the republican trustee of the township, that he would not let them use the school house. So the debate is "off." In fact, republicans don't seem disposed to hold public debates.

—G. H. Yesbera has a change of ad which you should read sure.

OUR MEN

Those Who Have Been Chosen to Represent the Party this Fall.

The COURIER has waited under the circumstance, to say a good word for the ticket, for the ticket was certain to be changed. Now all is settled, and here they are.

E. R. SHOEMAKER.

Candidate for commissioner of the southwest district, is one of the best known farmers in the county, as well as one of the most successful. He is now retired from active work, and if elected, as we have no doubt he will be, he will be able to give his time and his excellent ability to the work of the county. He will be valuable to the people's interests.

ISAAC GUNSENHOUSER.

Candidate for commissioner in the southeast, is also a well known farmer and business man. He has been prominent in his section for many years, and careful, and will make a intelligent member of theboard. He has the people's confidence.

C. M. BROWN

For representative in the legislature is an intelligent and popular attorney, and one whoswill bring intelligence and a clear head to the duties of the office. He can be trusted to see that no bad laws get on the statute books, or if there, that they be wiped off. A vote for Brown means a vote against a millionaire senator from Indiana, and for a senator in whom the people have confidence.

DR. W. H. NUSBAUM.

For State senator, the two counties of Noble and DeKalb, selected him almost unanimously. He was the best known man in both counties that was ever put on the ticket. He is a clear headed man, with the decision of character so much needed in the Assembly, and as we said of Mr. Brown his election will be another nail in the political coffin of Millionaire Fairbanks. Indiana is one of the few states that has never been represented in the upper branch of the Assembly by a man whose sole fitness lay in the wealth he was willing to squander in corrupting a campaign. We shall set down on such candidates, by electing Nusbaum and Brown.

G. C. RALSTON.

We have had several excellent sheriffs in this county, but Coop Ralston is one of the very best, if not the best, the county ever had. It made no difference to him, what politics a man claimed, if he was a wrong doer, Mr. Ralston, camped on his trail and never relaxed his grip till the offender was safe in his charge. He attended to his duties himself, especially if there was danger. He did not wait for some one else to catch a criminal and get handcuffs on him, and then himself step in and with a blare of trumpets lead the man by the most public way to jail. Elect Coop Ralston, and you will secure thorough work about the halls of justice. The people want an officer who will earn his salary in discharging his duties rather than working taffy for votes.

HENRY HINES.

The office of treasurer needs a man of the solid and substantial character of Mr. Hines. It needs, too, a man who is well educated, enough to do the work himself. This is just what Mr. Hines can do. He is one of the best posted and intelligent men in the county. In his hands the county's money would be safe, and go where it belonged. See that he is the next treasurer.

JOHN H. KRONTZ.

Mr. Krontz is a young man of good education, good character and intelligence. He will be careful and painstaking, and there will be no cause for complaint in his difficult duties. He will follow a skilled and able engineer, and having a good example, will emulate it. We predict he will be a success and the people will be suited. Give him a good vote.

FRED. SCHULTHEISS.

This gentleman is an experienced and successful farmer, and will be a good county assessor. He knows the value of land and similar property by experience, and while there is no money in the office, there is difficult work to perform and delicate questions to be settled. Mr. Schultheiss will do it in an impartial way. No better man could be chosen.

J. W. HUGHES.

A coroner should have a medical training and knowledge. This we understand Dr. Hughes has, and that the peculiar duties of that office will be properly administered in his hands. His vote should be right up with the rest.

J. M. ROBINSON.

This gentleman needs no introduction to the people of this district. He was reared within twenty miles of Auburn, and all his life has been spent in Allen county. From a poor working boy, he has won his way by hard work and hard study to a place of honor at the bar, and now the people have called him to come up higher, for a seat in congress is waiting for him. The common people know Mr. Robinson, and are proud to call him to to higher honors. We predict his triumphant election.

DR. NORMAN TEAL.

Here again is no stranger. He represented these same three counties of DeKalb, Noble and Elkhart once before and made a splendid record as a legislator. He not only stood for the best interests of his people, but more than once, helped to block vicious or imprudent legislation. He will be valuable. Push him along with a good majority.

BRYAN SPEECHES.

The following are some of the dates and places for political speaking in the interest of Bryan and free silver, as arranged by Geo. Lanning, who has charge of this matter for the county, and is giving us a series of the best speakers we ever had.

Hon. Cal Husselman and Hon. D. D. Moody will address the people at Big Run school house near Butler, Thursday evening, Oct. 1, at 7:30.

Hon S. S. S. Shutt will speak to the voters at the Wartenbee school house, near the Webster bridge, Friday evening, Oct. 2, at 7:30.

Solomon Harding will address the people at Wilmington Center Oct. 2, in the evening.

Hon. Walpole Colerick, Fort Wayne, will address the democrats of Auburn and DeKalb county, at Auburn on Thursday Oct. 1 See bills for further particulars.

Attorney's C. M. Brown and D. D. Moody at Altona, Sept 24.

S. S. Shutt at Fairfield Center, September 25.

J. M. Robinson at Cedar Creek, September 25.

Dr. Nusbaum, S. S. Shutt and D. D. Moody at Collingwood, Sept. 26.

H. D. Boozer and J. Y. W. McClellan at Neidig school house, Oct. 1.

D. D. Moody and C. M. Brown at Dutch Gap, Sept. 25.

S. S. Bartlett and S. S. Shutt at Comesky's school house, Jackson township, Oct. 3.

Good speakers at Newville Center, Oct. 5.

John Baxter at Mooresville, Sept. 28.

S. S. Bartlett, O. S. Davison, I. Gunsenhouser and S. S. Shutt at Mooresville at 2 p. m. Oct. 17. Two good bands in attendance.

Certainly Have

Have you heard from Maine? says a republican dodger that was distributed yesterday. Certainly we have. And these later corrected reports show that 52,000 majority cut down to 46,000. And under the circumstances any republican majority in Maine of less than 50,000 is a democratic victory. It should have been 60,000 under the circumstances.

Wit and Wisdom.

Rev. S. S. Bartlett delivered a most able and eloquent address to the Bryan Club last evening. And what made him doubly popular, was his genuine wit, which seemed to bubble up from somewhere, whether he wished it or not. He kept his hearers, first deeply interested, then hugely tickled. And it was all done in a way so friendly that none could find fault. He is well versed in what he discusses, and having been a life-long republican, and a warm friend of Garfield and McKinley, he is able to quote fully from their opinions on gold and silver, showing that they and the party were for a full use of both, just as the speaker is now. He says free silver is the regular old fashioned republican doctrine and proves what he says. No better speaker has been here this campaign.

McKinley's Plan.

McKinley's plan to make the country prosperous is:

1. To continue the single gold standard of money, which has produced disaster.

2. To make tariff taxes higher which when his law was in force, made things we buy higher for us.

3. To secure a one-sided "reciprocity" with a few small nations, with whom he got us to try it once, and we lost in the rate our exports had been increasing from 40 per cent, to 23 per cent in four years. Our imports would have fallen off as much also, had his law not let in Cubay's sugar free of duty. This increased the value of imports, but lost us 58 millions a year receipts from import duties on the sugar.

So we see all three of his pet ideas have been costly failures to the people. Now he asks them to make him president so he can do it again.

The Schaab Brothers Have Completed the Extensive Improvements

It is always a pleasure to note solid improvements in our town or its business for with the upbuilding of these interests and the prosperity of our business men, all the interests of the community keep pace.

The COURIER has several times spoken in a brief way, of the extensive improvements going on at the already large establishment of Schaab Brothers. These are now completed and mainly occupied by the lines of goods as intended in the permanent arrangement. A brief description will give one a better idea.

At the front, the main entrance is now at the north side, while extending south and covering the entire remainder of the front, is the large plate glass show window. We believe this is the largest window for a single room any where in this section. This gives them ample chance to make large displays and will save room inside of this space for other business. The hosiery department is next to this show space and faces the interior of the room, and will have in front of it a set of new and improved show cases. Going along the main room of this first floor, we find the goods are arranged, and placed in the most convenient manner for easy handling and showing. Going further west we come to the recent addition by which a floor area of 1,386 square feet has been added to the room. This is in three floors. The ceiling above the first floor, is of beautiful figured steel and shows lovely in the electric lights at night. This floor in the new part is the cloak department which is now stored with new and seasonable goods. There is a large triplicate mirror that will prove convenient for ladies who can see in it how every portion of the cloak fits. This is a new feature in this section as far as we know. At the rear, a grate will furnish warmth in that end of the building, and above it a large skylight gives abundant light to all three of the floors.

On the second floor is the department for clothing, hats, caps, etc. giving an area for these lines, of twice what they had before. Here also are large mirrors, duplicates, which will also prove valuable to customers. The goods show off well, being arranged in neat and orderly manner and with abundant light.

Passing to the third floor, we find the carpet department. This begins at the front end of the building and extends back two thirds of its length. And here are the carpets, curtains, portiers, etc., including many pieces of lovely goods. The west one third of this floor will be a store room in which will be kept curtain poles and similar things for this and the other departments.

Altogether, with its systematic arrangement of every line of goods, its greatly increased room and other conveniences, Schaab Brothers have now the largest single room establishment in this part of the country. They have put a good deal of money into these improvements and a good deal of care and study and we feel that the purchasing public should appreciate it. We look to see their busines not only keep up to its former proportions but greatly increase. Call in and see the big new store and its big stock of goods, the largest by far, they have ever shown.

P. P.

"Pro Patria" is quite a windy writer in the Dispatch. He can tell us a good deal about the financial questions in Japan, China, Central America, France and Great Britain, but so far has shown little evidence of knowledge of the living questions of our own country. He should hurry and get through this lot of foreign and ancient history. There are lots of live issues to be settled here and now.

No Good

The populists complain, and justly, of the abuse and unmerited criticism of the Clipper. We wish to say, that sheet does not represent the democracy, and is not recognized as democratic authority, by our leaders. We do not know what pay the Clipper gets for taking this course, but there is evidently something in it they care more than party harmony and success.

Hard Times.

Something is wrong where a country like ours, suffers from "hard times." We have the best land the sun shines on, and the most intelligent, industrious and economical farmers. We have the best and most cheaply secured mineral wealth in the world, and the best system of working our mines of metals and coals. We have the cheapest raw materials to work up into manufactured articles and the most ingenious and skillful workmen, as well as the most able inventive genius. And so on through all the long list of advantages, both natural and acquired. And yet with all these advantages we are continually suffering hard times Something is wrong. We have abundant crops, but they have to be kept year after year and then sold at a loss. We have millions on millions in manufactured goods of all kinds, lying unsold in our factories or salesrooms. We have millions of idle men who would gladly work, and many more whom enforced idleness has made tramps. Something is wrong. We have been going downhill steadily for thirty years We have the finest shiptimber and the best sailors in the world. Yet shipbuilding and ocean commerce, that should give employment to a million of idle men, are almost lost arts. Something is wrong. What is it?

If it is not the system of "protection" that enables a few to get all the benefit of class legislation, then what is it? If this putting the bulk of the money into the hands of the few, does not leave the many, with little or no money, then what is it?

If it is not a long continued partrality in the treatment of the two great money metals of the world, then what is it? If petting up one money metal and causing it to rise in value, while legislating against the other and causing it to depreciate, is not one of the causes of these financial troubles. then what is it? Something is wrong. If it is not the things we have mentioned, then what is it? Let us hear from someone that knows. All the adverse conditions we have named have been brought about by republican legislation of the last thirty years. Yet every four years, they come to the voters of the country and ask to be continued in power so that they may be certain to have this state of things continue. How long will intelligent people continue to be cheated and wronged and led to lower depths of "hard times" by promises that thave proved false without exception for so many years? Will the voters be fooled again? If they are, who shall say they do not deserve "hard times?"

Outdoor Bees.

Eli. Shull, who lives near Sugar Grove school house southwest of the Junction reports a swarm of his bees, now hanging in an apple tree, where they have made quite a lot of comb, which now contains yong bees as well as honey. He has over twenty other swarms, all doing well, but thinks this one must have got away from the parent hive unobserved, and has been there evidently for some time. The swarm will probably perish when cold weather comes.

A Rare Chance.

Instead of going to a lot of useless expense in giving a formal opening, F. J. Yesbera will on Oct. 1, give everybody a chance to get goods at wholesale. He has made arrangements with a large wholesale house in the east to send a man with trunks filled with Diamonds, Watches and Jewerly, and this man will be here Oct. 1, and will sell at wholesale for Cash Only. Remember this is a rare chance. Don't miss it. At Yesbera's New Jewerly Store.

Cloth Thieves.

That is what they are. Two men staid in town over Sunday, and started early on Monday morning for the country. They are called cloth thieves, by many, for their methods are little better than theft. They go among farm- and sell them large bills of cloth and their notes. These notes they sell at whatever they can get for them, and the farmer has it to pay. The cloth seems to the buyer to be well worth the price. But when he brings it to the tailor to be made up, he learns it is the rottenest of shoddy. And even if it were good cloth, he pays more than it is worth, and by the time he pays a tailor to make it up, it costs about twice as much as if he would go to one of our dealers and get a suit made, or buy one ready made. This is easily proved. Go to Schaab & Murphy, to Schaab Brothers, to G. H. Yesbera, to Peter Young, to J. H. Gugerli, to E. C. Sheets, or any other dealer in Auburn, or in Waterloo, Garrett, Butler or St. Joe, and you can find this out in two minutes. We say to every one, Deal at home, with men you know, and not with traveling fakirs, no matter what they have to sell or how plausible a story they tell you. An honest, reliable dealer has a location, is known, and does not go traveling over the country selling to those only who do not know him.

—The revival at the Junction is still increasing in interest. Some notable converts have been secured, and the prospects are good for an extended ingathering. The Auburn people are beginning to go down and catch the fire. Presiding Elder Simpson will preach there tonight. Let all christian people join in the good work.

—At about eleven oclock last night the COURIER reporter was awakened by the ringing of the telephone bell. We responded to the call and could hear nothing but excellent music on the violin by some expert manipulater of the stringed instrument. It was certainly a rare treat to listen to such music through the telephone. It could be heard very distinctly, even to the tuning of the violin.

—While at Jackson this week we heard two republican speeches by the best talent, the state affords, namely United States Senator, Mr. Burrows, who spoke at the opera house Tuesday night and Delegate to the St. Louis convention Mr. Smith of Adrian, at Rives Junction on Monday night. Both speakers, however learned their speech from the same books, as all they said in reference to the money question including illustrations were exactly the same words. The republicans are in quite a predicament up there as the candidate for Register of deeds on the Democratic ticket is a free silver Republican. One of the chief points the speakers make is ridiculing the Democrats.

—S. S. Potter and wife and J. C. Lochner and wife returned last evening from a few days visit with Nelson Napier and family near Jackson, Mich. Mr. Napier for many years was a conductor on the Michigan Central railroad but about seven years ago bought a farm seven miles north of Jackson. The farmers in that locality are all prosperous and have everything that one could wish for. The soil is very rich, being a sandy gravel, stones are so plenty that in various place fences are built of stone. While Mr. Napier was a railroader he resided in Jackson and is thoroughly familiar with every part of the city and surrounding country. In company with him and his wife we visited the State Prison, Jaxon Soap Works, Public Library Hall. K. of P. Hall, Postoffice, numerous factories, County Infirmary and also the towns of Leslie and Rives Junction, Mich. The prison is conducted in a strictly first-class manner. The prisoners wear the regulation grey clothing, and are only given stripes when they are first brought there or when they have become saucy or mean. Their manufacturing department sare numerous and extensive. From a sanitary point this prison has no equal. The JaXon soap factory is a marvelous sight, Perhaps there are but few ladies in Auburn who have not used JaXon Soap, and to see just how it is made from start to finish is truly a sight. The job printing department of this factory alone is the largest in Jackson. One cylinder and five job presses are kept busy all the time. The Public Library, K. of P. hall and Postoffice are buildings which the city can truly be proud of. The K. of P. hall especially deserves mention, the main room is very large, and off of this are the reception and dining rooms, the kitchen, pantry and cloak rooms. The furnishings are simply grand. They are the best that money could buy. There is scarcely a night that the hall is not in use for receptions of various kinds. It is also a permanent meeting place for the A. O. U. W. and Degree of Honor lodges. The County Infirmary about four miles out of the city is another fine building. It is of brick and a very beautiful structure and one in which the unfortunate are certainly comfortably cared for. The building is heated by steam and has water for use in case of fire and other purposes, in various parts of the large building. Jackson county certainly has public buildings far above the ordinary. The jail is a new structure and is very convenient and centrally located. The week's rest from labor incident to newpaper work has been greatly enjoyed and the beautiful rolling land of Michigan with all her natural scenery and the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Napier and family will long be remembered.

—Someone drove a team sledlength over the new crossing by the M. E. church Saturday evening. They went stambang over the pile of barrels, stones, dirt, etc, and the walk was bruised up a little but neither men nor team were injured as far as we have learned.

The little child of Mrs. Laura Dilgard got a hold of a box of pills yesterday and ate a number of them. Among other things they contained was strychnine and for a time it was thought the child was in danger. Dr Buchtel was called and soon relieved the child of much suffering. People are too careless. They should not leave things sit around in reach of children.

—Gen. Blair and wife of Waterloo and his daughter Mrs. Ida Daniels and her little daughter were in town yesterday, guests in the editors family. Mrs. Daniels will return about a week to her home in Fairmont, Minn. She goes to Newville and Concord this week to visit her relatives and will stop at Laporte a day or so to visit her brother Frank and family.

—The Junction revival meetings will continue every night this week. Presiding Elder Simpson preached and administered the communion yesterday afternoon and pastor Walts received seven into the church. In the evening brother Meese conducted services and had seekers at the altar. Members of the Epworth League will go down this evening to assist Revs. Walts and Meese. Everybody is invited.

—Those republicans who are telling around that the COURIER publishes falshoods, are making foolish talk. If we publish a falsehood, we would like to know it. It is not our intention to do so. Dont stand around in the streets making such wild assertions. Get your proof and come right up and show it to us.

—The Grube-Kutzner family reunion will be held at the home of Uncle John Grube a few miles south of the city next Thursday. Last year the reunion was held at Isaac Brandon's just north of town. The occasion will be one in which the fathers, mothers, children and grandchildren will meet and enjoy the big dinner as well as a visit.

Friday's Daily.

Last evening was the appointed hour when Editor Higley was to show his power. No rhyme intended. He was to speak to the McKinley club in this place. And so he did. He had the documents right along with him to prove that times had continually grown better, and farms had kept up in value every since the republican party came into power with its gold ideas. Then there was the tariff, that made the farmer pay higher for all he bought, and did not protect him in the least. He was prepared to prove that the higher a thing was taxed the better it was for the people. The blessings of a tax gold and was made prominent. And then the audience fell asleep. Chris Shaffer says it was like an old-time church revival, when guilty sinners hang their heads in terror of impending doom.

The bishop of North Dakota's idea of a cathedral car is being adopted in unexpected quarters. Four such cars for purposes of evangelization are now used by the Baptist denomination in this country. The trans-Siberian railway, also, which crosses the most dreary regions of the Caucasus for 1,500 miles, has five such cars on its line. Each car carries two priests, who celebrate the holy sacrament daily in the villages through which the road passes.

It consists in dissolving in naphtha the heavy oils and waxes left after the distillation of petroleum, and forcing the solution into the seasoned timber in the same manner as in creosoting. The timber is then heated, when the naphtha evaporates and is recovered in a cooling chamber, while the waxes, etc., remain behind in the wood, waterproofing it.

The biggest rope ever used for haulage purposes has just been made for a district subway in Glasgow, Scotland. It is seven miles long, four and one-half inches in circumference and weighs nearly sixty tons. It has been made in one unjointed and unspliced length of patent crucible steel. When in place it will form a complete circle around Glasgow, crossing the Clyde in its course, and will run at a speed of fifteen miles an hour.

That now almost obsolete musical instrument, the lute, is about to be revived in Italy, a society being in process of formation in Florence for the purpose of encouraging an appreciation of it. This will be known as the Societa del Luito, and its inauguration will be celebrated by a grand concert, in which several leading Italian musicians will take part, including Signor Mascagni, who is, moreover, composing a new piece for the occasion, entitled "The Apotheosis of the Lute."

According to Chambers' Journal, Egypt is at present the most active and aggressive competitor in the onion trade. The trade with Egypt for onions is now so important that four lines of steamers are engaged in the traffic, bringing consignments from Alexandria to Liverpool, Hull and London. The Egyptian onion is a handsome and useful vegetable, and by selecting the best strains of seed the quality tends, year by year, to improve. So excellent in quality are these onions that efforts are, it is said, being made in other countries to raise onions from Egyptian seed.

Persons who think that the humorists do violence to the facts when they poke fun at the western affection for whiskers should write for particulars to Cynthiana, Ky., where the fashion of going clean shaven has recently made progress. Parting with the mustache is something the community has been unable to forgive, and complaints abound there about the plain lip, the furrowed lip, the long lip, the short lip, the broad lip, the narrow lip, the oleaginous lip and even the "harelip, cowslip, tulip and the rosette"—whatever that may be—which obtrude themselves on an unprotected people.

An epigrammatic correspondent hits off some of the chief watering places in the following fashion: "When you go to Newport you take letters of introduction, when you go to Long Branch you take clothes and when you come to Saratoga you bring your appetite. For this is first and last a place to eat. We disguise the fact by a thousand ingenious circumstances; we pretend to drive in the afternoon, we pretend to play cards in the evening, but what we really do is to drink digestive waters and appetizing cocktails and when we are not eating we think of what we have eaten and what we are going to eat."

A Chinese Military Inquiry.

During the late war between China and Japan we heard often of wonderful acts of bravery performed by the Japanese, but tales of Chinese bravery were few and far between. The following story, however, which appears to be told by an eye witness, is enough to show that the Chinese had at least one officer who was no coward.

The deposed viceroy, Li Hung Chang, and the committee appointed by the Government to investigate the reasons of defeat at the battle of Port Arthur, met in the city of Pekin on Sept. 28. Among the charges was one of "poor gunnery" brought against Capt. Le Chen Fue, who had commanded the Yen Tse Chang, one of the largest battle ships that escaped from the action without great damage. After Li Hung Chang had read the charges in full, the accused captain rose and requested that a dozen shells be brought from his vessel. This was done, and the shells were brought in and set in a row before the committee.

Le Chen Fue then stepped forward, and drawing his sword, said, "Can you wonder that we were defeated when our shells were like these?"

As he spoke, and before any one could stop him, he raised his sword and brought it down on the shell in front of him. The shell was split in two, and sawdust and red brick dust flew all about. Then, in rapid succession, he struck shell after shell. Nobody moved, we were so surprised and frightened. I remembered thinking that if the last one proved a good one there would be none of us left to tell the tale; but no, that was like all the others—a sham. As he finished, Le chen Fue laid his sword at the feet of Li Hung Chang, and as soon as that statesman could speak he dismissed the charges.—Youth's Companion.

The First Sewing Machine.

The idea of sewing by machinery dated far back before the days of Elias Howe. In 1790 Thomas Saint took out a patent in England for a machine that would sew, while similar inventions are ascribed to Duncan, a Scotchman, in 1804; to Adams & Dodge, Americans, in 1818; to Thimonnier, a Frenchman, in 1830. It is said that Walter Hunt, of New York, invented in 1834 a machine that made a lockstitch, but did not apply for a patent until 1854, when he found his invention was covered by the Howe patent, issued in 1846. The claims of the latter to originality have often been disputed, though never with success, but so numerous have been the improvements since Howe's device was patented that a sewing machine of the present bears little resemblance to the one of which he was the creator.

THE HOLD-UPS AND THEIR FATE—WHO WILL TACKLE HIM NEXT?

REVOLT OF PLUTOCRACY.

No single issue ever raised in the history of American politics exceeds in importance that of opening our mints and redeeming our currency from the control of those foreign and domestic corporations which seek to inflict on us as a permanent system their usurpation of the sovereign power of issuing and regulating the circulating medium. The only single evil greater than corporation control of the taxing power is this of corporation control of the currency. It is greater because when the people are robbed, whether by direct or indirect taxation, the results quickly appear. But when the robbery is carried on through contraction of cash and the inflation of corporation credit paper, they are brought to bankruptcy before realizing the cause.

But great as is this issue, it is only an incident of the present campaign. The higher and broader issue which has been forced is between the millionaires of the country and the American people. The entire Plutocracy is in revolt against our system of popular constitutional government. So menacing a movement of class against people has never occurred before in our history—not even when the same class under the leadership of the Biddles of the United States Bank captured the administration of John Quincy Adams and so intrenched themselves in control of the government that they looked with contempt on the attempt made by the people under Jackson's leadership to dislodge them and restore popular government. John Quincy Adams had been elected as a Democrat, but he abandoned the party, repudiated the principles to which it had pledged his administration and endeavored to revive the Federalistic party whose fundamental maxim, as defined by Daniel Webster himself, was that all stable and orderly government must be based on property. As the fundamental tenet of Democracy is that all just government must be based on manhood right and on the consent of the governed, the masses of the Democratic party felt the same hot resentment against the Adams administration which they now feel when they see Federal officeholders controlling the action of conventions called at the instance of Mr. Whitney of the Standard Oil Co. and Mr. Belmont, American agent of the Rothschild banks.

Andrew Jackson but voiced this just resentment of the masses when in his inaugural address he declared that it was the right of the people to eject from office those officials who had used office in an attempt to dictate the result of elections. It was because the people had seen Federal offices used to control State Legislatures, to dictate nominations, to interfere at the polls, that Jackson denounced life-tenure in office as foreign to the spirit of America and declared that whatever the evils of change, they were less than those of the permanent tenure which breeds in the office-holder the spirit of insolence and of despotism. He was again the exponent and champion of the masses when he followed his attack on Federal bureaucracy with a determined assault on the National bank and its control of the Treasury and of Congress. For this he was denounced in New York City and Boston as no other American President had ever been denounced before. But he did not swerve. With a supreme confidence in the people and in his own integrity, he forced the fighting, keeping the aggressive always and not stopping to defend himself, until overwhelming victory showed that no man who really represents the cause of popular freedom need fear to appeal to the masses for support of the principles on which their freedom and progress depend.

On the issue as it was then presented, appeal has once more been made to the people. The plutocracy has once more usurped control of the government. Democracy has once more been betrayed. Once more the millionaires of the country are in the field openly asserting that property has a divine right to rule manhood and that it is treason to deny it. They have drawn their lines of class and caste and drawn them hard. Those of them who once called themselves Democrats do so no longer. They call the Democracy of Jefferson and Jackson, as they do the Republicanism of Lincoln, an evil thing. They say that the rule of the people is anarchy and they threaten the country with the worst they can do against it unless they are allowed to name the next President and put Messrs. Hanna and Morgan, Whitney and Belmont in control at Washington as their agents. But they cannot win. There is not money—there are not rifles and cannon enough in America or in the world to impose plutocracy on America as a permanent condition. Against plutocracy and class government the Democratic party has made its "appeal to Caesar!" And in America there is no king but Caesar and no Caesar but the people.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

TRUTHS THAT LIVE.

Epigrams Culled from Bryan's Great Speech.

"Truth will vindicate itself; only error fears free speech."

"Between bimetallism and the gold standard there is an impassable gulf."

"We do not propose to transfer the rewards of industry to the lap of indolence."

"The well-being of the nation—aye, civilization itself—depends upon the prosperity of the masses."

"We would not invade the home of the provident in order to supply the wants of the spendthrift."

"Vicious legislation must be remedied by the people who suffer from it, and not by those who enjoy its benefits."

"Those who daily follow the injunction, 'In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread,' are the bulwark of law and order."

"So long as the scramble for gold continues prices must fall, and a general fall in prices is but another definition of hard times."

"The people who in 1776 rejected the doctrine that kings rule by right divine will not subscribe to a doctrine that money is omnipotent."

"No public official who conscientiously discharges his duty will desire to deny to those whom he serves the right to discuss his official conduct."

"They (the people of the West) invite you to accept the principles of a living faith rather than listen to those who preach the gospel of despair."

"No government is worthy of the name which is not able to protect from every arm uplifted for his injury the humblest citizen who lives beneath the flag."

"Salaries in business occupations depend upon business conditions, and the gold standard both lessens the amount and threatens the permanency of such salaries."

"A law which collects from some citizens more than their share of the taxes, and collects from other citizens less than their share, is simply an indirect means of transferring one man's property to another man's pocket."

"Prices can be lowered as effectually by decreasing the demand for an article as by increasing the supply of it, and it seems certain that the fall in the gold price of silver is due to hostile legislation and not to natural laws."

"Whenever it is necessary for the people as a whole to obtain consent from the owners of money and the changers of money before they can legislate upon financial questions, we shall have passed from a democracy to a plutocracy."

"In a government like ours every public official is a public servant, whether he holds office by election or by appointment, whether he serves for a term of years or during good behavior, and the people have a right to criticise his official acts."

Bad Newsfor Hanna.

Rainbow chasing seems to be a sport to which the Republican campaign managers are very much devoted this year, and if Mark Hanna is not careful he will get a reputation in that line which will eclipse even the best performances of the past in national politics. Here he has been calculating on a seventy-five thousand majority for McKinley in Iowa, and now comes forward the chairman of the Republican State Committee there with the statement that if the election were held tomorrow the chances are that Bryan would have a majority.

Iowa is one of the States which has ordinarily been so strongly Republican in Presidential years that the growth of free silver sentiment was regarded as an intrusion by the railroad corporations who have been particularly active in politics there. When they heard of it they notified their employes without delay that the election of Bryan would mean a reduction in pay and a possible loss of their situations. It was as barefaced a case of bulldozing as has ever been attempted in an American election, and it has naturally acted as a boomerang, as such tactics always will do when applied to men who are intelligent enough to value their rights as citizens.

Iowa reflects the sentiment of Indiana, Illinois, Minnesota, Wisconsin and the neighboring States generally, and without these the election of McKinley is absolutely hopeless. It is not surprising, therefore, that the canvass which the Republicans have made there is a startling revelation to them. It means that—unless they can perform wonders between now and November—their cause is lost, for with all the bluster that Hanna and Quay are indulging in they have no hope of breaking the solid South since the Arkansas returns have come in.—New York News.

Voting on Railroad Trains.

The railroad car voting has begun. Our Republican contemporaries are beginning to keep up the courage of their fellow partisans by printing reports that on such and such a train a vote of the passengers was taken, where McKinley had forty votes and Bryan four—or figures to that effect. This thing will be repeated daily from now until election. It will only deceive those who are desirous to be deceived.

All the world knows that the supporters of Bryan are plain people, staying at home, or working in stores, factories, works or employments for their bread and butter. The people who are flying about the country on railroad trains and casting the McKinley votes are of the classes who can be found abroad.

It has not happened often in this country that a campaign for the Presidency has involved questions dividing one class from another—in fact, we have not known of classes at all in our political contests. But now we have a class issue forced upon us by the remorseless gold standard advocates. It is not the wage-earning class that has raised that issue; it is the idle and comfortable class. It is not at all wonderful that the traveling members of "the better element" should be giving McKinley a majority in these car elections. It will be otherwise at the polls, when the stay-at-homes leave home and workshop long enough to deposit real ballots on election day.—New York News.

Bryan in the Campaign.

The Republicans have about given up sneering at "the boy orator." The best of them have admitted that he never repeats himself, and that all his speeches are readable. There are plenty of men who produce a magnificent impression on the stump whose speeches do not read well at all. Bryan is not one of them. There are other plenty who can write a superior argument, but whose delivery of it would disperse a crowd quicker than a rainstorm. Bryan is not one of these. Not even rain keeps people from thronging to hear him.

It is because the bimetallists are reading Bryan's speeches daily that they believe in the victory of Bryan. It is because they believe that the people of the great States east of the Mississippi are reading Bryan daily that they think those States will go for Bryan. It is conclusive logic: If you read Bryan's speeches you have to vote for Bryan—you cannot help yourself.

Bryan's speech at Chicago has been read since then everywhere. Addressed especially to laborers, and heard by as many thousands of laborers as could crowd themselves within hearing, it is being read not only by laborers, but by every other class of citizens. Not many men could stand such a severe test of capacity as Bryan is undergoing. The man who can stand it is fit to be President of the United States. And he will be.

Prince Bismarck is to have another statue. This time it is at Leipsic. The city has commissioned Sculptor Lehnert to execute it, and the municipality has selected a site near the park.

A STONE FROM THE CHINESE WALL OF PROTECTION.

DINED WITH THE CZAR.

Honors Showered Upon Joseph Francis, Inventor of Life-Boat.

In 1855 Mr. Francis went to Europe. He introduced his inventions at many courts. He remained abroad about twelve years, and made many warm friends in many lands by his modest, unassuming frankness and his habitual courtesy. And he received great honors at the courts of kings.

I shall not soon forget the stories he told of the events witnessed in these European capitals; they were all so interesting, and he was so wholly frank and natural in their narration. He was long at the court of the Czar, a sovereign who was deeply interested in the work of the inventor. When Mr. Francis went to Europe he had letters of introduction from many prominent Americans. In St. Petersburg he called upon the American minister. Here, as he told me, laughingly, he forgot all about his letters of introduction, one of which was from the President of the United States and another from the Secretary of State, and merely told some of the officials connected with the American Legation that he wished to meet the Czar.

"What!" the official ejaculated in amazement. "Meet the Czar? Impossible, man! Do you realize what you are asking—an introduction to the Czar of Russia? Why, it would take you a month to get an introduction to the Grand Duke, to say nothing about getting into the presence of the Czar!"

Mr. Francis went away, and, with true American independence, called at the palace of the Grand Duke. He sent in his plain visiting or business card. He had not long to wait. The attendant ushered him into a magnificent salon in the ducal palace. "From the further side of the splendid room," said the old gentleman to me as he related the story, his eyes glowing with the recollection of the triumph of the hour, "appeared the Grand Duke Constantine, one of America's truest friends; and, both of his hands outstretched, he took both of mine in his as he reached me."

The Grand Duke asked what he could do for Mr. Francis, the man of whom they had heard so much, whose life-saving service was even then of such value to Russia's sea-coast, and whose inventions promised so much for Russia—what could they do? Mr. Francis said that he would like to meet the Czar.

Certainly; the Grand Duke would make an appointment with him to dine in a day or two with the Czar at the palace.

And this was his introduction to Alexander II., a ruler who never forgot this gentle, modest American, and who through long years owned him as a cherished friend.

A day or two afterward Mr. Francis strolled into the office of the American Legation. I doubt not there was a merry twinkle in his eye, for no man loved a quiet joke better than he did.

The official to whom Mr. Francis had expressed his desire to meet the Czar spoke up jokingly: "Well, how are you coming on in your efforts to meet the Czar?"

"I have seen him."

"What!" with doubt in face and voice, "you have seen the Czar? How did you see him, pray tell?"

"I dined with him yesterday," was the simple answer.

And it was not the last time he was entertained at the imperial palace.—St. Nicholas.

Girl Life in a Mill-Town.

When Ellen was ten years old, she was badly burned in the legs by an accident with a lamp, and she has never walked since.

I asked her if she ever went outdoors.

"Oh, no," she said pleasantly. "Sometimes, when it's very hot, I get downstairs to the back door. I've never been down street. I've never seen the town. I wish I could see what Main street is like. I was only ten years old when I was burned, and I'd hardly ever been down street before that time."

I asked her if she could go to drive if I came for her with a carriage.

"I haven't any clothes of my own," she said, "but I could wear my sister's things."

The mother showed no especial interest when I told her that I was coming to take her crippled daughter out. When she was all dressed for her little journey, the driver took her in his arms and placed her in the open phaeton.

It was a shabby little town through which we drove, but in it Ellen saw the kingdoms of this world and the glory thereof.

"I don't know how to thank you for your kindness," she said gently, as she found we were finally returning to the tenement house which she called her home.

It seemed cruel to take her back. The driver lifted her with added tenderness out of the carriage, and insisted on carrying her up the outer steps into the house.

Ellen called out good-by and waved a timid farewell from the stairs, and I scarcely noted the mother's face or voice, for the girl's eyes were shining as I think I never saw any other human eyes shine.—Lillie B. Chace Wyman, in the Atlantic.

Lights at Sea.

A commission appointed by the German Government to study the visibility of lights at sea has concluded that a white light of one candle power is visible at a distance of 2,800 yards on a clear night, and at a distance of one mile only on a rainy night. It was further found that when a white light of one candle power was visible at a distance of one mile, one of three candle power was visible at two miles, of ten candle power at four miles, and of nineteen candle power at five miles. A green light of one candle power is visible at .8 of a mile, and the lighting powers of such lights to be seen at distances of one, two, three and four miles, must be two, fifteen, fifty-one, and 106 candle power respectively. The best glass is a clear blue green, while for the red light a copper red is the best.

A WOMAN'S STORY.

It Should be of Interest to Every Thinking Woman.

Women who reason well know that no male physician can understandingly treat the complaint known as "female diseases," for no man ever experienced them.

This, Lydia E. Pinkham taught them twenty years ago, when she discovered in her Vegetable Compound the only successful cure for all those ailments peculiar to the sex. Many women have a fatal faith in their physician, and not till they can suffer no longer, will they think and act for themselves.

The following testimony is straight to the point, and represents the experience of hundreds of thousands of now grateful women: "For six years I was a great sufferer from those internal weaknesses so prevalent among our sex. After having received treatment from four physicians of our city, and finding no relief whatever, I concluded to try Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it has proved a boon to me. It can truly be called a "Saviour of Women."—MRS. B. A. PERHAM, Waynesboro, Pa.

THE ANGEL OF EVENTIDE.

Thou who dost cover all the land
In silence with thy soul of rest;
Hushing with soft and tender hand
Dark swaying pine and twittering nest;
From thy fair, placid, saffron skies
Come gently down with healing flight
And seal with sleep woe's weary eyes
Throughout the watches of the night!

Thou upon whom thy pinions fair
Doth bear the sounds of vesper bells
Upon the holy twilight air,
O'er breezy downs and flowery dells;
Amidst the loud-tongued, brazen psalm
And silvery songs that sweetly roll
Bring thou heaven's healing, perfect calm
To every stricken, weary soul!

Thou who upon the quiet graves
Dost calmly spread thy mantle gray;
Bedew the grass which o'er them waves
When kith and kin are far away.
Kiss those who, in the gloom of death,
Through all night's dreary watches weep;
And whisper with thy healing breath,
"He giveth his beloved sleep!"

Thou who in far-back Hebrew days
Didst smile on Bethlehem's harvest gold
When fair Ruth stood, with wistful gaze
Between the new life and the old,
Deep yearning for the nobler part
Beneath the holy, sapphire skies;
Smile chastely on each maiden's heart,
And fix on Truth her eager eyes!

Thou who on star-crowned Olivet
Didst leave him in the waning light
Reluctant oft, his fair locks wet
With the cold dews of falling night;
Who oft didst light with kindly sky
His way to sacred Bethany;
Have pity on the weary's sigh,
And lift each lone one's misery!

Thou who, with mystic, tender charm,
Didst bring all weary ones to rest—
The folded lambs safe home from harm,
The babe close to its mother's breast,
The swallows to the sheltering eaves,
The lark down to his grassy sod;
Make sweet our dreams which Fancy weaves,
And leave us in the love of God!

A FUNNY WORLD.

Vernon and I were sitting in the club. It was late. The last 'bus had rolled home and Piccadilly was almost deserted save for an occasional cab that drove by with a flash of lamps and tinkling of bells.

Vernon lit another cigar and puffed away in silence.

"What you were saying just now about a short life and a jolly one," he said at last, "set me thinking about poor old Jim Barham. He was awfully like you in many ways. You remember him, don't you?"

I shook my head.

"Ah, he was before your time," said Vernon, settling himself more comfortably in his chair. "He was one of the best chaps that ever lived. I only wish to heaven he were here now. I tell you what, old boy, we'll have another drink and I'll tell you his story; it's a queer one. Waiter!"

When the waiter had put down the drinks and left the room Vernon began:

"Well, to begin with," he said, "I must tell you that Jim Barham, when I first met him (which, by the way, was up at Oxford), was looked upon as the luckiest young fellow going. He was good looking, strong as a horse, and his father was one of the richest men in England. The old man had made a devil of a lot of money in trade—I forget what sort—and Jim was his only son. He and I were great pals at the varsity, though, of course, I—being on a comparatively small allowance—couldn't keep quite up with his way of living. Well, to cut part of a long story short, one day the old man went broke. God knows what broke him—speculation of some sort, I suppose; anyhow, he failed for all he was worth and Jim was left an absolute beggar. As soon as he heard the news Jim left Oxford, and I only saw him for a few minutes at the station, when he cried like a child. My time at the varsity was over at the end of the term, and Jim promised to come and stop with me at my people's in Norfolk. I never saw him again in two years."

Vernon stopped to knock the ash off his cigar.

"Go on," I said impatiently, for I was getting interested.

"I tried all I could to find out his whereabouts," Vernon went on, "but all to no purpose. No one knew where he was or where he had gone to. At last, after two years, I met him again. It was at a little Bohemian restaurant in Soho, one of these places where they feed you for practically nothing. I had gone there out of pure curiosity, and the first person I saw in the place was Jim. He didn't seem anything like as pleased to see me as I was to see him, and it was some time before I could get him to tell me what he was doing. When he did, his story was a sad one. His poor old father had died soon after the failure and left Jim absolutely penniless and alone in the world. No one would stir a finger to help him, and he, who had never done a stroke of real work in his life, had to look out for some way of earning a living. He came to London, starved for nearly a year, and at last managed to get a job as 'super' in some theater or other. That was, he told me, what he was doing then. His clothes were old and dirty, he hadn't shaved for a week, and there were great dark lines under his eyes that told a thousand tales. I begged him to let me help him, but he refused all offers, swore that he would get rid of himself if something better didn't turn up, and then left me without even shaking hands.

"After that I often saw him about, but he would never let me get near, and would slink away directly he saw me. Every time I met him he seemed to look more wretched, shabbier and dirtier, and one day I knew how low he had sunk, poor devil! for I saw him parading Piccadilly with sandwich boards strapped across his back and a general look about him that told of drink and nothing else. After this I lost sight of him again, and I must confess that, in the bustle of business and the excitement of political affairs, I almost forgot his existence.

"One morning, however, about two years later, when I was sitting over a late breakfast, my servant came in and told me a rough, dirty-looking man wanted to see me.

"'I told him you were at breakfast, sir,' West said, 'but he said that didn't matter, he was sure you'd see him all the same.'

"'What name did he give?' I asked, wondering who on earth my visitor could be.

"'Barham, I think he said, sir,' my servant replied.

"I jumped up and ran into the hall, and there I found Jim sitting.

"'Come in, old man,' I said, and shook him warmly by the hand.

"Jim followed me into the dining room, and when I shut the door sat down at the table and cut off a great chunk of bread.

"'I'll speak when I've eaten a bit,' he said, and broke into a laugh. 'Funny thing, a man with £100,000 being nearly starved!'

"I looked at the poor chap anxiously, thinking his head had been turned with the trouble he had gone through, but though he was in an even dirtier and more ragged condition than when I last saw him, he had no look of the madman.

"When he had crammed the last piece of bread into his mouth he jumped up and seized me by the shoulders.

"'I am not mad, old chap, or dreaming, though you know you think I am. Look at this letter, and then tell me if you don't think this is a devilish funny world.'

"I read the letter quickly.

"'Good heavens, it's true!' was all I could say.

"'Yes,' said Jim, 'I'm the proud possessor of £100,000, left me by an old uncle who refused to give me a cent six months ago. By ——, it is a devilish funny world.'

"He fell into a chair and burst into a roar of laughter, and I couldn't help joining him.

"'But look here, old boy,' Jim said, suddenly growing serious again, 'this is not all I came for. I came to tell you that you've got to share this with me. We'll have a real good time with this money. It's no use shaking your head, you must join me. And I'll tell you what I'm going to do with it. I'm not going to invest it or speculate with it or do any of that nonsense. I'm going to spend it. I've had a ghastly, awful time of it for the last six years; I've lived among people you'd scarcely care to touch; I've been an outcast, a scum of the earth, a sewer rat. And it's all because of the lack of this confounded money. Now I've got it I'm going to make it pay me back for some of the ills its want has caused me. I'm going to live for five years. I shall have £20,000 a year and you'll share it with me; and on this day five years hence, when the money's all gone—as it will be—I'm going to blow my brains out!'

"He stopped for a moment and began to pace up and down the room.

"'Don't talk like that,' I said; 'you know you don't mean it.' He came up to me, put his hands on my shoulders and looked me straight in the face.

"'Old chap,' he said solemnly, 'I do mean it. I am going to live for five years, and I swear before God that on this day five years hence I shall put a bullet into my brain. I swear it.'"

Vernon broke off and looked at the clock.

"I say, it's getting very late," he said; "I'll finish this yarn another day."

"No, no; go on," I said.

"Well, Jim got his money all right, banked it and started to live. He went in for every kind of luxury, yachted, raced, shot—did everything a man with £20,000 a year can do. I was with him a great deal, and tried to put a check on some of his excesses, but all to no purpose. He lived a very devil of a life, was never in bed before 7 in the morning, smoked like a chimney, drank like a fish and played old Harry with his constitution generally. It was no good trying to argue with him; if one did his answer always was, 'I'm only going to live for five years, old boy, and I mean to enjoy those years, I can tell you.'

"For four years this life went on, and he then woke up one morning to find he had only got £10,000 and one year of life left, and—he was madly in love with a woman. She was a widow, absolutely penniless, but as handsome as paint, and as attractive into the bargain. Poor old Jim became her abject slave. He was always about with her, loaded her with presents, and I gradually saw less and less of him. One day, however, he wrote to me and asked me to come around to his rooms, as he had something special he wanted to say to me. I went and found him in a very excited state, pacing up and down his room like a madman.

"'I've been a fool,' he said almost as soon as I had closed the door, 'a confounded idiot. I have been living like a beast for four years and a half, and thought I was enjoying myself. I made an idiotic vow, and my money's all gone, barring £10,000. Curse it, what a fool I've been!'

"'You know the proverb about spilt milk, Jim,' I said.

"He sunk into a chair with a kind of groan.

"'Yes, I know,' he said, 'but, hang it, I can't help crying over it. For I'm in love with the best and loveliest woman in the world, and she'd marry me tomorrow—only I have wasted most of my money. Ah, old boy, as I told you four years ago, it's a funny world. I have made a confounded mess of my life and I suppose I deserve what I've got, but it's hard, devilish hard!'

"'Poor old boy!' was all I could say. Jim squeezed my hand hard and sat silent, staring into the glowing fire as if there he might find some way out of his perplexity. I shall never in my life forget that hour in his rooms. I can see the whole scene quite plainly at this moment. The cozy, well furnished room, the pictures on the walls and Jim's sad face showing up distinctly with the red glow of the firelight on it—I tell you that scene's photographed on my memory.

"I should think we sat like that for close on half an hour and then Jim suddenly sprang up.

"'I have it,' he shouted, 'I know what I'll do. Look here. I've got £10,000 left. Well, I'm going to try my luck on the Stock Exchange. If things turn up trumps I'll marry and try and live a decent life. If they don't, well, hang it, I'll keep my vow and have done with it. They tell me a revolver bullet doesn't hurt much. It's so soon over.'

"By the time I left him Jim and I had agreed to go and see a very clever stock broker—a friend of mine—the next day, and ask him to do his best.

"'It's such a funny world,' Jim said, as he shook my hand. 'Perhaps I may be lucky, and then my vow can go to the devil and my revolver into the gutter.'

"'Well, you know what a queer jade Dame Fortune is said to be, and in Jim's case she lived up to her reputation. My friend made money for him hand over fist. Every company he put money into seemed as if it couldn't go wrong, and, as things were booming, Jim made about £30,000 or £40,000 in three or four months. But he wouldn't be satisfied with that.

"'I'll go on,' he said, 'till the day before that on which I was to fulfill my vow, and on that day, no matter what the conditions of the market, I'll sell every blessed share I've got; and then, if all goes well, I'll be married the next week.'

"I didn't see him much during the succeeding two months, as I was very busy at the time, but he kept sending me notes telling me all was going well, and, knowing what shares he held, I could see on reference to the papers that he must have made a pot of money.

"At last the day came on which he was to sell every share he held. He came into the club—this very club, by the way—about 2 in the afternoon, and I could see by his face that things had gone all right with him.

"'Congratulate me, old chap,' he said, 'that's all.' I wrung his hand hard. 'When you've done squashing my hand, old boy,' he said, 'I want you to come round to my place.'

"We took a cab and were soon there.

"'Now,' said Jim, 'I'm going to chuck this revolver away, and then I shall feel as free as a lark.'

"He took the pistol from a drawer, opened one of the windows and threw it far away into the park below.

"'And there goes the last of my bad luck, please heaven!' he shouted gayly. 'And to-night you and I and the future Mrs. Barham shall have a dinner together to celebrate the event, and on this day week I'm going in for matrimony.'

"'And bliss, I hope,' I added laughingly.

"'I don't hope, old boy, I know,' Jim said.

"We three dined together that night, and Jim was in the best of spirits. He seemed to have taken a new lease of life, and I could see that the woman he was going to marry really cared for him. She seemed, too, as good as she was lovely.

"Jim and I went on to the club afterward and sat up late talking.

"'Do you remember this day five years ago,' he said as we parted on the doorstep. I nodded.

"'Well, isn't it a devilish funny world?' he answered, laughing.

"He was right, poor, dear old chap. And it was even funnier than he expected, for that very night the Three Sisters held a consultation over him and before dawn broke Antropos had cut in two the thread of his life.

Obeyed Instructions.

Much is said in these days about the want of obedience to parental authority displayed by the rising generation but an incident in which the contrary spirit was manifested is narrated by a prominent Western lawyer.

His 12-year-old son, a boy of great spirit, but with no overabundance of strength, went to pass a vacation with a cousin who lived on the banks of a broad river. His father, in his parting instructions, placed one restriction upon the boy's amusement during his visit.

"I don't want you to go out in your cousin's canoe," he said, firmly. "They are used to the water, but you are not, and you haven't learned to sit still anywhere as yet. You'll be there only a week, and with all the other amusements the boys have and the horses and dogs, you can afford to let the canoe alone for this time and keep your mother from worrying all the while you're away."

The boy readily gave the desired promise. On his return he was enthusiastic over the pleasures he had enjoyed.

"And I didn't mind canoeing a bit, pa," he said, addressing his careful parent with a beaming smile. "The boys taught me how to swim, and the only time they used the canoe was the last day, to go over to the other shore. But I remembered my promise, and I wasn't going to break it the last day. So I swam across."—Chicago News.

The Cathedral of Seville.

We knew already how impressive the cathedral could be at ordinary times. Without, in rose-color beauty, the Giralda soars above it; wide steps give to the Moorish wall of its court the height and dignity which we had missed in Cordova's mosque; and the court itself, the Court of Oranges, has all the picturesqueness that little tumbled-down houses actually built into the cathedral, and chance balconies, where women lounge among the flowers, and chance windows behind grilles, and a central fountain, and a few low, fruit-bearing trees, and posing beggars in admirably composed rags, can produce. Within, scaffolding and workmen in the completely blocked-up nave, which will take years in the repairing, could not altogether destroy, in our eyes, the grandeur and solemnity of the vast proportions, great golden grilles looming up before us unexpectedly in what Delacroix calls the cathedral's "magnificent obscurity," chapels opening on every side, but only the glitter of a jewel in a Virgin's crown, or the glow of the gold in a Christ's drapery, to show where the altar stood in the comforting gloom. One is apt to credit the Moor with everything that is good in southern Spain. But if it was he who planned the court without, and raised its high wall, it was the Christian Spaniard who built this most solemn and beautiful of all earthly temples.—Century.

Bleaching.

French manufacturers who have been seeking the best method of bleaching leather are reported to have obtained the most satisfactory results from sodium peroxide—already used for bleaching wood and silk—as the oxidizing agent. Heavy leather is brushed with a solution of two pounds of magnesium sulphate and three-quarters of a pound of sodium peroxide in four gallons of water, and subsequently immersed in weak vinegar or acidulated water. For light leather the same solution can be used without the acid treatment.

A WOMAN'S HEART.

MRS. CLOUD WAS IN A DANGEROUS CONDITION.

Her Husband Expected Her to Die, but She Recovered and Is Happy—A Story of Interest to Women.

From the News, Indianapolis, Ind.

Oak Hill is a pretty little suburb of Indianapolis, with here and there fragmentary lines of cosy cottages, with neighboring stretches of green sward and park-like patches of forest trees.

At No. 20 Elliott street, Oak Hill, Ind., the reporter found a pleasant party composed of two gentlemen, two ladies and a number of children, on the Sunday afternoon of a warm summer day, seated in the shade of a long porch.

The lady of the house, Mrs. B. E. Cloud, a sweet-faced woman, made the reporter welcome.

"You have come to ask me what I think of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills?" she asked with a smile. Really, she looked so little like an invalid that the reporter thought surely he had made a mistake. "No," she continued, "you are quite right. This is the place, and I can hardly say enough in praise of these pills, for they have cured me.

"I had heart trouble, a palpitation and dilation of the heart that would give me the most alarming smothering spells. Often these spells would come upon me in the night, and at such times I would have to get up. At times, for several moments, I would apparently cease to breathe. These spells were sometimes followed by bleeding at the nose, and the loss of blood would be as much as a pint at a time. My physician said my heart was enlarged, and it seemed to me as if there was water around it.

"These distressful symptoms were accompanied by spells of extreme nervousness, during which I suffered more than I can express. In fact I had so many ailments in connection with my heart trouble that I seemed to have at once all the ills that flesh is heir to.

"I began taking Williams' Pink Pills in March last, at first without experiencing any relief. But all at once they seemed to reach the disease, and from that moment my recovery was rapid. I took them a little more than two weeks, and have had no need to take any since, for I consider myself fully cured. I have had no trouble with my heart since and my nervousness has entirely gone. The cure was so sudden that I consider it little less than miraculous. Now my nervousness has gone, I sleep well and eat well."

Mr. Cloud, who was present, confirmed his wife's statement and said that on several occasions before she had begun the use of the pills that the attacks were so violent that he always dreaded that the next one would take her life. He is a mechanic employed at the Atlas engine works, an establishment that employs several hundred men.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They build up the blood, and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Prayer Rings in Olden Times.

New Companies Boom.

There is a boom in new companies going on in England. During June the average was four companies floated every day; the capital called for during the first half of 1896 was $405,000,000. Sixty-five millions were for foreign Government loans, fifty-five millions for cycling companies, forty five for breweries, sixty for railroads, and forty-seven for mining companies. Last year the capital applied for during the same period was $260,000,000, in 1894 it was $155,000,000, and in 1893 only $130,000,000.

A Singular Form of Monomania.

There is a class of people, rational enough in other respects, who are certainly monomaniacs in dosing themselves. They are constantly trying experiments upon their stomachs, their bowels, their livers and their kidneys with trashy nostrums. Street Sprinklers.

The up-to-date cities now use street sprinklers with wheel tires six inches wide, and the outside of the front tire is placed even with the inside of the rear tire, the machine thus rolling twenty-four inches of street as it moves along, and doing excellent work in keeping the streets in good condition.

GEORGE C. GORHAM HEARD FROM

He Cites Congressional Records and Speeches to Prove That Silver Was Demonetized in Secret—Senator Sherman Blamed for the Work

A second unsuccessful attempt at the demonetization of silver was inaugurated on the 25th of April, 1870, by the introduction in the senate by Senator Sherman of "A bill (No. 859) revising the laws relating to the mint, assay offices and coinage of the United States." According to his statement, the bill was "framed in the treasury department by a distinguished body of experts." It contained seventy-one sections, the fifteenth of which gave a list of the silver coins to be thereafter issued, and the eighteenth of which prohibited the issuance of any not named therein. The silver dollar was omitted from the list, and the mints were thereby to be closed against deposits of silver bullion for coinage. But the bill contained no reference to this fact, which might be said to appear only by not appearing.

The third and finally successful movement for the demonetization of silver was the introduction in the house of representatives on March 9, 1871, of "A bill (1,427), revising and amending the laws relative to mints, assay offices and coinage of the United States." It was introduced by Mr. Kelley, of Pennsylvania, chairman of the committee on coinage, and reported by him favorably from that committee on Jan. 9, 1872. He informed the house that it had been prepared in the treasury department for the purpose of codifying and simplifying the mint laws, and he and his colleague on the committe, Mr. Maynard, of Tennessee, both stated that it was a mere revision of the mint laws, the only important change being the creation of a mint bureau in the treasury department.

FINALLY BECAME A LAW.

It was recommitted Jan. 10, and again reported, with amendments, Feb. 9, 1872—this time by Samuel Hooper, of Massachusetts. He stated that the bill reduced the weight of the silver dollar from 412½ grains to 384, but did not state that it proposed, as it did, to demonetize silver by making the silver dollar a legal tender only in sums not to exceed $5. Clarkson Potter of New York, however, debated that provision, which he objected to as being illtimed, and he also strongly objected to other features of the bill. Pending debate, the house adjourned without motion.

The main object of the bill, which Mr. Hooper had carefully concealed, having thus been disclosed by Mr. Potter, the measure was apparently abandoned; but, on the 27th of May following, after it had slumbered near four months, Mr. Hooper, in the absence of Mr. Potter, again called it up for the purpose of moving a substitute. This substitute was never read, Mr. Hooper assuring the house that it had been submitted to the different gentlemen in the house who had taken special interest in the bill and that it had met with universal approbation in the form in which he offered it. This was equivalent to saying that it no longer contained the provisions objected to by Mr. Potter. Mr. Hooper answered every question concerning it, but no question was asked or statement made as to the silver dollar or the limitation of its legal tender quality to $5. This statement can easily be verified by reference to the Congressional Globe, part 5, second session, forty-second congress, pages 3,882. The bill then passed the house in the substitute form under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. Kelley of Pennsylvania, who introduced the bill, declared on the floor of the house that, though he was chairman of the committee on coinage, he was "ignorant of the fact that it would demonetize the silver dollar." (Congressional Record, vol. 7, part 2, page 1,605.) Mr. Blaine, who was speaker of the house when the bill passed, declared on the floor of the senate in 1878 that he "did not know anything that was in the bill at all," and that "little was known or cared on the subject." (Same, page 1,063.) General Garfield declared that he knew nothing about it. (Congressional Record, vol. 7, part 1, page 989.) Mr. Holman of Indiana declared that the passage of the bill through the house was "a colossal swindle," and "never had the sanction of the house". (Congressional Record, vol. 4, part 6, appendix 193.) Mr. Cannon of Illinois said: "Neither members of congress nor the people understood the scope of the legislation." (Same, page 197.)

HOUSE PASSED IT BLINDLY.

It is evident from these declarations that the house was led blindfolded into the passage of the bill, not only by the adroit manner in which all mention of its main purpose was avoided, but by Mr. Hooper's misleading assurance that it had been so changed as to meet all objections that had been made.

In the senate the bill was taken up for consideration on the 17th of January, 1873, and debated and passed on that day. All the debate that was ever had upon it in that body took place on that date.

The bill as it passed the senate contradicts in plain terms some positive assertions made by Mr. Sherman during the debate upon it as to the provisions it contained concerning the standard silver dollar. It demonetized silver, which he declared to the senate it did not. Mr. Hooper had misled the house by omissions, evasions and indirections. Mr. Sherman deceived the senate by direct misrepresentation. This was "the crime of 1873."

The ineffaceable proof of the serious accusation is contained in the report of the senate proceedings of Jan. 17, 1873, in the Congressional Globe, from which I will quote some passages. (Congressional Globe, parts 1 and 2, third session, forty-second congress, pages 668-674.)

There was no reference in the debate to the fact that the bill would abolish the legal tender quality of silver. The house bill changed the weight of the silver dollar, 412½ grains, to 384 grains, and made it, like the small coins, a legal tender for $5 only. Mr. Sherman had reported an amendment to strike this out and insert instead a "trade" dollar to weigh 420 grains, with the same limitation as to the legal tender quality. The bill prohibited the issuance from the mints of any coins not named therein. This was to make sure that the 412½-grain dollar would not survive by any implication.

The debate on the subject of the silver dollar came up incidentally only on the unimportant question of the provision, to omit the figure of the eagle from the silver coins, Mr. Casserly, of California objecting to it.

Mr. Sherman stated that the reason for leaving off the eagle was to make room for the words describing the weight and fineness of the coin. When pressed for a reason for doing this he stated that it was recommended by the officers of the mint. He said: "The reason given to us is because it has been adopted as a mode of international coinage"

As Mr. Casserly became quite insistent, Mr. Sherman went into the subject more explicitly. He declared that the bill provided for an international silver dollar. He referred Mr. Casserly to the preceding section (15) which, in the form in which it passed the house, provided for a 384-grain dollar, which, as he explained, was the exact weight of the 5-franc piece of France. Here are Mr. Sherman's words: "If the senator wil allow me, he will see that the preceding section provides for a coin which is exactly interchangeable with the English shilling and the 5-franc piece of France; that is, a 5-franc piece of France will be the exact equivalent of a dollar of the United States in our silver coinage; and in order to show this wherever our coin shall float—and we are providing that it shall float all over the world—we propose to stamp upon it, instead of the eagle, which foreigners may not understand, and which they may not distinguish from a buzzard or some other bird, the intrinsic fineness and weight of the coin."

The section to which Mr. Sherman referred Mr. Casserly to was section 15, which, as it came from the house, did in truth provide for a silver dollar of the exact weight of a French 5-franc piece, namely, 384 grains. But the record shows that when Mr. Sherman uttered the above quoted words, section 15 had just been amended on his own motion by striking out the 384-grain dollar and substituting the 420-grain "trade" dollar. And yet he told the senate that the bill still provided for a silver dollar of the weight of the French 5-franc piece. This was a palpable misrepresentation.

HURRIED THE MEASURE THROUGH.

The question may now be asked, could Mr. Sherman thus deceive the senate as to its own action of a few moments before? The reply is that the bill was being hurried through by him on his statement at the outset that its consideration "would not probably consume any more time than the time consumed in reading it." That meant that its seventy-one sections contained nothing of sufficient importance to even require explanation by him, much less to call for debate. It was represented by him to be merely a bill to enact into law some changes in the mintage laws which the mint officers deemed necessary. He evidently satisfied senators that it was not worth their serious consideration. Those who have any acquaintance with senate proceedings understand very well that such mere routine legislation as this was represented to be attracts no attention in the senate chamber. The senator in charge is trusted to truthfully state its objects, and no one thinks of doubting his word. He goes through the form of making the motions, which are often heard only by the presiding officer, who declares them carried unless they are opposed. Such was the case on this occasion.

Another misrepresentation of equal importance was contained in the language in which Mr. Sherman explained to senate what kind of a dollar was being placed in the law. He had assured the senate that the bill provided for a dollar which would be good everywhere in the world. It was to be a realization of the dream of international money. And yet on this vital point—that it was to be bereft of its legal tender quality—he was as silent as the grave. Our silver dollar certainly could not "float all over the world" if we deprived it of the great money function of being a legal tender in the payment of debts.

Mr. Casserly again pressed him as follows: "We cannot have an international coinage on the basis of our silver coins unless our silver coin is to be of the standard of all the nations with which we expect to have relations. Now, I ask the senator whether this bill provides or a silver coinage of that character."

CALLED IT INTERNATIONAL MONEY.

To this Mr. Sherman replied: "This bill proposes a silver coinage exactly the same as the French and what are called the association nations of Europe, who have adopted an international standard of silver coinage; that is the dollar provided for by this bill, and is the precise equivalent of the 5-franc piece. It contains the same number of grams of silver, and we have adopted the international gram instead of the grain for the standard of our silver coinage."

Could any assurance be stronger than this that the bill did not demonetize silver, limit the legal tender quality of the silver dollar, or interfere in any way with its money function? It was to be international money and was to "float all over the world." Unfortunately, no senator seems to have looked at the bill to see whether Mr. Sherman told the truth. His explanation seemed to render it unnecessary.

Mr. Sherman further stated that the bill also provided for the trade dollar of 420 grains. This was not a substitute for the other. He positively stated that they were both in the bill. We have just shown that he assured the senate that the new bill provided for a dollar of precisely the weight of the French 5-franc piece. He then added: 'The trade dollar' has been adopted mainly for the benefit of the people of California and others engaged in the trade with China. That is the only coin measured by the grain instead of the gram. The intrinsic value of each dollar is to be stamped upon the coin."

Returning, after this, to the subject of the 384-grain dollar, he stated that the change in the weight (from 412½ grains) had been recommended by the chamber of Commerce of New York and adopted by certain learned societies. This change was the adoption of the ratio of 15½ to 1. He said it was to make our silver coinage correspond in exact form and dimensions and shape and stamp with the coinage of the associated nations of Europe, who have adopted international silver coinage." Did this leave any room to doubt that Mr. Sherman above all others, was upholding the standard silver dollar, and making it an international coin which would float everywhere, as it could not do if the legal tender function were taken away from it? In the face of such declarations is it at all strange that senators did not scrutinize the bill or have any ground for suspicion that it was to work a mighty revolution in our monetary system?

SILVER MEN WERE SUSUSPICIOUS.

That no suspicion was being entertained at the time that the silver was being demonetized by the bill is evidenced from the declarations subsequently made in the senate in 1878. On the 15th of February of that year Senator Thurman said: "I cannot say what took place in the house, but know when the bill was pending in the senate we thought it was simply a bill to reform the mint, regulate coinage and fix up one thing and another, and there is not a single man in the senate, I think, unless a member of the committee from which the bill came, who had the slightest idea that it was even a squint toward demonetization."

On the same day Senator Allison said: "But when the secret history of this bill comes to be told it will disclose the fact that the house of representatives intended to coin both gold and silver, and intended to place both metals upon the French relation instead of our own, which was the true scientific position of this subject in 1873."

On the 10th of January Senator Beck said: "It (the bill demonetizing silver) never was understood by either house of congress. I say that with full knowledge of the facts. No newspaper reporter, and they are the most vigilant men I ever saw in obtaining information, discovered that it had been done."

In McPherson's "Handbook of Politics" for 1874 (page 134) appears a letter from President Grant to Mr. Cowderly, dated eight months after the passage of the demonetization act, in which he discussed silver as still being a standard of value, clearly proving that he was unaware that he had approved a bill in which silver had been demonetized. This letter has been in print on the authority of Mr. McPherson for twenty-two years and it is rather late to call it in question, as has been attempted this year for the first time.

SHERMAN'S ABUSE OF CONFIDENCE.

From the record, which I have faithfully reproduced, it is impossible to reach any other conclusion than that the confidence of the house was abused by Mr. Hooper; that the confidence of the senate was abused by Mr. Sherman, and that by their joint efforts the most important piece of legislation of the century was carried through congress by stealth, and the double standard, which had existed by the will of the people for more than eighty years, was taken away from them without their consent or knowledge, in the interest of aliens, by the manipulation herein described. The men who did this work did it furtively and fraudulenty, because they knew that if submitted either to the people or to congress, its overwhelming defeat would have been insured.

The story is a long one, but I have not found myself able to confine it within any less space. In what I have said of the crime of 1873, and of those who have committed it, I have done exact justice, for I have measured their conduct by the merciless test of their own public record and have pointed to the pages where it can be found. I am, very truly yours.

Thin, Pale Children

One satisfaction in giving Scott's Emulsion to children is they never object to it. The fact is, they soon become fond of it. Another satisfaction is because it will make them plump, and give them growth and prosperity. It should be given to all children who are too thin, or too pale. It does not make them over-fat, but plump.

It strengthens the digestive organs and the nerves, and furnishes material for rich blood.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

VICTORY IS CERTAIN.

BRYAN WILL SWEEP NEARLY EVERY WESTERN STATE.

Ohio, Michigan, Indiana and Illinoi Will Lead the Victorious Column of Sovereign States Redeemed from the English Standard.

National Democratic and Silver Headquarters, Chicago, Sept. 21, 1896.—Bryan will carry every state west of Pennsylvania and south of the Potomac river. Such is the deliberate opinion of those who have kept in touch with the free silver sentiment which now pervades the great producing section of the United States.

Nothing but over-confidence can lose his fight. It is true that the forces of the people are not yet thoroughly organized. A perfect political organization is possible only by the prodigal expenditure of money. The victims of the gold conspiracy are not able to meet Mark Hanna when it comes to raising money. Every trust which feeds upon the people is a contributor to the republican corruption fund. Every man who has grown rich at the hands of the Belmont-Morgan-Rothschild syndicate has been compelled to disgorge a part of his plunder and turn it into the coffers of the republican campaign fund.

We can and will win this battle in spite of all the money which the confederated syndicates, trusts, and criminal combines in the United States are able to collect and squander.

They make much ado about Maine. Maine is not on the political map of the United States. Neither is Vermont. The good citizens of these two states have no sympathy and are not in accord with the current thought of the nation. Vermont is the only state in the Union which showed a decrease in population in 1890. The great west ships corn and wheat into Vermont and Maine the same as to England and other non-agricultural countries. You cannot expect Maine to vote for dollar wheat. Show Maine how she can increase the price of red herring, and on that issue you can sweep the state.

Oregon, Alabama, Tennessee and Arkansas have recently been carried against the single gold standard by record-breaking majorities. Against this, gold has carried Maine and Vermont. Let us see how the score stands on the electoral votes of these states:

Carried for Silver.
Oregon	3
Alabama	11
Tennessee	12
Arkansas	8
Total	34

Carried for Gold.
Vermont	4
Maine	6
Total	10

Let us examine the vote of these states in detail. In Oregon the populist and democratic vote was divided, but the republicans were in a decided minority. The vote in the other states, as compared with that of the preceding election in 1894, shows the following respective gains:

States	Plu. 1894	Plu. 1896.	D gain	R. gain
Alabama	27,582-D	41,000-D	13,418	.....
Arkansas	48,704-D	71,182-D	22,458	.....
Maine	33,578-R	26,556-R	.....	7,022
Tennessee	74,748-R	27,000-D	27,748	.....
Vermont	32,631-R	39,000-R	.....	11,479
Pluralities	7,942-D	54,182-D	.....	.....
Net Democratic gain			46,233

We are satisfied with this. It is about in proportion with the result as it will be in November. William McKinley can esteem it a personal triumph if he receives one-fifth of the electoral votes of the United States. A less popular man running on a gold platform would not carry three states in the Union. Conservative estimates indicate the following majoritites for Mr. Bryan in these states:

California	30,000
Colorado	130,000
Delaware	10,000
Illinois	45,000
Indiana	50,000
Iowa	30,000
Kansas	75,000
Kentucky	35,000
Maryland	15,000
Michigan	50,000
Minnesota	35,000
Missouri	60,000
Nebraska	30,000
Ohio	25,000
South Dakota	10,000
North Dakota	7,500
Wisconsin	30,000

There is a good fighting chance in New York and New Jersey. Pennsylvania will not give McKinley 40,000 majority.

Nervous Prostration

Cured by Dr. Miles' Nervine.

Prolonged derangement of the nervous system not only affects the brain and mental powers, but develops disease in some of the vital organs. The most dangerous of these indirect results is when the heart is affected. This was the case of the Rev. N. F. Surface, Fawn River, Mich., who writes under date of Feb. 14, 1895:

"Fourteen years ago I had a slight stroke of paralysis. Overwork brought on nervous prostration. I was exceedingly nervous and the exertion of public speaking caused heart palpitation that threatened my life. I used two bottles of Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure for my heart trouble, and two of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine for my nervousness and feel better than I ever expected to feel again. I can speak for hours without tiring or having my heart flutter as it formerly did, and I have you to thank that I am alive today."

C. C. Shaffer.

A little flurry of surprise was manifested here yesterday when C. C. Shaffer came in on the north bound noon train accompanied by a lady, who was at once introduced as his wife. He had given no one a hint as to the cause of the trips to Fort Wayne that he made now and then for some time past. He was married at Bluffton Tuesday, Sept. 22, at the residence of Hon. W. H. Ernst, the fortunate lady being Mrs. M. E. Ernst, mother of Mr. Ernst. Her home, however, was at Liberty Center, on the Clover Leaf road west of Bluffton. Mr. and Mrs. Shaffer are now at home in his elegant residence on North VanBuren street, and our Auburn ladies will welcome her to her new home.

Many of our people will remember the Mr. Ernst who got such a good vote at the democratic state convention for Superintendent of Public Instruction. This is W. H. Ernst, referred to above. He has been auditor, and we believe county superintendent of his county.

Butler Fair.

The Butler street fair is proving a great success. Tuesday, there were present, a crowd estimated, at 3,000. Yesterday, there were more than twice that number, being put at 8,000 by conservative estimates. The grounds and grand stand at the race tracks were crowded while the races were going off, and one could go from there up town and find the main street full for several blocks. The various rooms where displays were shown, were crowded all the time, and the exhibits were quite numerous and interesting. There were the usual fakirs, the inevitable and ever popular merry-go-round, and the "Wild man from Borneo had just came to town." And so on througa the list. Nearly every business man had put up a booth in front of his store, and had a display of his wares. And all the candidates in the country except McKinley and Bryan were there, and political discussions could be heard every where. But it was all good natured. The day was "superfine" and everybody enjoyed a holiday. Auburn people were everywhere present, and there were many from Waterloo, Kendallville, Angola and other places. The writer met scores of old friends and had brief visits with all. We cannot give a list of them for the number is too great. To-day closes the fair, and we presume the attendance was not as large, as the weather has been threatening.

Barn Burned.

A light was seen in the direction of Waterloo last evening about 7 o'clock, and this morning Charlie Speer, of Waterloo came over and reported the burning of John Miser's barn, about a mile south of that place. Mr. Miser had just come home from Garrett, and after putting out his team, he and his daughter were milking, when the daughter said she could smell smoke and asked if someone was not smoking. Mr. Miser said he thought not. Just then she saw smoke coming up through the floor, and Mr. Miser sprang to the place and threw his bucket of milk on to it, and commenced trying to stamp it out, but could not stop it. The barn and all its contents were destroyed. It contained a good stock of hay and some grain, there was also some grain that belonged to Wesley Fulton, but we have not learned how much. The barn was insured for $500 and there was some insurance on contents. No live stock was lost. It is supposed to have been set on fire.

Postal Rules

When you call at the postoffice for your mail and the postmaster hands it out, ask him if that is all. If you ask him for your mail and he tells you there is none, tell him there ought to be, then go home and send the rest of the family around at different times of the day.

Don't bring your mail to the postoffice until the mail closes, then sail into the postmaster for not opening the mail bag and putting your letter in.

When you want a stamp on your letter tell the postmaster to put it on; if he don't lick it lick him. In case you put it on youself soak it in your mouth long enough to remove tha mucilage, it will stick until dry. Be sure to ask the postmaster to credit you with a stamp; if he has any accommodation about him he will do it. If you have a box, stand and drum on it until the postmaster hands out your mail. It will make him feel good, especially if he is waiting on some one else.—Ex.

Head-End Collision.

Frank Dills and wife while coming home from Butler last night had what might be justly called a head end collision, and the fact that it did not end far mor serious can only be ascribed to good luck. Mr. Dills came home by the way of Waterloo, and when a short distance east of that place, was following another rig quite close. Dell Crooks was riding east on his bicycle, coming to the first rig passed it safely and turned into the beaten track. The next instant he struck the front wheel of Frank's buggy and took a header clear over the back one. Mrs. Dills was struck and slightly injured, while Crooks has a bad gash in his head as a reminder. Dills says if the buggy top had been up Crooks would have undoubtedly have torn it off.

Obituary.

Aphelonia Cochran daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Miser, was born Sept. 27, 1855, and departed this life at her home in Auburn Sept. 25, 1896, aged 40 years, 11 months and 29, days. She was joined marriage to William Cochran Sept. 17, 1885. To this union were born no children, Mrs. Cochran was a noble woman, loved by all who knew her. She accepted Christ as her Savior, and died believing in him. She leaves to mourn her death a husband, father, and many friends. The funeral services were conducted from the Lutheran church Sabbath at 2:30 p. m. Sept. 27, 1896. Interment took place in Woodlawn cemetery, J. D. Brosy officiating.

EVERY DAY.

DELEGATIONS VISIT MAJOR McKINLEY AT HIS HOME IN CANTON.

The Courier Reporter Heard Three Speeches by the Grand Champion of Protection.

The COURIER reporter, through curiosity, like thousands of other people, paid Major McKinley a visit at his home in Canton yesterday. Soon after we reached the city we found our way to his residence, and there met both the Major and his wife. At about 8 a. m. he had responded to a call from the republican clubs of Marion, Ind., and Grant county who had come in by special train. This party only constituted about 250 persons, most of whom were former residents of Canton, but are now emoloyed in the glass factories at Marion. They came without regard to political affiliations, taking advantage of the cheap rate to visit their old home.

The first delegation we saw come in, was from Crawford county, Pa. There were about 550 persons in this delegation and two bands. Each delegation is escorted to the McKinley residence by the Citizens Reception Committee, about ten men on horseback and two cabs in which the highmoguls or spokesmen ride In response to the call Mr. McKinley made a tariff speech in which corpses were resurrected and held up to the gaze of the intelligent people in the delegation. There was also a slight reference to "sound money," whatever that means.

At noon a delegation of 300 came from Upper Sandusky, Wyandot county. They were lead by a brass band. Mr. Mckinley responded in a very neat speech, but short, as dinner was waiting.

At 2 o'clock a delegation from Tiffin, and Seneca county, to the number of about 100 came in headed by a drum corps. Hon. G. E. Schroth, presented the delegation to the Major and in behalf of them also presented a big picture of the late Gen. Gibson, a personal friend of his. He responded on this occasion in quite a lengthy address which he read from type written manuscript. In this reading he had much to say concerning wool. But on no occasion did he fail to mention something about the 50-cent dollar the democrats propose to make, and thereby enrich the mine owner. Should free silver win and we get those "50-cent dollars," how will the mine owner be benefited? His bullion is worth 53 cents, and the "dollar" will be worth but 50 cents. Of course we will then have free coinage, save a fee for testing and refining. Does anybody believe the mine owner will get rich?

Mr. McKinley has a model home centrally located in Canton. The beautiful lawn that was once green is now bare. There is not an inch of space within the fences where even a root of grass can be found. The crowds congregate up close to the porch, and the Major makes his speeches from a chair. We saw the finely polished stump sent by the East Tennessee people. He does not use this but will keep it for a relic.

It may be truthfully said the business men and saloons of Canton are receiving great benefit, financially, from these excursionists. The Canton fair was in session this week. The Law and Order League have succeded in passing a law compelling saloons to close during the week of the fair. But many of them are defying the law and have kept the saloons open, though a large majority were closed. The Pennsylvania delegation were very boisterous. We have never seen so many drunk people. One man succeeded in getting in the lock up, and a collection was taken among the boys from that state to pay his fine and allow him to return home.

The COURIER is of the opinion, being so informed by various citizens of Canton, that the reports of such large delegations visiting the Major, as have been published in city paper are wonderfully exaggerated. Our information as to the number of people who come on these excursions is as given to us by the various railroad companies over whose roads they come and therefore must be correct. Most all the excursionists are city people as can be readily seen by their complexion. The farmers are not spending their money to see the "advance agent of prosperity."

Your Boy Wont Live a Month

So Mr Gilman Brown, of 34 Mill St South Gardner, Mass; was told by the doctors His son had lung trouble, following Typhoid Malaria, and he spent three hundred and seventy five dollars with doctors, who finally gave him up saying: "Your boy wont live a month." He tried Dr King's New Discovery and a few bottles restored him to health and enabled him to go to work a perfect well man. He says he owes his present good health to use of Dr King's New Discovery, and knows it to be the best in the world for Lung trouble. Trial Bottles Free at Robbins & McCord's Drug Store.

Tropical Auburn.

Auburn against the world. Why go to Florida to see the oranges grow? They may be seen in Auburn. Charles Pommert, the barber has an orange tree with eight oranges on as large as walnuts. It is quite a sight to most of our people to see this juicy fruit growing in this country. The tree may be seen at the barber shop. S. S. Potter, who resides on South Cedar street, also has a lemon tree which is now bearing. It is in a thrifty condition and will no doubt ripen in fine shape. We have previously noted the bananas which John Aber is growing at his green house.

"OVER-PRODUCTION" FALLACY EXPLODED

The Favorite "Argument" of the Gold Standard Advocate Is Riddled Beyond Repair by Governor Altgeld.

FACTS VERSUS CARL SCHURZ.

The Indiana farmer who finds his products of every kind lower at this time than at any other in the history of farm productions and, yet, is offered the spacious argument by Republican and other gold standard orators and writers that it is the result of over-production will find a very full and convincing refutation of this misstatement of the facts in a speech delivered by Governor Altgeld of Illinois last week. In his tour over the country in the interest of the maintenance of the gold standard, Carl Schurz has attempted to account for the fall in prices of all kinds of property by ignoring the fact of gold appreciation and attributing it to the increased production of the things which are now so abnormally low. The Indiana farmer knows that the prices of horses, for instance, have not been reduced because the foals have been abnormally increased, or that his wheat crop this year brings him less money at the mill than it did last year because he has raised more to the acre or had sown a greater number of acres, thus increasing his product. But when the Republican or the gold standard orator, which is practically the same person, tells him that the crop of the world has been increased and this increase controls the home market, he has no figures with which to meet the statement and, though he may question it, he is put at a disadvantage in the argument. Governor Altgeld has supplied the figures and in a powerful speech has shown that there is not only no over-production in this country or in the world, but that the production is less than for several years and that the population, the consuming element, is constantly increasing. Answering Mr. Schurz on the question of farm products, the governor said:

The Price of Wheat.

"In attempting to account for the fall in price of property, Mr. Schurz selects wheat as an illustration, and he attempts to show that there has been a great increase in the annual production of wheat; that we have not only opened the whole northwest, which is producing wheat, but that our farmers have to compete with the wheat of India, Argentine Republic and of Russia, and he assumes that therefore the price of wheat had to fall. There are three things to be said in answer to this. First, the increase in production does not produce a fall in price, provided there is an equal increase in consumption. This is self evident, and Mr. Giffen, the statistician of the British board of trade, has on different occasions pointed out that for more than 15 years prior to 1873 the increase in the production of nearly all commodities in the world had been greater on the average, year by year, than the increase has been in any year since 1873, and yet, as he says, during all of those years prior to 1873 prices kept constantly rising, notwithstanding the enormously increased production, while since 1873 prices have been steadily falling, notwithstanding the fact that the increase was not as great as it formerly was.

"The second observation is that wheat has not fallen in price any more than all other commodities. It has fallen no more than all property has fallen; has fallen no more than wages. It is not contended that Russia, India and the Argentine Republic have entered into competition in the production of all other products which our people put upon the market.

"These two points show that Mr. Schurz is entirely wrong in his theories. The third observation is that he is entirely wrong in his facts.

"The truth is that there has been scarcely any improvement in machinery for raising and harvesting wheat in the last 20 years, and the statistics show that there has been very little increase in the production of wheat in the United States in that time. More is raised in the northwest, it is true, but very much less is raisod in the central and eastern states. I have endeavored to get the most reliable data on this question from the reports of the various boards of trade and the government reports, which are recognized as the highest authority obtainable on this subject. The government reports show that the wheat crop for 1878 was more that 420,000,000 bushels, and that for the year 1896 the crop does not exceed 400,000,000 bushels. In fact, if the increase in population is considered, the wheat crop has constantly grown less in proportion to the consuming population ever since 1878. The wheat crop this year is about 56,000,000 bushels short of the average since 1878, and is 20,000,000 less than what it was that year. So that in spite of the opening of the new fields in the northwest there has been no greatly increased production of wheat in this country, and when compared with the consuming population there has been an actual falling off, yet 20 years ago the price of wheat was more than twice what it is now.

"Again, in referring to the foreign wheat, he endeavors to make the impression that there has been a great increase in production, and artfully selects a recent year of the highest production and compares that with an earlier year having the lowest production. The fact is that the world's wheat crop has remained substantially the same for 16 years. In 1880 the world's production of wheat was 2,280,000,000 bushels. In 1885 it was 2,108,000,000 bushels, and that was the lowest crop of a number of years. In 1895 the crop was very large and amounted to 2,553,000,000 bushels. This year the world's production is 120,000,000 less than last year, and the total production of the world is smaller than it has been for six years, yet wheat is lower than ever before. In addition to this the crop of rye, which, together with wheat, furnishes the bread of the world, is 170,000,000 bushels short, yet in spit of that fact the price of rye has fallen steadily with that of wheat. It may also be remarked that we have the smallest oat crop that we have had for a great many years, and yet oats is worth less than one-half what it was several years ago. Now, why is it that with the wheat crop of the world 120,000,000 bushels short and the population increasing enormously, the rye crop 170,000,000 short, the price has reached the lowest point that it has ever reached in the history of the country?"

PREDICAMENT OF INDIANA REPUBLICANS

In 1890 They Praised Republican Legislation In Behalf of "Free Coinage" and Said It Had "Raised the Price of Farm Products."

GOLD RINGS IN THEIR NOSES NOW

A Republican speaker recently congratulated his audience that the Republican leaders in the present campaign were not only united, but that there are some Democrats who are assisting them in the effort to elect McKinley. This statement was based upon the evident purpose of certain gold standard Democrats, who have abandoned the principles of Democracy, to vote for Palmer and Buckner, knowing that every vote thus given counts a half vote for McKinley. But the speaker neglected to call the attention of his auditors to the fact that the Republican party has assisted in the education of its constituency in the value of free coinage to the industrial classes, and especially to the farmers, for hardly six years have elapsed since the Republican party went before the people of the state with a platform that gave silver as generous an indorsement as it has ever received from the Democrats. This was immediately following the passage of the Sherman law and that utterance has come back to haunt them in the present campaign and demonstrate to the people that the party has stultified itself by bowing to the will of the corporate interests and adopting a gold standard platform. In their platform in 1890 the Indiana Republicans declared:

"We cordially commend the action of Republicans in congress on the subject of free coinage. The law recently enacted was passed in spite of persistent Democratic opposition. Under its benificent influence silver has rapidly approached the gold standard of value, farm products are advancing in price, and commerce is feeling the impulse of increased prosperity. It will add more than $50,000,000 annually of sound currency to the amount in circulation among the people, and is a long, yet prudent step toward free coinage."—Indiana Republican platform, 1890.

The Democrats in congress opposed the law because they regarded it as a makeshift and were in favor of free coinage out and out. The law provided for the coinage of $4,500,000 per month or $54,000,000 a year and this, the Republican platform declares, caused silver rapidly to approach the gold standard of value, caused farm products to advance in price, and caused commerce to feel the impulse of increased prosperity. These are precisely the things that the advocates of free coinage say will result from Bryan's election and the sober, sensible producer, who is interested in the advance in price of farm products, the manufacturer whose prosperity is dependent upon the revolving wheels of commerce, and the laboring man whose welfare is dependent upon the increased prosperity of the country will find in this utterance of the Republican party only six years ago a truth which is today denied by them at the behest of the moneyed interests of the country. But if the coinage of $50,000,000 per annum bought as bullion caused these blessings to result to the people, they may well expect greater prosperity to flow from the free and unlimited coinage of the same metal, at a fixed ratio.

It is no longer a party secret that Chairman Gowdy of the Republican state central committee sent several of the nominees on the state ticket to Mark Hanna at St. Louis to argue against the adoption of a gold standard platform They were commissioned to say to McKinley's manager that the placing of the word "gold" in the national platform would lose Indiana to the party. Among the members of the state ticket thus solicited was Attorney General Ketcham, but he refused to go. Others did visit Hanna, but appealed to him in vain, for corporate interests dominated the convention. And it was for the same reason that members of the Indiana delegation, after General Lew Wallace was selected as the representative of the state on the committee on resolutions, held a meeting and seriously considered the propriety of taking him off that committee.

These men are now going before the people of the state with a lie upon their lips and in the face of all their utterances in favor of silver, utterances that extend over a period of 20 years, they clothe free coinage with all the ills which they once declared and which time has demonstrated to belong to gold monometallism.

SUMMARY OF A WEEK'S HAPPENINGS.

The Latest News as Flashed Over the Wires from All Parts of the World—Regarding Politics, Religion, Casualties, Commerce, and Industry.

Reign of Terror at Cleveland.

Cleveland is in the midst of a reign of terror. It would seem that a well organized gang of the most audacious highwaymen and burglars has taken possession of the city and for six days they have simply had things their own way. The desperadoes work together and terrorize first one portion of the city and then another. Peaceful citizens are sleeping with revolvers in their hands and suburbanites collect in little crowds to go home after dark, and get in the middle of the street to turn corners. Saturday night the desperadoes made a raid on the down-town saloons about 8 o'clock and held up about fifteen in the very heart of the city. In broad daylight a jewelry store was robbed of a tray containing $500 worth of goods. Since 3 o'clock twenty robberies have been reported to the police, who are unable to stop the depredations. Three men have been arrested. John Carey has been identified, but there is little evidence against the others.

Li Pleased with America.

United States Commercial Agent Peterson, at Vancouver, B. C., sends the following to Washington: "At an interview given the Consuls of this city on board the steamship Empress of China, just previous to her departure for Hong Kong, his Excellency Li Hung Chang, Viceroy of China, requested me to become the bearer of the following message to my Government: 'I was greatly impressed by the courtesy and kindness extended to me by the Government of your country, which I regard as the model government of Western civilization. I shall ever retain the most pleasant memories of my visit to the United States, and I desire you to make my greetings to your country most cordial, as I now take leave of America.'"

John R. Gentry Is King.

John R. Gentry at Rigby Park, Portland, Me., paced the fastest mile ever made in harness and placed the world's record at 2:00½. The day was cold and light northwesterly winds were blowing up the stretch when John R. Gentry, with S. W. Andrews upon the sulky, came out to go against the record of 2:01¾, made on September 3, this year, at Glens Falls, N. Y., in the second heat of a race. He made the first quarter in 29¼, the half in 59½, the three-quarters in 1:30¼, and the mile in 2:00½. This was a whole second less than his former record, which has never been surpassed by any horse and only equalled by Robert J. (2:01½) in 1895 at Terre Haute.

Acquitted of Shooting Lucky Baldwin

Miss Emma Ashley, who shot at E. J. Baldwin, the millionaire horseman, in court in San Francisco, a short time ago, and narrowly escaped killing him, has been acquitted on the ground of temporary insanity. The shooting occurred while the suit of Lillian Ashley against Baldwin for betrayal was in progress. Emma Ashley is the plaintiff's sister, and sat behind Baldwin in court, and fired a pistol at him at close range. The bullet grazed Baldwin's head, but did no further damage.

Brakeman Uses a Pistol.

Charles Sullivan, a tramp machinist from Pittsburgh, was fatally shot by E. G. Wilson, a Norfolk and Western brakeman at Portsmouth, Ohio. Sullivan and four companions had taken possession of a freight car in the local yards. Wilson attempted to drive them away and was assaulted by the gang, when he fired. Wilson has been arrested. He says he shot in self-defence.

Tomb for Tippecanoe.

Ex-President Harrison and wife left New York for Cincinnati, where he goes to arrange for repairs to the tomb of his grandfather, President William Henry Harrison, at North Bend, O. For years the grave of the General has been in a semi-dilapidated condition, and the grandson now proposes to place a suitable stone over the vault.

Garland and Edward Harris, both of Englewood, Ill., who were riding on one of the engines. They were both about 20 years of age, and apparently on their way home from an unsuccessful search for work.

DESTROYED.

A City in Japan Totally Annihilated by a Visitation from the Fire Fiend.

San Francisco special: The city of Kobe, Japan, was recently wiped out by a disastrous conflagration, and on August 26, floods, storms and earthquakes caused the loss of 2,500 lives and the destruction of millions of dollars worth of property in Northern Japan. The steamer Doryea, from the Orient brought news of a series of catastrophes that has befallen the Mikado's realm, that are unprecedented in its history. In Gifu Prefecture 4,300 homes were blown down and along the Haji Gawa, 400 persons lost their lives. The severest storm occurred on August 30. Along the Isatsugawa eighty-four lives were lost. The Minatogawa overflowed its banks at midnight of the 26th, instant, and the waters inundated streets and fields, sweeping away 300 houses and drowning 200 persons at Kobe. To make the fate at Kobe worse, fire broke out late in the evening, and fanned by a high wind, spread over the entire city. One thousand nine hundred blocks, including 2,260 houses and twelve godows, were totally destroyed, and ten houses, two police boxes, one fire brigade station, four temples and one theater. The burnt area comprises ten streets.

IN A HEAP

The Bodies of Slaughtered Spaniards Were Found.

Advices from Havana per steamer Mascotte state that 87 Spanish troops started for Calabazar, eight miles from Havana. Five of the 87 returned to Havana and reported that their companions had been killed by insurgents. Shortly before reaching Calabazar the Spaniards said they were surrounded by about two hundred insurgents, who poured in one volley, and then charged with the machete. The five who returned were badly wounded, and were left for dead by the Cubans. On hearing the story a Spanish regiment was sent to the scene, and the bodies of the 82 Spaniards were found in a heap. The wounds made by the machete were frightful, several of the Spaniards having been beheaded. The Captain was killed in this manner. Captain General Weyler has issued orders to newspapers not to publish a word about the tragedy.

The Turkish Question.

The London Daily Graphic publishes a dispatch from its Paris correspondent claiming that he has authority for the statement that M. Hanotaux, the French Minister of Foreign Affairs, has initiated urgent negotiations with the object of effecting a speedy settlement of the Turkish question by France, England and Russia. There is strong reason to believe, the correspondent declares, that the respective diplomatic representatives of the three powers in Constantinople will within a few days communicate a decisive resolution to the Sultan.

Three Women Suffocated.

An explosion of gasoline at the house of Dr. J. M. Wampler, in Richmond, Ind., occurred while three women were alone in the house. COLD-BLOODED CRIME

SORROWFUL CHAPTER OF IRISH HISTORY RECALLED.

The Arrest of P. J. P. Tynan, of the Invincible Society, Brings to Mind the Murders of Lord Cavendish and Secretary Burke.

Vile Political Plot.

The arrest of Patrick J. P. Tyman, the notorious "No. 1," of the Irish Invincibles, makes interesting a review of the bloody crime of this secret body which on May 6, 1882, put to death in Phoenix Park, Dublin, the new chief secretary of Ireland, Lord Frederick Cavendish, and the permanent under secretary, T. H. Burke. Tynan was arrested at Boulogne, France, on a warrant issued in 1882. He was one of those who organized the Invincibles in Dublin and ever since the revelations consequent on the Phoenix Park assassinations the authorities had been endeavoring to capture him.

O'DONNELL.

The killing of Lord Cavendish and Mr. Burke was a cold-blooded crime. It was essentially political, as not one of those counseling or participating in the murders had the slightest private wrong against either of the victims. The details were carefully planned by the Invincibles and the place selected for the assassination was Phoenix Park, where Mr. Burke had his official residence. It has been said that the intention of the Invincibles was only to kill Mr. Burke, but this has been controverted and the counter assertion made that Lord Cavendish had also been marked out for death. Whatever be the right or wrong of this, the plan of the conspirators was well laid.

On the afternoon of the fatal day, May 6, a car driven by Myles Kavanagh and carrying four men—Joe Brady, Tim Kelly, Pat Delany and Tom Caffrey—drove into Phoenix Park. Following the car was a cab driven by James Fitzharris and in which were seated Dan Curley, Michael Fagan and Joe Hanlon. These latter were armed with revolvers and their duty was to assist the others should there be any need of it. In plain view of the viceroyal lodge the two parties halted to await the coming of their victim or victims. Not one of either party knew Mr. Burke by sight and Lord Cavendish had only arrived in Ireland that day, to be present at the formal entry of the new viceroy of Ireland, Lord Spencer, so that he, too, was unknown to the conspirators. This, however, the latter had provided for. A short distance from them were two men, James Carey and Joseph Smith. Smith knew Burke, and his part in the tragedy was to point out Burke to Carey, whereupon the latter was to signal the conspirators.

A little after 7 o'clock in the evening Mr. Burke alighted from a car just within the park gates and recognizing Lord Cavendish, who was going on foot to his new home in the park, proceeded to greet him. Instantly the signal was given by Carey to the conspirators, and Brady with his companions — Kelly, Delaney and Caffrey — advanced to their bloody work, while Smith and Carey conveniently disappeared. When Brady had advanced almost to the point of meeting Burke and Lord Cavendish he stopped as though to tie his shoe. Suddenly rising he seized Mr. Burke, swung him around and buried his knife in his body. Burke fell to the ground, whereupon Kelly bent over and gashed him across the throat. Lord Cavendish, who had sought to defend his companion, was seized by Brady and stabbed to death. The party then boarded the car and drove out of the park into the country, returning to the city by a roundabout way. The cab, too, disappeared.

JAMES CAREY.

A bicyclist was the first to discover the dead bodies of Burke and Lord Cavendish. The news of the double assassination swept through the city like wildfire and created intense excitement and horror. For the first time in the history of the Irish press Sunday editions of the three leading Dublin papers were issued next morning. In all the churches announcements were made of the crime and in one of the churches a priest while denouncing the crime fell dead on the altar.

PHŒNIX PARK, DUBLIN, WHERE THE TRAGEDY OCCURRED.

Immediately the machinery of the law was put in motion to run down the murderers. There was little clue at first to work on and the labors of the police and detectives seemed futile. Several arrests were made, some of the guilty ones being apprehended, but the prisoners were subsequently discharged for lack of evidence. A man, now prominent in the business life of Dublin, but who was never brought forth in connection with the case, gave the first important piece of information to the police. Soon other clues were picked up and when the police were satisfied that they might act openly they arrested twenty-six Invincibles. This was on the night of January 13, 1883. For a time the men under arrest kept up a bold front, but one day as they were taken into court for examination one member was absent from the ranks. This man was Kavanagh, driver of the car, and he turned informer. Soon another man named Farrell turned informer and then James Carey volunteered to become a State witness. This sealed the doom of the murderers and in quick succession Joe Brady, Dan Curley, Michael Fagan, Tom Caffrey and Tim Kelly were tried and found guilty. May 14, 1883, Joe Brady was executed in Kilmainham jail and four days later Dan Curley was hanged. May 28 Michael Fagan was executed, June 2 Caffrey suffered death, and on the 9th Kelly was executed.

PHŒNIX PARK MURDERERS.

CAFFREY. BRADY. KELLY
FAGAN. CURLEY.

Of those who were also tried for the murders Pat Delaney was sentenced to death, but as he had turned State witness his sentence was commuted, first to penal servitude for life and subsequently to ten years' imprisonment. Chairman Mullett, another Invincible, received ten years. Life sentences of penal servitude were meted out to Joe Mullett, Laurence Hanlon and Fitzharris.

Of the informers, not all have been named and one of them has amassed a fortune in a quarter of the globe far removed from Ireland. Carey, it may be recalled, was shot down by a fellow passenger on a Cape steamer. Kavanagh died in a lunatic asylum in London.

CAVENDISH. BURKE.

DONGOLA IS FALLEN.

British-Egyptian Expedition in Africa Occupies the Stronghold.

Dongola has fallen, and the nominal objective point of the British-Egyptian expedition has been reached. The river forces of the British-Egyptian expedition, pushing up the Nile from El Hafir, landed a force at Dongola and occupied that place before the dervish forces, retreating from El Hafir, reached that point. El Hafir and Dongola are therefore both in the hands of the expedition, while the dervish forces are somewhere between, seeking a refuge.

Saturday afternoon the long-range firing continued between the dervishes on the west bank of the Nile, and the expeditionary force on east side. The Maxim guns, with their sweeping hail of fire, did great execution in the dervish ranks, while the field and horse batteries never allowed the enemy to do anything with their batteries. After the gunboats of the expedition had forced their way past the forts at El Hafir and had proceeded southward toward Dongola the dervishes apparently perceived that El Hafir was no longer the place for them and they prepared to depart. They buried as many of their dead as they had time for. The rest were prepared with a stone around the neck and thrown into the Nile.

As soon as the news of the evacuation of El Hafir was received the correspondent of the Associated Press proceeded to cross the river and make a survey of the enemy's late position. It was found that their mud defenses had been built with great care, but the rifle trenches only permitted the men a very short and straight front for protection. Mats were still strewn along and within the trenches, and in the straw shelters were the remains of the carcasses of sheep, which had been killed to supply food to the defenders. The dead had been buried or thrown into the river.

LEADVILLE IN TERROR.

Rioting Strikers Make an Attack on the Coronado Mine.

Driven to desperation by starvation, Leadville's locked-out miners, who have been threatening the peace for two months, attacked the Coronado mine with dynamite and guns at 1 o'clock Monday morning, arousing the city, and throwing its inhabitants into a panic. The miners were organized recently by the Western Federation of Miners, and almost every mine worker was in the union when their demands were made. The miners ask $3 a day for all classes of workmen, including surface and underground men. The employers declared, at the beginning of the trouble, that they were willing to continue paying the wages which had prevailed in Leadville to that time. Under that scale surface workers were paid only $2.50, and practically the only change the union proposes is the advance of the wages of this class of men to $3. The mine owners have refused to listen to any proposition from the employes. They insist the Governor, the courts and the newspapers are with the miners, and it would be impossible for them to manage their own property if they made any concessions. The mine owners explain that the sheriff holds the key to the situation and he is in league with the strikers.

THE QUESTION OF THE DAY.

Bryan in Baltimore.

William Jennings Bryan, the Democratic candidate for the presidency, spoke in Baltimore Saturday night to two of the largest crowds ever present at a political meeting in that city. The first speech was made in the open air, and conservative estimates place the number who heard it at 30,000. The second was held in Music Hall, the largest auditorium in Baltimore, and the house was packed until women fainted and many had to be removed before the speaking could proceed. Mr. Bryan reached the platform about 8 o'clock, and was greeted with a tremendous cheer from thousands who gathered there in anticipation of his coming. Just as he bared his head in acknowledgment of the greeting a slight rain began to fall, which increased to a brisk shower as he proceeded. His voice was not clear, the strain of the last few days having evidently told upon it. Pale of face, with great beads of perspiration standing upon his forehead, Mr. Bryan created the impression of a man who had tested his powers of endurance to their fullest capacity. His first address lasted barely twenty minutes, after which he repaired to the Music Hall, whither as many of the crowd as could get in followed him. He was accompanied in the train and escorted to the platform by a committee, of which Senator Gorman was a member. At the conclusion of his speech at Music Hall Mr. Bryan returned to Washington.

A heavy wind and rain storm seriously interfered with the arrangements which had been made for a grand reception to Candidate Bryan at the Old Capitol base ball park in Washington. The crowd was considerably below the expectations of those having the arrangements in charge, but there was no lack of enthusiasm. For some time before his arrival dark rain and wind-laden clouds from the west gave certain promise of a downpour, and he had not spoken more than forty minutes when the rain came down in torrents, drenching every one exposed to it. After waiting some time, however, Mr. Bryan left the platform and drove to his hotel.

Big Day at Canton.

Canton, O., Saturday was the scene of the biggest demonstration there since nomination day. There were ten visiting delegations of from 1,000 to 6,000 each and utilizing twenty-six special trains, and estimated at from 10,000 to 15,000 people. After the two receptions in the opera house in the forenoon, one to the visitors from Hulton, Verona, Oak Mount and other burroughs of Allegheny County, and the other to the employes of the Carnegie City mills of Pittsburg, the speech-making was transferred to the McKinley lawn, part of it being done in the rain. It was the big delegation of railroad men from Chicago, too large for any hall, who set the example of defying the elements. They, with the three or four hundred telegraphers who came with them, surrounded the little reviewing stand on the major's lawn and listened to and cheered the assurances of support delivered by their spokesmen.

Fights Gold with Gold Eagles.

W. H. Harvey, author of "Coin's Financial School," used $2,500 in gold eagles as an object lesson in the course of his speech at the Chicago Auditorium Saturday night. Four thousand people heard Mr. Harvey's speech, and applauded vigorously at frequent intervals. A large blackboard figured prominently in the speech, Mr. Harvey attempting to show with its assistance the evils of monometallism. He resurrected his argument that all the gold available for money in the world could be cast into a solid cube of twenty-two feet. Still working at the blackboard, he showed that the same amount—$4,000,000,000—in silver all that is available for money, would, if cast into a solid block, make a cube thirty-six feet.

Answers Schurz and Cockran.

Gov. Altgeld spoke at Central Music Hall, Chicago, Saturday night in reply to Carl Schurz and Bourke Cockran. He was greeted by a mass of humanity that filled every portion of the hall, and there were thousands outside who clamored for admission, but had to content themselves with hearing lesser orators at overflow meetings. The Governor dealt almost wholly with the money question, and his audience applauded him continuously.

Senator Thurston Speaks.

West Side Republicans of Chicago were entertained in a big tent at Loomis and West Harrison streets Saturday night. There were a good many thousands of them present, and they yelled and applauded the speakers as though they thoroughly enjoyed the sentiment.

WEARY OF TURKEY.

State Department Urged to Take Vigorous Action.

"The empire of Turkey has, in the opinion of a very large number of Americans, lived long enough." It was, says a Washington correspondent, an official of the State Department who spoke, at the same time pointing to a pile of letters just opened and read. Then he continued: "I judge from letters coming every day from all parts of the country urging us to take rigorous steps to put an end to the Turkish outrages and prescribing the dethronement of the Sultan as the best and justest and promptest means to that end. Some of our correspondents go into elaborate detail as to the exact method of going about it. One in particular may interest you. Were we to follow it out the President would send our White squadron to Turkish waters. While the fleet was on the way our Minister at St. Petersburg would call on the Russian Minister of Foreign Affairs and propose to him that inasmuch as Russia could not, under the treaty which now binds the European powers, dethrone the Sultan, and further as Russia wants Constantinople, Russia should order her Black Sea and Mediterranean fleets as near Constantinople as practicable under the said treaty, and then our White squadron would steam within shelling distance of the city and open fire till the Sultan had abdicated and the Government was wiped out. The Russian fleets would keep close to the White squadron and thereby let it be known to the other powers that we had the sanction of the Czar for what we were doing. That would prevent any nation but Turkey interfering with us. When we had captured the city, and put the officials to flight, we would announce that we had accomplished our mission, and giving the tip to the Russian admiral, quietly withdraw. The downfall of the Turkish Government would warrant Russia seizing the city, and this she could do by landing her troops from her fleets and taking prompt possession. The White squadron could remain till everything had quieted down and without our saying a word let the other nations take it for granted that we should recognize Russia's right to Constantinople, to which she has, our correspondent insists, an unbounded right over other nations. Then we could recall our squadron, the Turkish empire outside Constantinople would be at the mercy of the other powers, and they might do with it as they pleased for all we cared. By such a coup, as the correspondent puts it, we would rid the world of a royal murderer, save the lives of thousands now in danger of the Turkish wrath, make ourselves solid with the Christian world, and then (note the comprehensive mind of this statesman) our squadron could come back by way of Cuba, kick the butcher Weyler off the island, recognize the independence of Cuba, whip Spain if she whimpered, and then come home and resume its drill in fleet evolution."

The official, continuing, said that letters were still coming in urging action in behalf of Cuba and that every fresh outrage reported gave an impetus to this correspondence. Some of the letters contain severe criticism of the department for not acting more vigorously in behalf of both the Cuban revolutionists and the unprotected Christians in Turkey. The horrible butchery of the newspaper correspondent by the Spanish soldiers in Cuba has called forth a very decided expression of intense feeling on the part of the letter writing part of the people and a demand that prompt measures be employed to bring Spain to reparation. In reply to my inquiry as to what the department is doing with regard to both Turkey and Cuba, the official said diplomatically that it was doing everything which the rights of American interests demanded and international law permitted.

CLAIMS FAIR'S MILLION'S.

Actress Will Be Rich If Her Mother's Suit Is Sustained.

If the fight now being made in the California courts by Mrs. Nettie Craven for a widow's share of the estate of the late multi-millionaire, James G. Fair, is successful the result will be attended by some interesting developments. One of these will be the transformation of Miss Margaret Craven, an actress in one of the Frohman companies, dependent upon a small salary, into one of the great heiresses of America. Though keeping it a secret long after the death of Senator Fair, Mrs. Craven now claims to be the lawfully wedded wife of the millionaire, and thus far the evidence she presents in support of the assertion has withstood all assaults. In addition to the deeds for a vast amount of property which she holds, though counsel for other heirs claim they are illegal, she asks for her widow's share in the estate of the bonanza king. While Miss Margaret would inherit nothing directly from her alleged stepfather, yet as her mother's heir, she would take a front rank among American actresses. She is not pretty, but a bright, attractive young woman.

MISS MARGARET CRAVEN.

CAMPAIGN BOOK OUT.

Official Document of the Democratic Party Is Issued.

Representative Benton McMillin, of Tennessee, has completed the compilation of the Democratic campaign book. Commencing with the Chicago convention it gives the platform recommended by the Committee on Resolutions, the speech of Mr. Bryan on the platform, the notification speeches and letters of acceptance. In the first chapter it lays down the fundamental principles of the Democratic party as expounded by Jefferson, Allen of Ohio, Seymour of New York and Bryan. With these it contrasts Hamilton's idea of government. It next takes up the silver question and for 100 pages deals with that topic. Following these are statements of fact and statistical tables. There are chapters on McKinley's public record on the subject of silver, Chinese immigration, the force bill and the effects of the McKinley tariff law. Under the head of Monroe doctrine and diplomatic relations the book quotes from Jefferson, Monroe and Cleveland, with comments. The book reproduces in full Mr. Bryan's speech on Labor Day at Chicago. It goes into the Republican record on the subject of contract labor and closes with a memorial by labor organizations in favor of free silver.

Some of the farmers of Jay County are up in arms against the proposed project to dredge the Salamonie River. A public meeting has been called and steps taken to oppose the scheme. The reason given for their opposition is the cost and the heavy assessment each land holder will be burdened with. The estimate given by the petitioners of the total cost was $100,000, but County Surveyor George Fulton says it would cost $500,000. The idea is to reclaim a large tract of land for cultivation.

CHAPTER IX.

It was some weeks after the party above described.

They stood on the platform, Elizabeth and Dorry. Leaning out of the train beside them were Mrs. Denbigh and Nora.

"Success on your first concert tour, Nora! Don't look troubled, mother! We'll keep house splendidly."

"And you'll write to me every day?"

"Yes; never fear."

Little Dorry waved her handkerchief. Then the two girls, left alone in Ecks, turned homeward.

"Supposing, instead of on Saturdays only, we have tea-dinners all the time mother's away. What a save it would be!" suggested Dorry.

"Of course it would, and so nice, too."

"I wasn't thinking of that. We shouldn't mind about niceness, should we, Bet, if we could save a lot of money against mother comes home?"

The first two days of their being alone passed quietly enough. On the third day Elizabeth inserted an advertisement to the effect that "advertiser," who had passed the Oxford Exam. in three languages, intended starting a "Literature Course."

It must be known that, having never in her life attended any lectures, Elizabeth had not the faintest notion how a Literature Course should be conducted; but where there's a will there's a way. The will was very strong in the second Miss Denbigh. At the same time she was not prepared for the influx of pupils that immediately followed her advertisement. It was but the next day that Dorry, passing the hall door, saw a gentleman standing at it, about to ring.

She opened it before he did so.

"If you will walk into that room," pointing to the drawing room, "I will tell my sister."

The gentleman entered the room indicated, and was soon joined by Elizabeth.

"Pardon me," he said. "Your sister admitted me. I am Director Schwarz."

"Of the large boys' school?"

"The same. I wish to join your Literature Course, Miss Denbigh, with a few colleagues of mine."

"How many?" (Elizabeth's heart gave a leap.)

"Four gentlemen."

"That will just make enough for a course. Will Wednesday evening from 4 to 6 suit you?"

"Perfectly."

A few words more as to terms, etc., and Director Schwarz departed with "Auf Wiedersehn, Fraulein."

Then the two girls sat down at a little table, on which was spread the midday meal, consisting of tea and bread and butter; it being the fifth day of this menu.

"I shall take two lumps of sugar in my tea to-day," said Elizabeth.

"I was just going to say take three," said Dorry, whom the director's visit had suddenly caused to forget all bounds of economy. "Do you know, Bet," she added, "I think we might indulge in a cake to-morrow?"

But "Bet," who had swallowed half a cup of tea without eating anything, now pushed away her cup from her.

"What's the matter, Liesel?" said Dorry; one of her pet names for her sister being this German abbreviation.

"I—I don't know. I feel so heavy somehow. I don't care for anything; not even sugary tea. My head is so hot."

Dorry laid her hand on it.

"So it is; poor old girl! Lie down a bit."

Elizabeth threw herself on a sofa near.

All that day and the night following it, she suffered from acute headache—brought on perhaps by the sudden excitement of the director's visit.

The next morning Dorry was up betimes, as usual, and laid a cold bandage on her head; then, to Elizabeth's amazement, herself lay down again.

"What is the matter, Dorry?"

"I—I've such a headache, too, Betty. How strange it is, to be sure!"

CHAPTER X.

So these two miserable little women lay in their beds opposite each other, with the difference only that Dorry was dressed.

"I wonder what we can be going to have," said Elizabeth, as she looked up at her. "We've had measles, and scarlet fever, and mumps and chicken pox. You haven't got any spots on your neck, have you, Dorry?"

"Dear me, no!" said Dorry, after examining herself rather anxiously. "I'm too old to have anything like that. There are lots of other illnesses; nervous fever, bronchitis, and ever so many things grown-up people have. All the same, I shouldn't think it was any illness at all that ails of us has got, only that we are both so bad at once. That seems as if you had something infectious, and had given it to me."

"I don't see that," said Elizabeth, brightening up. "We might have both eaten something that disagreed with us."

Suffering though she was, a smile crossed Dorry's face at this suggestion.

"Eaten!" she said. "Why, we haven't eaten anything these five days but tea and bread and butter. I was just thinking we should learn to live on nothing when that pain came. Oh!"

"What's the matter?" said Elizabeth.

"Dorry! Dorry!"

But this time there came no answer.

"Oh, mother!" and Elizabeth jumped out of bed. "Dorry! Dorry!"

But Dorry's lips remained silent.

She had fainted.

With trembling fingers Elizabeth deluged her with water.

Then the heavy eyelids moved, and after a while Dorry spoke again:

"Poor old Bet! To think of me fainting! How I must have frightened you. Stay, I think I know what is the matter with us now."

"What?" said Elizabeth.

"Nothing but tea dinners does not agree with us, perhaps. We are not strong, you know."

"Why, dear me, yes, of course it's that," said Elizabeth. "You've frightened away my pain, Dorry, with your swooning, you dreadful girl! I'll dress like the wind, and be off and buy us a dinner."

She was as good as her word.

A dinner? Why, yes, of course that was what they wanted.

Strange, that two little maidens should not be able to live without dinners; the save would have been "so enormous."

The next day the hall door bell rang and four gentlemen walked in.

"My colleagues, of whom I told you, Miss Denbigh," and Director Schwarz held out his hand. "Herr Gymnasiallehrer Werner; Herr Reallehrer Schultz; Herr Vicar Kummel."

All the gentlemen made deep salaams, and said, "Freut mich sehr."

Then the lecture began—

"Passing over the older poets, gentlemen, we will begin with Chaucer."

"What older poets?" asked Herr Kummel, taking out a pencil. "Be so good, miss, to give the names and the data."

Dorry gasped.

What evil genus had prompted Elizabeth to let these dreadful Germans know that there were older poets?

Elizabeth was inspired.

With eloquence extraordinary she gave an epitome of pre-Chaucerian literature, and as Dorry listened to her "declaring like anything" (to use her, Dorry's, own language) on "The Brut of Layamon,' in which the author, gentlemen, acknowledges his indebtedness to Bede in the peculiar semi-Saxon of the time;" on "Gloucester's Chronicle," "as Craik says, gentlemen, a narrative of British and English affairs from the time of Brutus to the end of the reign of Henry III." on "De Brunne's Chronicle," "belonging to a date not quite half a century later, gentlemen;" on "Laurence Minot," "the first real poet worthy of the name, subsequent to the Conquest;" then after a graphic sketch of "'Piers Plowman's Creed,' gentlemen," based on Collier and Craik, return once more to her old starting point, Chaucer, "well of English undefyled"—when Dorry heard all that, it was too much for her. She rose and left the room.

As for Elizabeth, she made a point of looking her severest at the young man who had the audaciousness to be good-looking, whilst at the others—three as plain-looking specimens of the genus homo as ever represented a country's intellect—she looked her pleasantest; and when the class broke up, shaking hands warmly with them, she almost startled the unfortunate Kummel by bestowing on him a look of unutterable disdain.

"I must read up all about Spenser for next lesson," said Elizabeth. "A pity I haven't got the 'Faery Queen.' Where's my list, Dorry? I should exceedingly like to have Spenser's 'Faery Queen.'"

They received a letter from Mrs. Denbigh the next morning, informing them that she and Nora would be home Thursday.

"Well, I must say I'm very glad," said Elizabeth. "After all, it's a great responsibility, our keeping house without mother."

"They will come by the eight o'clock train in the evening, of course," said Dorry. "We must give them a supper."

The menu of this supper was as follows: First, beefsteak—a really nice beefsteak, fried in butter; this to be served with floury potatoes, and a salad—a German salad—potatoes, beetroots, and cucumbers, arranged like a flower bed, in gradations, going up in a point (not in the style of your leaning towers, but like a dart), and surmounted by a tiny little beetroot for ornament. After that (but here let Dorry speak for herself)—"After that a conflour shape, with a branch of laurel stuck in it—as a metaphor, you know. Betty—that is, apropos of Nora's success. Along with this, apple stew; a really juicy one. Then tea, and—what Nora's so fond of—hot tea cakes, with lots of butter. What do you think of that?" and Dorry's eyes danced, as much as to say: "There's a supper for you!"

"Splendid!" said Elizabeth. "The 'metaphor's' a lovely idea."

It would take too long to relate in full the various mishaps attending this supper and reception; how various questions were discussed, until the lamp burned out, and only the big, bright moon lit up the faces of three earnest talkers; for the mother, with her hand laid on little Dorry's curly head, said nothing.

CHAPTER XI.

She rose and dressed softly; then, taking her shoes in her hands, quitted the room in her stockings.

With quick, noiseless steps she crossed the passage, and entered a room at the other end of it, closing the door quietly behind her.

The cool morning air was blowing in at the window. A clock was striking five. Troops of workmen were trudging down the street silently.

The girl approached a piano, opened it, and took up a book of exercises. Germany is the land of music and of methods. This book contained a German musical method, according to which the author's theory is that any one may become a musician, the one essential being that he have ten fingers and patience. Possessed of these, he need but cramp his arm into a certain position on a level with the keyboard, square his fingers into a certain position on a level with his wrists, and tighten his thumbs into a certain position, which, to be understood, needs to be—felt.

The appearance of the would-be pianist, when arms, wrists, hands and thumbs are thus contracted, resembles that of a skewered fowl, perhaps, more nearly than anything else, the sensation he undergoes at first being probably not unlike that which said fowl is happily spared from undergoing.

"Bend or break," murmured the girl as she looked sadly from the music to her hands.

"Bend or break"—it is woman's watchword half the world over just now.

"Posing" herself as indicated, she began to play one of these exercises, first with one hand, then with the other—for twenty minutes. A pained look then flitted across her face, her lips twitched, her eyelids began to open and close quickly. Still she played on. Another ten minutes and her fingers trembled, her arms jerked convulsively, a look of acute suffering settled on her face.

"One, two, three, four—one, two, three, f——"

She stopped suddenly, and leaned back in her chair, a deathly pallor spreading over her face. Then she rose and went over to the window.

Troops of silent workmen were still wending their way down the street, their steady tramp mingling with the song of the birds flitting in and out of the trees that dotted the road at equal distances.

How sweetly they sung!

The girl listened with wrapt attention. The air was full of chirping, twittering voices, and far off came one—long—note.

What bird was that, she wondered.

Ah! how she loved music! Would she ever be a musician? She knew she had no talent, but the method—the method.

Again she sat down at the piano.

One, two, three, four—one, two, three, four—till the pale lips turned still paler, and the child-like face looked marble in its pitiful whiteness. So much for methods and the watchword of the day, "Bend or break."

The girl's whole body trembled. Still she played on.

"Good-by, mother!" It was the same Dorry, some hours later, dressed in hat and gloves, with her music portfolio in her hand. "I'm off to my music lesson."

And off she started, swinging her music as she went. One is blithe at fourteen.

"Good-morning, Herr Professor."

It was the same Dorry again. No, not the same Dorry. This was a monosyllabic young lady, whom Herr Professor had never seen smile, and about whose austere little face the framework of tossed black curls looked strangely out of place.

This was shy little Dorry Denbigh, as the outer world knew her: a young lady who held herself very erect and looked at you with strangely earnest brown eyes.

The professor turned round.

"Good-morning, Fraulein."

His tone was not very genial. He had already given two lessons, was tired, and Miss Denbigh was no favorite with him.

While she played her scales he walked up and down the room, as usual; and, as usual, stopped every now and then, and shook his head with a look of utter despair.

It was not to be wondered at. Scales are at no time a treat to a musical ear, and as Dorry played them they were peculiarly trying. Her hands were stiff and unwieldy; every note as she struck it jarred on the sensitive ear of her master.

He was only a man after all—and a musician.

This little "Englanderin" was too exasperating. Had she no soul, no ears?

"You play as if you were wood, and you'll never do anything else."

What was that?

With a cry, as of physical pain, Dorry leaned forward; then burst into tears.

Tearful scenes were not uncommon in the professor's experience. Germany is the land of weeping maidens, and nowhere shall we meet with better examples of what we islanders once for all choose to consider the typical German girl—consisting of one-half Schwermuth and the other half Schwarmerei—than in that German institution, a music school. But there are tears and tears. The child's whole frame shook. She had forgotten her master, forgotten herself, forgotten everything but the one word "never."

"Never," she muttered, between her sobs, "and, oh, I so love music."

The professor looked at her.

"Poor little one," he then said kindly, with something like a quiver in his deep, gutteral voice.

Dorry raised her eyes and tried to speak, but could not. Her utterance had become thick; her lips twitched convulsively.

Her master started.

"Poor little one," he repeated, and this time he laid his hand on the child's curly head. "It was your own wish to try the method. It has been too much for you."

"I thought it would make a musician of any one."

"So it would, almost. But, some it—Child, you are ill."

That was the end of little Dorry's music. The method had proved too great a strain on the child's constitution. It makes musicians of some (query, are musicians then made?), others it——

Sentence unfinished.

Little Dorry it half killed, that method in the land of music.

CHAPTER XII.

The girl walked home slowly. There were no tears in her eyes now.

Near her home, she was met by her friend the Scotchman.

"Eh, how do you do, Miss Daury?"

"You play as if you were wood, and you'll never do anything else."

A wiser man than Tom Thomson might have smiled at this curious reply. A wiser man than Tom Thomson might not have known what to think of the little Irish girl, with her sad eyes looking far beyond him as she spoke. But the Scotchman did not smile, as, stooping, he took the girl's portfolio from her, and silently accompanied her the rest of her way.

What had revealed her sorrow to him? What alone makes us quick to read the sorrows of others? Tom Thomson had himself been disappointed in his time, but had "put his sorrow by," to use the saying commonly applied to those who do not wear their grief as an everyday attire.

Only when they had reached the house door did the Scotchman speak again.

"Child, it comes to all in some shape; it—it——"

He paused and colored, half sorry that he had spoken at all, feeling how little eloquent his tongue was, and not knowing how full of eloquence was his face.

"Yes," replied the girl simply; and put her hand in his, her brave lips trembling.

It was strange to find a comforter in Tom Thomson; everything was so strange to-day.

Up the stairs she walked like one asleep; then, having reached the top of the house, sat down on the outer landing, and cried as only a child can cry.

Have you forgotten the time when you as boy or girl, felt it?

As for little Dorry, she had not passed that stage. She had hugged a child's plan, whereby two stiff, unwieldy hands were to grow as supple as those of Meister Liszt; whereby sheer industry and ambition were to make of Dorry Denbigh a second Madame Menter.

Then came those words:

"You play as if you were wood, and you'll never do anything else."

Being but a child, the blow half stunned her. Being but a child, she saw in her own disappointment an event that would make her a by-word in the town of Ecks. How should she show herself in the streets, she whom "Every one" (with a capital E, of course,) would know as the girl who had failed? How should she break the terrible news to mother? How to Nora? to Lizbeth? How should she face the daylight? How should she bear this sorrow?

Sitting on the stairs, with her hat thrown off, and resting her curly head on one hand, whilst the great tears rolled down her face, these were Dorry's thoughts.

Ah, for more sympathy with the tears of childhood!

Then she descended the stairs. She was met by her mother at the door leading into their flat.

"Well, Dorry, what is it? You stagger as if you were walking in your sleep."

Again the thick utterance, as in her music lesson, that made it impossible to understand the child's reply.

"Why, you are trembling all over! My Dorry, what does it mean? There, there, I know all."

For the girl, instead of answering, had flung her portfolio from her. The mother needed no further explanation.

But the continued twitching of hands and lips was not explained till half an hour later by a doctor. Dorry was threatened with St. Vitus' dance. Nothing could avert it but entire rest, and, the doctor added, if possible, change of air and scene. She was forbidden to touch the piano.

What a foolish love letter the other man writes!

MAKING OUR MONEY.

PROCESSES THROUGH WHICH METALS MUST PASS.

Uncle Sam Boasts a Perfect Mint at Philadelphia—Accuracy in Weight and Fineness an Important Requisite—Some Facts Not Generally Known.

Facts About Coinage.

America is proud of its Philadelphia mint, which is without doubt the best equipped establishment of its kind in the world. An official of the royal mint of London, in visiting the Philadelphia mint some years ago, announced that we were fully one hundred years ahead of anything in this line. Here you will find stores of bullion, immense accumulations of wealth in the crude. You see it stacked up here and there in the shape of bricks. If you had permission you could not carry away more than $1,000 worth of the silver. The Quaker City mint at present holds $107,000,000 of these ingots, coining value, which occupy the space of 120 cubic feet. In the treasury at Washington and the subtreasury in various cities there are 388,000,000 coined silver dollars.

Money making—that is, coining metal—began in this country 284 years ago. In 1612 the Virginia company ordered an issue of coins, and these were struck at Somer's Islands, now called the Bermudas. The earliest regular colonial coinage was in Massachusetts, in pursuance of an order passed May 27, 1652. The denominations of the coins were 12 pence, 6 pence and 3 pence pieces, which were put in immediate circulation. There was also a Massachusetts 2-penny piece. One variety of this coinage had what is known as a pine tree, another a willow, and a third an oak. The first coin of that colony was the now famous "pine tree shilling" of 1650. The 2 and 1 penny pieces were struck in 1652. In 1785 the congress of the confederation adopted the plan presented by Thomas Jefferson for the national coinage, and in 1786 decided upon the names and characters of the coins. In 1787 a contract was made with James Jarvis for 300 tons of copper coins. These were coined at New Haven and bore the date of 1787. In 1792 a code of laws was enacted for the establishment and regulation of the mint.

The first issue from the mint in Philadelphia of "the dollar of our daddies" was in 1794. Before that a "Martha Washington" half-dime was struck off as a proof-piece. Two years later came the issue of dimes, with the first golden coinage of eagles and half eagles occurring intermediate. The record since then is an interesting one, and it is refreshing to read of how much money is lying around to be gathered in the total output of the mints since 1792, being as follows:

The above amount includes $2,501,052.50 Columbian souvenir half dollars and $10,005.75 Columbian silver quarter dollars. The coinage of the United States mints during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, comprised 4,035,205 pieces of gold of the value of $43,033,475, and $53,715,550 worth of silver dollars, subsidiary silver and minor coins.

There are few places that are more interesting to visit than the Philadelphia mint, which is the paternal institution of America, and the most complete of its kind in the world. It is open to the public daily, excepting Sundays and holidays, from 9 to 12 in the morning. Visitors are met by ushers, who attend them through the various departments. Over 50,000 people have visited the institution in the course of a year. Owing to the immense amount of the precious metals always in course of transition, and the watchful care necessary the public is excluded from some of the departments. The system adopted in the mint is so precise and the weighing so accurate that the abstraction of the smallest particle of metal would lead to almost immediate detection.

All gold and silver intended for coinage purposes is received in the deposit or weighing room. The largest weight used in this room is 500 ounces; the smallest is the thousandth part of an ounce. The scales are wonderfully delicate and are examined and adjusted on alternate days. Near here is one of the many faults in the building. Of solid masonry, several of them are iron lined, with double doors of the same metal and most complicated and burglar-proof locks. It is estimated that from $2,000,000,000 to $2,500,000,000 worth of gold has been received and weighed in this room.

The metal received is carefully weighed in the presence of the depositor and the proper officials and then locked in iron boxes and taken to the melting-room. There are many furnaces in this room. The gold and silver, being mixed with borax and other fluxing material, is placed in pots, melted and poured in iron molds, and when cooled is again taken to the deposit-room in bars, where it is reweighed and a small piece cut from each lot by the assayer. From this the fineness of the whole is ascertained, the value calculated and the depositor paid. The metal in its rough state is then transferred to the melter and refiner. To judge of the wonderful accuracy with which the assayer must do his work it can be stated that in his office is used what is probably the smallest weight in the world. It is the thirteenth-hundredth part of a grain and can scarcely be seen with the naked eye, unless on white ground.

In the melting room all the metal used in coining is alloyed, melted and poured into narrow molds. The cartings or ingots vary from one to two and a half inches in breadth, according to the coin they are intended for. They are about twelve inches long and half an inch thick. Those of gold are worth from $600 to $1,400 apiece and have one end wedge-shaped. After passing the melting room these bars reach the rolling room. Here the gold is subjected to a terrific rolling or drawing, and the original ingot is reduced ten times its size. Great care is taken to anneal the metal at short intervals, as it becomes quite brittle after passing through the intense pressure. When the rolling is completed the strip is about six feet long, or six times as long as the original ingot. These strips are then given the final dressing down to exact size and placed in copper canisters for the final annealing. The strip is, however, not quite ready yet. It is put through its turn on the drawing bench, where the slightest irregularities are corrected. This done, it is carefully cleaned and sent to the cutting presses. There are a number of these very solidly built machines. Each has a vertical steel punch which works in a round hole or matrix cut in a solid steel plate. The operator places one end of a strip of metal in the immense jaws of the press and cuts out a couple of blanks, or, as they are called, planchets. As the strip is of equal thickness these samples must weigh alike. If exact, or a shade too heavy, they are allowed to pass, and the whole strip used. If too light the entire strip is rejected, and must be remelted. From a strip worth $1,100 there is cut $800 worth of planchets.

THE TREASURY BUILDING AT WASHINGTON.

WEIGHING GOLD BARS.

These blank disks are now almost ready for the coin press, but must pass a very rigid examination first, to ascertain if they contain the exact amount of gold. Having successfully stood the test, the planchet goes to the milling and coining room, where an incessant stream of bright gold pieces flows from the many coin presses. Both the milling machine and the coin press belong to those exasperatingly simple yet wonderfully complex affairs which it is much easier to look at than to describe. The former, which does the milling, handles the planchets automatically. All that is necessary is to supply its feed tube with the blank disks, and these, after a few revolutions, drop perfect into a small box at its side.

The coin presses, of which there are many of various sizes, are very imposing-looking affairs. Each press has an arch of cast iron weighing several tons, and combines a great deal of grace with its ponderous strength. All the steel work about it gleams with a high polish. In the interior of the arch is a nearly round piece of brass called a triangle. This is fastened to a level by two steel bands, called stirrups. There is a tremendously strong arm connected with the end of the lever above by a joint somewhat like that of a knee. Under the triangle is a steel cap called a "die stake." In this is fastened the reverse die. The die stake is arranged to rise one-eighth of an inch, and when down rests firmly on the solid foundation of the arch. Above in another triangle is fastened the obverse die. When the knee is straightened the die fits into the collar and presses down upon the reverse die. What an instant before was but a blank, meaningless piece of metal comes out a resplendent double eagle of shimmering gold.

About Eyes.

The eyes of fish and birds are round, with no angles at the corners. The eyes of birds that fly by night are generally about double the size of day birds.

THIS SIMPLE STORY

Reflects Credit on American Courage and Conscience.

There is a good story told of John Hays Hammond, the American, who was implicated in the famous Transvaal conspiracy, writes Richard Harding Davis. Hammond was very ill during his imprisonment, and in consequence was permitted to go to the Cape for his health under a heavy bail. He was at that time under sentence of fifteen years' imprisonment, and the bail was not so heavy as the fine he had still to pay, which amounts to $175,000. He did not give his parole to return to jail, and his failing to have done so would have meant nothing more than the forfeiture of his bail, the amount of which he could very well have afforded to have paid. And when he had once crossed the border of the Transvaal every man he met was his friend. He could on reaching the Cape have stepped upon the first outbound steamer and shaken the dust of the Transvaal from him forever.

"That is the last you will see of Jack Hammond," some one said to Kruger. "I think not," the President answered, "and even if Mr. Hammond would wish to escape, I know Mrs. Hammond, and she is too fine a woman to let him think of it." Two days before his leave had expired Hammond came back to Pretoria and knocked at midnight at the door of the jail for admittance to what, for all he then knew, meant fifteen years of his life in prison, and the jailers were so amazed to see his face through the wicket that when he threw his valise, which he had carefully packed with whisky and cigars for his three fellow prisoners, at one of them, the Boer picked it up without examining it and carried it into the cell which Hammond, Rhodes,

JOHN HAYS HAMMOND.

Phillips and Farrar shared in common. Hammond had gained his temporary liberty because he was ill, and he did not take advantage of that act of kindness on the part of the Boers to fly the country, and so leave his fellow conspirators to suffer a punishment which, if deserved by one, was deserved by all. It was a case of conscience and of moral as well as physical courage.

HERE'S A SPRING SHOE.

It Actually Lifts the Feet and Saves the Wearer from Fatigue.

A spring heel attachment for shoes to aid in walking is one of the latest devices for the comfort of pedestrians. With this attachment the effort of lifting one's foot is practically reduced to a minimum. The spring actually lifts the foot, and the pedestrian does the rest.

This curious device is nothing but a stiff strip of steel about an inch in width and some three inches long. It is first bent double and one end turned upward over the other end, so as to fit it closely to the edge of the heel of the shoe.

The spring is screwed to the heel of any ordinary shoe, and once in place it gives a "spring" to the step, which is of great assistance in walking or running. The idea is taken from the natural action of the muscles of the foot, which are familiar to everybody who has ever tried to run without touching the heel to the ground.

The weight of the body forces the spring close to the heel, and as the step is taken and the foot partially raised from the ground, the spring gives an impetus to the step, and practically forces the body forward. It is claimed by the inventor that the use of this apparently simply device reduces the fatigue of walking one-third. It is practically adapted for use by those who take walking tours during their vacations, and persons whose business necessitates much walking.

THE AUBURN COURIER

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana office as second-class matter.

THURSDAY.....OCTOBER 1, 1896

BRYAN!

William Bryan will address two mammoth audiences at Indianapolis, Tuesday Oct. 6th, afternoon and evening.

Mr. Bryan's Eloquence.

The following has been pronounced one of the finest tributes to the immortality of the soul ever pronounced. It came from the lips of Mr. Bryan when he was in congress and was part of the eulogy on the late Representative George W. Houk of Dayton, O.:

If the Father deigns to touch with divine power the cold and pulseless heart of the buried acorn, and make it to burst forth from its prison walls, will He leave neglected in the earth the soul of man, who was made in the image of his Creator? If He stops to give to the rosebush, whose withered blossoms float upon the autumn breeze the sweet assurance of another springtime, will He withhold the words of hope from the sons of men when the frosts of winter come? If matter, mute and inanimate, though changed by the force of nature into a multitude of forms, can never die, will the spirit of man suffer annihilation after it has paid a brief visit, like a royal guest, to this tenement of clay?

Rather let us believe that He who in His apparent prodigality, wastes not the raindrop, the blade of grass, or the evening's sighing zephyr, but makes them all to carry out His eternal plans, has given immortality to the mortal, and gathered to Himself the generous spirit of our friend.

Jackson Bryan Club.

When the ballots are counted in Jackson township this fall, there is no doubt but what the usual old time democratic majority will be given. A meeting was held at Jackson Center last night, which was addressed by Rev. S. S. Bartlett. The school house was crowded, notwithstanding the fact that the meeting had not been advertised in any way. The speaker gave one of his best talks and at the close a Bryan club was organized. Fifty-seven gentlemen signed the roll as members, thereby pledging themselves to support Bryan and free silver. J. Y. W. McClellan was made president, Tom McNamara vice pres., P. P. Lochner sec., and John Means marshal.

How To Mark Your Ballot.

It is about time to commence educating voters on how to stamp their ballots under our present system of voting. At every election since the adoption of the Australian system many ballots have been cast aside and not counted for the reason that they were not properly stamped. It is not a difficult matter at all to vote under the Australian law. If you desire to vote a straight ticket you simply stamp in the large square at the head of the ticket you wish to vote. That will count one for each of the candidates beneath that square.

If you wish to vote a scratched or split ticket, do not stamp within the large square, but stamp the small square to the left of the name of every man for whom you wish to vote. By following these instructions you can make no mistake.

There will be two tickets this year. One will contain the names of presidential electors and state officers. This will be on red colored paper. The other ticket will contain names of candidates from congressman down to county commissioner. It will be printed on white paper.

When you go into the election room to vote, you will be handed two ballots. You will take these tickets with you into the booth, there stamp them and fold them up separately. You will then return with them and hand them the inspector who will deposit them in the proper ballot boxes.

If you do not fully understand how to mark your ballot you have a right to call upon the clerk to assist you. Should there be anything that you do not fully understand it would be well for you to make some inquiry of your neighbor or some other person who can give you the information desired.

Speeches.

C. M. Brown will address the people at Learned school house in Troy, Oct. 2 in evening.

C. M. Brown at Shugers school house, Oct. 3, evening.

D. M. Link and H. D. Boozer, at Nusbaum's grove near Moores Station, Oct. 5.

Hon. S. S. Shutt, will address the voters at Auburn Junction Oct. 7.

Dr. Nusbaum and Solomon Harding will speak on the issues of the day, at Center school house in Troy township, Oct. 9.

Bell's Letter

The following has been received from Mr. Bell in answer to many inquiries about that now fomous letter:

MR. JAMES A. BARNS,
Auburn Ind.

FORT WAYNE, IND. Sept. 22, 1896.

Dear Sir:—I have received a great number of inquiries concerning the letter received by me, dated New York, August 19, 1896, and signed J. Francis Forsyth.

The letter was received by me in due course of mail, bearing the New York postmark. It was written with typewriter and bore the usual marks of an ordinary business letter, was signed with pen and numerous corrections were interlined also with pen. I do not know why it was sent to me and I have no recollection of ever having met the author personally. I never answered the letter but did what I considered to be my duty viz; gave it to the press for publication and gave it such other publicity as I could. That is absolutely, all I know about the letter or its source and you must draw your own conclusions.

Your truly,
R. C. BELL.

New York, Sept. 21.—The World prints a cablegram from Budapest, Hungary, which follows:

The following cable message, signed by delegates to the international agricultural congress called at Budapest by the Hungarian minister of agricuture, has been sent to the Democratic candidate for president of the Unitee States: "To Mr. William Jennings Bryan, headquarters Democratic party, Chicago:

has secured both in America and in Europe, monetary legislation destructive of the prosperity of your farmers and others.

"Should you be victorous in November we pledge ourselves to spare no effort to bring immediate pressure upon our respective governments to co-operate with the government of your great nation in restoring silver to the world's currency.

"We believe that, failing such restoration, the gold premium throughout all Asia and throughout America will continue to rob the farmer equally of America and Europe of all rewards for his toil, and that your election may avert for Europe serious agrarian and social troubles now pending."

FURNITURE NEVER SO CHEAP.

There has never been a time in the history of the world when Furniture was selling at such low prices. The same thing is true of carpets. You will never have another such an opportunity to buy furniture and Carpets as now. It isn't best for the country that you should have. At Foster's at Fort Wayne, to-day you can buy an entire bedroom suit, finished oak, at $13.50 that before the panic sold for $25. At $20 they sell Oak suits formerly $35. At $25 one formerly $45 to $50. To-day $100 will buy as much of furniture and carpets at Foster's as $200 would in 1862. Its the panic of 1893 and not the "crime of 1873" that has made the trouble. There is a good time coming and not far off. Now is the time to buy. Its a poor time to sell. Take the train to Fort Wayne if in need of either Carpets or Furniture.

—WOOD WANTED. Any wood now due this office on subscription should be brought in as early as convenient before roads get bad.

Fools No One.

The Goshen Time produces a bill of goods sold by a merchant in that city, named Hawks, in 1867, and argues from the high prices of articles named how bad it would be for the farmer, if he had to pay such prices now. He forgets that the farmer would get more for what he raises. Here is the bill.

T. Bane, Dr.

To 6yds muslin @ 20	$ 1 20
1yd calico	08
10yds calico @ 18c	1 80
10yds calico @ 12½c	1 25
3 yds denim @ 30c	90
7yds denim @ 22c	1 54
4yds cotton goods @ 60c	2 40
1½yds muslin @ 16c	28
½lb pepper	25
2 dishes	35
Total of bill	$10 05

And the Times goes on to say:

Here is about what this bill of goods would cost to-day:

To 6yds muslin @ 10c	$ 60
1yd calico	03
10yds calico @ 10c	1 00
10yds calico @ 5c	50
3 yds denim @ 20c	60
2yds denim @ 15c	30
4yds cotton goods @ 40c	1 60
1½yds muslin @ 8c	14
½lb pepper	20
2 dishes	35
Total	$ 5 32

The COURIER will continue this a little farther.

Presuming the above price lists to be both of them correct, how will it come out?

1. The bill in 1867, would be $10.05 which would at that date require for its payment 6. 7 bushels of wheat at the price received then, $1.50 a bushel.

2. The same bill at the prices given for the present time, $5.32, with wheat at highest present price, say 60 cents, would require over 8.8 bushels for its payment.

3. The article in the Times is not likely to deceive any farmer. He knows all about it.

BUTLER.

Died at her residence in Butler Ind. Sept. 22, 1896, after a brief illness, Harriet Wanamaker. Harriet Maze, was born near Dayton, Ohio, Sept. 22, 1836. She was left an orphan at the age of twelve years by the death of her mother and her home thereafter, until her marriage was with strangers. She came to Indiana in 1850, her father soon after purchasing property in Butler. Our older citizens will remember him as the owner of the first flour mill in town destroyed by fire a few years ago. She became the wife of Hartzel Wanamaker, Dec. 31, 1863. To them were born four children, two sons and two daughters all surviving her. Her home has been in Butler for the greater part of her married life. In her early life she exhibited considerable vocal talent; her rendering of "The Girl I Left Behind Me," and "The Old Brown Homestead," often brought tears to the eyes of her auditors. Her funeral took place from the Christian church of which she had been a faithful member from her fifteenth year, on the 24th Rev. Oviatt officiating. Her remains were interred in the Butler cemetery.

Adam Sternberg a soldier in the late war and an old citizen of Butler was buried last Sunday.

The Butler fair proved a grand success, and for numbers perhaps equaled or exceeded any preceding fair ever held in the county. Everybody seemed to enjoy himself and herself and had many words of praise for Butler Free Street Fair.

M. F. Campbell, and wife of Fort Wayne, visited Butler friends during the fair.

Mrs. M. A. Young, of Van Wert, Ohio, attended the fair and is visiting friends here.

Frank Snyder, of Norwalk, Ohio, is visiting Uncle John Champion and others in town.

Thousands of people thronged the new race track to see little Miss Casebeer ride two horses standing on their backs.

The Dispatch.

The Dispatch in reply to our article about 50-cent farms, says "they were reduced to 50 cents by the democrats taking the tariff off of wool."

Let us see how well posted the Dispatch is:

1. The decline in farm values began in 1869, and the wool tariff was not removed till 1893 or 24 years later.

2. Farms are worth about what they were when the tariff was taken off of wool.

3. Wool steadily declined all along, even from '90 to '93 while it had the McKinley tariff, the highest ever known.

4. As only about one farmer in ten raises sheep, how could that industry affect the value of every farm.

Again the Dispatch says, "When our baby lay at death's door did we do any experimenting?"

We answer, "No, we changed doctors." And that's what the people are going to do. Bad laws have led us to financial ruin, getting worse and worse.

Gold Speech Nit.

Daniel N. Foster of Fort Wayne was billed for a Democrat gold speech at Ashley last night. Mr. Foster arrived all right and ate a good hearty supper and then was ready to deliver the shining oration. But to his great surprise nobody came out to hear him, the hall in which the speech was to be made was not even lit up. And still our Republican friends tell us that every railroader is in favor of the gold standard, but they didn't turn out to hear Mr. Foster at Ashley.

WATERLOO.

Miss Patterson accompanied by her father left Waterloo for Chicago, Saturday where they will visit Wm Paterson "son and brother" and his family. They will before returning home visit in Galesburg, Ill., where Ezra Patterson resides and probably also spend some little time at the home of John Patterson at Marion, Iowa.

Mrs. Alonzo Faucett went Wednesday of last week to visit friends north of Waterloo for a few days.

Rev. Klotz and wife drove over to Butler Thursday morning, and spent the day.

John Moshier having traded his farm east of town, for the house and two lots owned by Wm. Rose on Elm street, has moved into his new possession, and contemplates making many improvements. John Frick has bought the farm.

Mr. and Mrs. A V. Sinclar are the happy parents of a daughter, born Sept. 19.

Cement walks are being made in front of the new block. D. L. Leas' is completed.

Mr. and Mrs. Veley on Franklin street are mourning the death of a dear baby girl, who was taken from earth Sept. 20. It was nearly five months old, and had been ill for some time.

Rev. S P. Klotz, and wife of this place, and Mrs. Dell Locke, of Decatur, anticipate spending the winter in Los Angeles. They start in about a month.

Frank Fee, of Butler, and Miss Sadie Hand, of Waterloo, were married by and at the home of Rev. S. P. Klotz Sept. 19. Three Fees, brothers, married to three Hands, sisters.

The various attractions held out, for the republican meeting Saturday evening, drew out a large crowd, notwithstanding the heavy rain.

CONCORD.

Mrs. Wyatt Squires is reported much better.

Mrs. F. Buchanan returned Saturday from her extended visit in Denver, Colorado, the guest of her sister Mrs. M. J. Dawson and her son Harry.

Mr. and Mrs. Sheridan Bone and son Willie, visited relatives in Ft. Wayne Sunday.

Mrs. Nathan Johnson has returned from near Adrain, Mich., being called there by the death of her aged mother Mrs. Howard.

Mrs. Sheldon was in Auburn Saturday.

The rain of Saturday night relieved the farmers of deep concern, as a crust was forming over their wheat fields.

Henry Baker has purchased a large watch dog for in his store.

Mr. and Mrs. Hay, Mr. and Mrs. Orris Grimes, Mrs. Maggie Yates, Laura Hay and husband of Vermontville, Mich., are guests of D. W. Baker.

What The People Say.

—A street fakir has been selling soap and electric belts here for the last two evenings. We don't know the value of the belts, but he sells little cakes of toilet soap for 25 cents, just such as our home merchants sell at 3 for 25 cents. When will people learn that they pay two or three prices, when they buy of strangers?

—Judge McClellan is in receipt of a letter from Chas. H. Bliss now at Pensacola Florida. Mr. Bliss wanted to come back to Indiana and make Bryan speeches. He says there is no need of speeches in Florida as everybody will vote for Bryan and free silver. Mr. Bliss was of the opinion that the Judge was a free silver man.

Dr. Johnston has returned from the meeting of the North Indiana Dental Association at Kendallville. The meeting was well attended. The new officers elected, are: F. T. Brown of Ft. Wayne, pres., S. B. Johnston of Auburn, vice pres., Dr. Werner of Elkhart, sec. The next year meetting will be at Benton Harbor.

Postmaster Brandon informs us that he has secured arrangements for the more satisfactory working of the money order department of the postoffice here. It has been the rule that when the postmaster has accumulated $50 or more, he would have to send it to his place of deposit, which with us is the postoffice at Fort Wayne. This often left him with little or no money, and persons having postal orders would have to wait till the money came in. Now, he has made an arrangement with the Department by which he can draw checks on the First National Bank whenever he has no money in the postoffice. In this way the holders of postal orders, get their cash at once in all cases. It is a good change.

—At Wakarusa in Elkhart county last week, a crowd was waiting for the hour when a political speech was to begin. An attorney representing San Francisco heirs, has been to New York, and brings back word that all who can produce proof of relationship are sure to get a share. There are several in this county who claim to be heirs and so on all over the country, and it looks as if each would get only a little at best. What's the matter of Shooter Bogardus getting a good chunk? Anneke's second husband was a Bogardus.

If your children are subject to croup watch for the first symptom of the disease—hoarseness. If Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is given as soon as the children become hoarse it will prevent the attack. Even after the croupy cough has appeared the attack can always be prevented by giving this remedy. It is also invaluable for colds and whooping cough. For sale by Davenport the druggist. 44

—The attendance yesterday, at the funeral of Eva Ensley was very large, as she and her people have many friends in this county. It was a very sad funeral, to see one so young called hence in the prime of early womanhood. There was a great profusion of choice flowers token of affection by her friends, and the grave in Evergreen was lined with flowers, smilax etc. All Mr. Ensley's people came up with their beloved dead, himself and wife, O. P. Ensley and wife, Oscar and Amber. Of course they all feel the crushing blow by which death took one from the family circle.

—Anti-free silver people ought to think a little before they talk about 50-cent dollars. First, we know, they are also telling that mine owners will get 100 cents for 50 cents worth of silver. And there you are. After government has paid the mide owners 100 cents, the metal at once becomes 50 cents. One of these statements must be false. Take your choice.

—Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Lochner spent Sunday with relatives at Zanesville, Ind., and during our absence some good natured fellow or lady took the liberty to paste a McKinley lithograph in our windows and thereby cover the lithograph of W. J. Bryan, whose face adorns the window in so many residences. We are not at all offended at this little bit of mischief; it only furnishes plenty of amusement.

Eva A. Ensley

Saturday's Daily.

The sad news comes this morning that Eva Ensley, died last evening at the home of her parents in Indianapolis. As our people know, she had been sick for a long time, with but little hope of recovering. The remains will be brought to Auburn for interment arriving here this evening at 7:46 over the Wabash. The funeral will be at Mr. Zent's, at 3:30 to-morrow afternoon. Friends of the family are invited.

Was born in Butler township, DeKalb County, May 27, 1872. Died at Indianapolis Indiana Sept. 25 1896, at 11:55 p. m. Aged 24 years, 3 months and 28 days. At the age of 6 months her parents moved to Auburn where they resided until the spring of 1890, when they moved to Indianapolis, where she resided until her death. Shortly after taking up her residence in the city her health began to fail her which gradually and slowly kept on the decline until death relieved her from her sufferings. The deceased was a member of the Tabernacle Presbyterian church of the city of Indianapolis. The condition of her health prevented her from taking active part in the church work which she greatly regretted. She enjoyed life and lived in hope for brighter days. Her heart was filled with love and kindness and she always enjoyed making her friends and parents happy. At home it was always her pride and ambition to make the surroundings attractive and cheerful for her parents, brothers, sister and friends. She has gone from her earthly home, but she has gone to be with the redeemed of God. The funeral services were conducted Sabbath afternoon at the home of Mr. Isaac Zent, the Rev. Frank C. Colvin of the Presbyterian church officiating. The body was laid to rest in Evergreen cemetery.

Card of Thanks.

Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Ensley and family desire to extend their thanks to the Choir and all friends who so kindly assisted at the funeral of their daughter and sister, Eva.

Business Change

John Kruger is Now Proprietor of the South Side Grocery.

Yesterday another change in business took place, in which John Kruger became proprietor of the South Side Grocery, formerly run by Clyde Brandon. Mr. Kruger has made a phenomenal success in the Auburn Fruit House. He has many customers in the south part of town who will be glad to know that the south side grocery will be stocked up with a large stock of new and fresh groceries. They will be able to buy just as good groceries and at just as low prices at the south side as can be bought at Mr. Kruger's up town store

Later:—Mr. Kruger this afternoon sold the stock of goods to his father, and the south side grocery will now be run by him and his son Billy.

DeKalb Boy.

We have received a copy of the Amoret Beacon a paper published at Amoret, Bates Co. Mo. We were somewhat surprised to see the name of our former Waterloo friend, W. S Baxter, as editor and publisher. We were still more surprised to find that a member of this once strong republican family should be making a hard fight for free silver. But so it is. Will has been for some years disgusted with some of the republican doctrines. We notice also, a well gotten up department of domestic and social matters by "Georgia A. Baxter," by which we suppose is meant Will's better half. May the Beacon shine on, for lo these many years, and guide the weary republicans out of the darkness and into the light.

ALTGELD ON MONEY.

REPLIES TO GOLD ARGUMENTS OF SCHURZ AND COCKRAN.

A Great and Appreciative Audience Hears the Gospel of Free Silver as Expounded by the Illinois Governor in Chicago.

At Central Music Hall.

Gov. Altgeld spoke at Central Music Hall, Chicago, Saturday night in reply to Carl Schurz and Bourke Cockran. He was greeted by a mass of humanity that filled every portion of the hall, and there were thousands outside who clamored for admission, but had to content themselves with hearing lesser orators at overflow meetings. The Governor dealt almost wholly with the money question, and his audience applauded him continuously and gave evidence of its deep-seated appreciation of the speaker whenever opportunity offered. The Governor said:

"I hold in my hand a printed copy of the speech of Mr. Carl Schurz, delivered in this city two weeks ago, and a like copy of the speech of Mr. Cockran, delivered one week ago. Both have been advertised as the ablest arguments in favor of the gold standard that have yet been made. We are warranted in concluding that every argument and every fact that can be marshaled upon that side of the question is contained in these speeches.

"It would have given great relief to the minds of thousands of patriotic men to have had presented some balm for the ills of our land, and as I love my country more than party or honors, I am sorry to have to say to you that in these long speeches, containing as we are told the law and the gospel of the gold standard, there is not a line, not a sentence, not a syllable that offers any hope to the American people.

"The straight-out adherents of McKinley have a panacea. They realize the unsatisfactory conditions in our land and propose to remedy them by an increase of the tariff. They feel that some hope must be offered to the American people, and, having nothing else to present, they ask us to again try the idea of increasing the tariff tax.

"They ask the people to shut their eyes to the fact that the distress from which we suffer exists all over Europe as well as this country; that it exists in the countries having a high tariff and in countries having a moderate tariff and in countries having no tariff at all, and is clearly due to some cause that has no connection with the tariff.

Recalls Homestead Riots.

"They ask us to shut our eyes to the fact that it was in the spring of 1892, while the McKinley law was in force and while Mr. Harrison was President, that the famous Homestead labor riots occurred, being among the most bloody that ever took place in this country; that at that time the conditions of the laborer were rapidly getting worse and the prices of American products were steadily falling. They ask us to shut our eyes to the fact that the McKinley law for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, produced a deficit to the United States treasury of $70,000,000. They ask us to shut our eyes to the fact that neither the laboring man of this country nor of Europe has derived any substantial benefit from the tariff, because the employer is always permitted to fill his shop with cheap labor. They ask us to shut our eyes to the fact that the tariff is no longer a matter of theory but a matter of history. It has been tried and it has been found wanting. Consequently with the adherents of McKinley it is a question in this campaign of seeing how often they can fool the people.

"Both Mr. Schurz and Mr. Cockran have been avowed enemies of this tariff. They cannot and they do not offer it as a remedy for any of the ills of the land, and, having no other remedy to offer and seeing no prospect of a change for the better under existing policies, they simply tell the patient that if he will only lie still he will suffer less than if he attempts to bestir himself.

"In considering the question as to whether the demonetization of silver in the world reduced prices they shrewdly leave Europe out of consideration, shut their eyes to the fact that the effects produced there are the same as those produced here, treat the whole question as though it were local to our country, and then argue that inasmuch as there had not been many silver dollars coined in our country, and those that were coined went abroad, because of the fact that they commanded a premium of 2 per cent.; that, therefore, the demonetization of silver in the United States could not have affected prices, because there was scarcely any silver here to drive out of circulation.

Coinage in the United States.

"Now let us look at the facts in regard to the coinage of silver in this country. It is true that Jefferson for a time suspended the coinage of silver dollars. The reason was that half dollars were a full legal tender for any amount, just as much as dollars were, and, inasmuch as the country was new and poor, it was thought that half dollars would be more convenient in circulation than dollars, and inasmuch as they could be used in payment of debts the same as dollars it made no difference, but the coinage was on the same basis as that of gold, and any man having silver bullion could convert it into money, just the same as though it were gold, and the treasury tables given out at Washington show that from 1806 down to 1873 there were $154,318,071 of silver coined in this country. In 1871 there were 1,117,127 of silver dollars coined—not subsidary coins, but dollars—and in 1872 there were 1,115,600 silver dollars coined, being nearly twice the number ever before coined in one year. Bear this in mind, the two years before silver was stricken down there were nearly twice as many silver dollars coined as in any previous year. Mr. Schurz knew these facts, and yet he presents his figures in such a way as to make the impression that no silver had been coined in this country, and therefore we demonetized nothing.

"His next claim is that we have had more money per capita in circulation in 1895 than we had prior to the demonetization, and that, therefore, there was no reduction in the volume of money, and that consequently demonetization had nothing to do with the fall of prices. He says that in 1895 we had a total of $2,217,000,000 in circulation, making $22.96 per capita, while in 1873 we had only $18.04 per capita in circulation.

Treasury Figures Wrong.

"Now, this is based on the tables given out by one branch of the treasury department, that is, the director of the mint, and sometimes copied in the reports of other branches of the treasury; but they emanate originally from the office of the director of the mint, and they are not only wrong, but are well known to be wrong. In his report for the year 1892 the director of the mint explains the origin of these tables. They ascertained what specie there was in the country at the time of resumption, and they have added to it year by year the coinage and what the custom house records show to have been imported, and they have deducted only what the records show to have been used in the arts and what the records show to have been exported, and they assume that all the balnce is still in circulation. They make no allowance for what was carried over our southern boundary in a quarter of a century unrecorded, nor for what was carried over our northern boundary during that time unrecorded, nor for what was carried to China during that time, nor for what was used in the arts for a quarter of a century without a record having been made of it, and they make no allowance for what was carried to Europe in the pockets of American citizens traveling abroad, and of which no record is made; yet in one of his reports the director of the mint says that it was estimated that the American travelers in Europe during the year of the Paris exposition spent $90,000,000. Of course the most of that we may presume was in the shape of letters of credit, and therefore a record was made of it, but no record was made of what they carried in their pockets. Thus you see that the tables become utterly worthless. Again, in regard to paper money, they assume that every dollar that was ever issued by the government and is not shown by the records at Washington to have been canceled is still in circulation, a proposition too absurd to be discussed.

The Comptroller's Estimates.

"But the treasury department gives out another report that is accurate, and it tells an entirely different story in regard to the amount of money we have in our country. This report is given out by the comptroller of the currency who has supervision of the national banks.

"I will give you this in the language of the comptroller: 'The cash held by national banks on July 11, and by other banks about that date, amounted to $631,111,290, classified as follows: Gold, $127,621,000; silver, $15,594,037; specie not classified, $19,298,363; paper currency, $342,739,129; fractional currency, $1,023,442; and cash not classified, $124,835,220.' The reports for several prior years were practically the same. At about that time there was in the United States treasury, all told, $329,517,713 available for circulation. Adding this sum to what there was then in all the banks of the United States it makes $950,629,000. This constituted all of the money in sight in this country except what there was then in the pockets of the people.

"There is no way of ascertaining definitely just what this would amount to. Good judges have asserted that when you take into consideration all of the poor laboring classes of this country and of the colored people of the South, and the fact that the farmers had very little money, that an average of $5 per household would be a full average, and as there were then about 14,000,000 families that would make $70,000,000. If you say we have underestimated the amount in the pockets of the people then add another $5 for each household and it will make only $70,000,000 more, and still be only half the sum named by Mr. Schurz.

Not Enough Money to Do Business.

"The fact is, there is not enough money in this country at present to do its business. In all of the agricultural States of the South, the Mississippi valley and the West, there is the greatest scarcity of money. The banks are unable to furnish what is needed, and even in the money centers a very little disturbance renders the banks helpless. Mr. Schurz says there are oceans of money lying idle, and then in another sentence he says that gold is now leaving our country and going to Europe because it finds profitfiable employment there. Naturally you ask if there are oceans of money lying idle in those money centers, then how can money going there from here find profitable employment there.

"In passing, I call your attention again to the fact that, on the 11th day of July, 1895, all of the banks in the United States together held only $127,629,099 of gold, and that sum, added to the $100,000,000 of gold that is supposed to be constantly the treasury, constituted all the gold there was in sight in the United States. No sensible man now claims the poor people are hoarding gold; the fact is that even rich people rarely get to see it. In depicting the horrors which will come upon our country in the event of the election of Mr. Bryan, Mr. Schurz points out in a thrilling manner how $600,000,000 of gold would instantly take wings and vanish. It is one of the stock arguments met everywhere, and it is iterated and reiterated by the bankers themselves. Now, in view of the facts published by the treasury department itself, and which will not be challenged by gold standard people, I am warranted in asserting that these bankers know that there is scarcely $200,000,000 of gold in the entire country, including what there is in the United States treasury.

No Overproduction of Silver.

"But the main fabric of the whole speech of Mr. Schurz is based upon the theory of overproduction. He insists that there is a fall in the price of silver and that this is due to overproduction. You will readily see that if there was the same increase in the production of both metals, then there was no reason why the relations which they bore to each other, or the market ratio which they bore to each other, should change. Mr. Schurz knew this. Why didn't he state it that way? Because he knew the facts were against him. He wanted to make an impression which he could not make without a suppression of part of the case.

"According to the tables issued by the treasury department Aug. 16, 1893, showing the total production of gold and silver in the world at coinage value, it appears that from the year 1792, when our monetary system was founded, to the year 1852, the time of the great gold discoveries, the total production of silver in the world, rating it at coinage value, was $1,769,197,000, and the total production of gold in the world during that time was $960,236,000; that is, on the average there was just about twice as much silver produced as gold during that time. The production of each metal varied, of course, during the different years, and yet the market ratio between the two metals remained practically the same during all that time. The tables giving the market prices show that during those sixty years there was a variance of only seven-tenths of one point, or just about the cost of exchange.

"The same table shows that from 1852 to 1873 the total gold production of the world was $2,516,575,000, while the total silver production was only $989,225,000; that is, there was two and a half times as much gold produced as silver, yet the market ratio remained unchanged during these twenty-one years just as it had during the period of sixty years when there was twice as much silver as gold produced. Again, the same tables show that from 1873 to 1892, inclusive, the total gold production of the world was $2,176,505,000, while the total silver production was $2,347,087,000; that is, the production of gold was nearly equal to that of silver. During the first two periods silver was a money metal. During the last period it was not. Inasmuch as silver did not fall in value, as measured in gold, during the sixty years in which there was twice as much silver produced as there was gold, it is clear that, had silver not been demonetized, it would not have fallen when the gold production was nearly equal to that of silver, after 1873.

"Again, silver has not fallen in comparison with other property. By taking the average price of all commodities known to the market it is found that a pound of silver will buy as great an amount of commodities as ever. Silver occupies the same relation to the products of the earth and to labor to-day that it did before. It is gold that has gone up. The law by striking down the competition has given gold a monopoly. Practically the gold dollar is a 200-cent dollar. Nominally it still has only 100 cents in it, but it takes 200 cents' worth of commodities to get one, when measured by bluetallic prices.

Mr. Schurz' Wage Figures.

"Mr. Schurz next tried to convey the impression that wages have not fallen, and were, therefore, not affected by the demonetization of silver; and he says that wages have risen more than 60 per cent. since 1860. See the ingenuity of this and ask yourselves whether this is a fair way of representing that question. All the world knows that wages have nearly doubled since 1890. The question is, how have wages been affected by the fact that this country and Europe demonetized silver and reduced the volume of money in the world between 1873 and 1879?

"This subject of wages was carefully inquired into in the year 1891 by a committee appointed by the United States Senate. John G. Carlisle was a member of that committee. It made a long and full report, and it showed that between 1840 and 1873 wages had just about doubled, and then the report says: 'After 1873 there was a marked falling off.' The report goes on and shows that toward 1890 there was a slight rise in wages above the point they had recently fallen to, but never reached the point they had occupied before, and that soon thereafter a decline set in, which continued.

"Mr. Schurz tells us that if the demonetization of silver had anything to do with the fall in prices, then the fall should have come instantly. I ask you to consider that statement a moment and then tell me whether it is not contrary to the universal experience of mankind. Owners of property do not accept lower prices until they are obliged to.

"Further, silver was not demonetized by all of the countries at once. Germany set her face toward demonetization in 1871, but did not enact her law until 1873; our government acted in 1873, the other nations followed later; Holland acted in 1875, Russia in 1876, and Austria did not adopt the gold standard until 1879. It is true that owing to the fact that Germany, Italy and some other countries drew heavily upon the principal gold market of the world, which is London, there were serious monetary disturbances in London and some portions of Europe almost every year after 1873, and prices and consequently business were seriously affected in Europe during the year.

Production and Price of Wheat.

"In attempting to account for the fall in price of property, Mr. Schurz selects wheat as an illustration, and he attempts to show that there has been a great increase in the annual production of wheat; that we have not only opened the whole Northwest, which is producing wheat, but that our farmers have to compete with the wheat of India, Argentine republic and of Russia, and he assumes that therefore the price of wheat had to fall.

"There are three things to be said in answer to this. First, increase in production does not produce a fall in price, provided there is an equal increase in consumption. This is self-evident, and Mr. Giffen, the statistician of the British Board of Trade, has, on different occasions, pointed out that for more than fifteen years prior to 1873 the increase in the production of nearly all commodities in the world has been greater on the average, year by year, than the increase has been in any year since 1873, and yet, as he says, during all of those years prior to 1873 prices kept constantly rising, notwithstanding the enormously increased production, while since 1873 prices have been steadily falling, notwithstanding the fact the increase was not as great as it formerly was.

"The second observation is that wheat has not fallen in price any more than all other commodities; has fallen no more than wages. It is not contended that Russia, India and the Argentine republic have entered into competition in the production of all other products which our people put upon the market.

"These two points show that Mr. Schurz is entirely wrong in his theories. The third observation is that he is entirely wrong in his facts.

"The fact is that the world's wheat crop has remained substantially the same for sixteen years. In 1880 it was 2,280,000,000 bushels. In 1885 it was 2,108,000,000 bushels, and that was the lowest crop of a number of years. In 1895 the crop was very large and amounted to 2,553,000,000 bushels. This year the world's production is 120,000,000 less than last year, and the total production of the world is smaller than it has been for six years, yet wheat is lower than ever before.

Result of Opening the Mints.

"We say that opening the mints to silver will add to the stock of primary or legal tender money, and this will again be loaded with credits which will make possible an increase of business twenty times as great as the increase in money. We sometimes hear it asked, 'How will you get that money into circulation? Or what good will this increase in money do you if you have not anything to get it with, if you have no property or any collateral?' That question is purely American and shows that in some things at least we are yet new.

"It needs but a moment's reflection to see that the additional money will get into circulation just as the money that is in circulation got there, and that when men again coin silver bullion into dollars or get certificates for it, which are legal tender, which can be used in paying taxes, which can be used in paying duties at the custom house, which can be used in paying debts, they are not going to let money lie idle because it will not make it profitable any longer to have it so. Money will cease appreciating in value then and they will go to building houses, building shops, building railroads, manufacturing and doing business; they will start activity in a thousand channels and a thousand fields. That will be the result. There will be an immediate demand for brains and muscle. There will be an immediate demand for engineers, for skilled men, for clerks, for mechanics and for day laborers.

"But perhaps the strangest part of Mr. Schurz' speech is that which emphatically indorses and commends the bond-issuing policy of the present administration. During times of profound peace in less than four years the national debt of this country has been increased $260,000,000. It was done for the sole purpose of maintaining the gold standard by the government and of paying gold on obligations, which on their face were payable not in gold but in coin, which meant that they could be paid in other metal, which the debtor, that is, the government, might select. This has been the law and the practice for centuries, and the governments of Europe always act upon it. Mr. Schurz suggests no change of policy and he offers no remedy; therefore, the existing conditions are to be continued, and if it was necessary to issue $260,000,000 of bonds in the last three years, we are warranted in assuming that it will be necessary to issue a similar amount in the next three years, and that this will continue to go on.

The Nation's Honor.

"Mr. Schurz and Mr. Cockran wring their hands in horror over what they call the prospect of sullying the national honor and paying our obligations or the interest on our obligations in anything else than gold, and they point to the fact that in 1890 Congress declared practically that it was the policy of this government to keep everything on a gold basis; that the world had accepted this, and for us to disregard that declaration would place us in the light of repudiators and dishonest men before the world. Just see how little substance it takes to enable a rhetorician to fill the air with ghosts. When was our great debt created? Long before 1890. And upon what kind of money did we get for the bonds we sold? We got paper for some and gold and silver for the remainder. Neither Mr. Schurz nor any other mortal has been able to point out wherein you wrong a creditor when you pay him in exactly the same money that he gave you.

"I will agree with Mr. Schurz that a creditor should not be paid in money the purchasing power of which is much less than was that of the money that he gave to the debtor, but if it is dishonest to pay a creditor in money that is cheaper than the money he gave the debtor I ask you and ask the American people whether it is not dishonest to compel a debtor to pay a creditor in money that has twice the purchasing power as had the money which he got from the creditor.

"From Jan. 1, 1879, to Jan. 1, 1891, only a little over $34,000,000 of greenbacks were presented for redemption, or an average of a little over $2,500,000 a year.

"At that time Mr. Foster and the Harrison administration yielded to the influence of the Eastern bankers and ordered treasury notes to be redeemed in gold alone, and the Cleveland administration did the same. This was in the fall of 1891, and see what has happened since then: During the four years following that date $351,000,000 of greenbacks and treasury notes were presented for redemption and redeemed, and to carry out this policy of redeeming these notes in gold President Cleveland issued the $260,000,000 of bonds.

"Maj. McKinley recently told some gentlemen that he thought it was more important to this country that we should open the mills to the laborer than to open the mints to the mine owners. This is an artful statement, calculated to deceive. Suppose he is taken at his word and every mill owner in America opens up his mills, how long will they run; and if they are obliged to shut down why will they be? Because there is no market for the things they make, and I say to Maj. McKinley that the only key that will open the mills and keep them open is an increase in the volume of money in this country.

"But, says some one, if you add silver to the volume of money, will you not be injuring our own local creditors who have money loaned out? I say no; emphatically no. No creditor, be he banker or private individual, can possibly benefit or profit by having universal bankruptcy all around him. Every creditor, be he banker or merchant or private individual, does profit by having general activity around.

The Masses and the Classes.

"In all ages and in all countries the men who are in the wrong deprecate discussion. In no country have dishonest policies sought the sun, and no organization of highbinymen has as yet petitioned for electric light. The man who has no argument seizes the nearest epithet and hurls it. These observations are singularly applicable to this gold standard movement. It is the hyena that has sucked the blood of commerce and left the prostrate form of labor by the roadside. It has rendered this nation helpless, and when the people try to learn the cause of this distress, when an effort is made to diagnose the patient, then there is a fierce howl. The gold standard people find that the acts are against them. They are obliged to resort to deception and sophistry to prevent the people from putting an end to this policy; therefore, they decreate discussion. Unwilling to confess the truth, they talk about rousing the masses, etc. The fight is as old as human greed; as old as human selfishness. For twenty years prior to 1861 the slave power deprecated discussion, even in the North, where there were no slaves, and they put their objection on the ground that it prejudiced the masses against the classes. There never yet was a great wrong or a great abuse but what objected to investigation and discussion.

"It is a sad sight to see this grand century draw to a close and give such unmistakable evidence of degeneration of American manhood as we have recently seen. In 1776 less than 3,000,000 men, who were poor and even despised by the world, declared that they were not only free, but that they were independent of every other nation on the globe. In 1896 when we have 70,000,000 of people and are admittedly the richest and most powerful nation on the globe, when we are admittedly the most enterprising people on the globe, one of the greatest political parties of the nation in its convention at St. Louis declared to the world in substance that, while we might be free, we were dependent; that while a particular financial policy would be beneficial to this nation we could not have it until Europe consented to give it to us. Mark Hanna is raising millions of dollars with which to debauch and degrade the American voter—with which to debauch and degrade the American citizen—in order that he shall approve of this degenerate policy.

Republic in Peril.

"If the gold standard is to be maintained, if prices are not only to remain low, but to go on falling while the interest on our enormous debts has to be met, then the producing power of this nation will in time be exhausted in the mere effort to meet the fixed charges. Our farmers, our mechanics, and our laboring men will cease to be high-spirited, free men who are proud of their citizenship, and they will sink to a lower status. They will sink to the status of the men who till the fields of Europe or the valley of the Nile; they will not be able to educate their families; we will no longer have that patriotic yeomanry which has been the support of this nation in every crisis. If this gold standard is to be maintained, then these conditions are near at hand, and when they come, then the days of the republic will be over.

"In 1861, when the drum beats called you to arms, you were not asked whether you were a Republican or a Democrat, you were not asked whether you were a Whig or an Independent; you were only asked whether you loved the flag and were ready to fight for it. In 1896 the question is not whether you are a Republican or a Democrat, whether you are a Populist or a Prohibitionist; the question is, Do you love republican institutions and will you help maintain them."

BISMARCK FOR BIMETALLISM.

He Also Thinks the United States Should Take the Initial Step.

In a speech at Dallas, Texas, Gov. Culberson read the following significant correspondence between himself and Prince Bismarck on the money question:

Prince Bismarck—Sir: The great question of finance is now of supreme interest to the people of the United States. It is presented in various forms, but in a general way it may be said to be, first, whether the United States shall adopt the single gold standard, or, second, whether they shall adopt bimetallism, with both gold and silver as the standard or primary money. The argument in favor of each is well known to you, but it is particularly insisted that we should adopt the policy of bimetallism, because the supply of gold in the world for coinage is insufficient to meet the demand, or because such a standard will still further depress the values of all property.

"Which, in your judgment, is the best policy to adopt, the gold standard or bimetallism, giving your reasons?

"What effect, in your judgment, will the immediate adoption of bimetallism by the United States have on the cause of bimetallism in Germany and other great commercial nations?

C. A. CULBERSON, Governor of Texas.

In reply Prince Bismarck said:

Friederichsruhe.—I hold that this is the very hour that would be advisable to bring about between the nations chiefly engaged in the world's commerce a mutual agreement in favor of the establishment of bimetallism. The United States are freer by far in their movements than any nation of Europe, and hence if the people of the United States should find it compatible with their interests to take independent action in the direction of bimetallism, I cannot but believe that such action would exert a most salutary influence upon the consummation of international agreement.

The Fabled Salamander.

Chingintalas is also a province at the verge of the Desert, and lying between northwest and north. It has an extent of sixteen days' journey, and belongs to the Great Kaan, and contains numerous towns and villages. There are three different races of people in it—Idolaters, Saracens and some Nestorian Christians. At the northern extremity of this province there is a mountain in which are excellent veins of steel and ondanique. And you must know that in the same mountain there is a vein of the substance from which Salamander is made. For the real truth is that the Salamander is no beast, as they allege in our part of the world, but is a substance found in the earth; and I will tell you about it.

Everybody must be aware that it can be no animal's nature to live in fire, seeing that every animal is composed of all the four elements. Now I, Marco Polo, had a Turkish acquaintance of the name of Zurficar, and he was a very clever fellow. And this Turk related how he had lived three years in that region on behalf of the Great Kaan, in order to procure those Salamanders for him. He said that the way they got them was by digging in that mountain till they found a certain vein. The substance of this vein was then taken and crushed, and when so treated it divides as it were into fibres of wool, which they set forth to dry. When dry, these fibres were pounded in a great copper mortar, and then washed, so as to remove all the earth, and to leave only the fibres like fibres of wool. These were then spun, and made into napkins. When first made, these napkins are not very white, but by putting them into the fire for a while they come out as white as snow. And so again whenever they become dirty they are bleached by being put in the fire.

Now this, and naught else, is the truth about the Salamander, and the people of the country all say the same. Any other account of the matter is fabulous nonsense. And I may add that they have at Rome a napkin of this stuff, which the Grand Kaan sent to the Pope.—St. Nicholas.

The Customs of the Tartars.

Now that we have begun to speak of the Tartars, I have plenty to tell you on that subject. The Tartar custom is to spend the winter in warm plains, where they find good pasture for their cattle, whilst in summer they betake themselves to a cool climate among the mountains and valleys, where water is to be found as well as woods and pastures.

Their houses are circular, and are made of wands covered with felts. These are carried along with them whithersoever they go; for the wands are so strongly bound together, and likewise so well combined, that the frame can be made very light. Whenever they erect these huts the door is always to the south. They also have wagons covered with black felt so efficaciously that no rain can get in. These are drawn by oxen and camels, and the women and children travel in them. The women do the buying and selling, and whatever is necessary to provide for the husband and household; for the men all lead the life of gentlemen, troubling themselves about nothing but hunting and hawking, and looking after their goshawks and falcons, unless it be the practice of warlike exercises.

They live on the milk and meat which their herds supply, and on the produce of the chase; and they eat all kinds of flesh, including that of horses and dogs, and Pharaoh's rats, of which last there are great numbers in burrows on those plains.—St. Nicholas.

The Emperor of Austria likes spaetzle, a kind of macaroni, and apple wine, while the food of the Empress consists of cold meats, fruits, the juice of raw beefsteak and tea. She is very careful of her diet, as she is solicitous to preserve her figure.

Canada proposes to erect a suitable monument to John and Sebastian Cabot at Bristol, England, in commemoration of the voyage they took in 1497, starting from that port and ending in the discovery of the Canadian coast.

ANIMALS' ILLUSIONS.

Birds Are More Commonly the Victims.

Birds are perhaps more commonly the victims of illusions than other animals, their stupidity about their eggs being quite remarkable. Last year, for instance, a hen got into a pavilion of a ladies' golf club and began to sit on a golf ball in a corner, for which it made a nest with a couple of pocket handkerchiefs. But many quadrupeds are not only deceived for the moment by reflections, shadows and such unrealities, but often seem victims to illusions largely developed by the imagination.

The horse, for instance, is one of the bravest of animals when face to face with dangers which it can understand, such as the charge of an elephant or a wild boar at bay. Yet the courageous and devoted horse, so steadfast against the dangers he knows, is a prey to a hundred terrors of the imagination due to illusions, mainly those of sight, for shying, the minor effect of these illusions, and "bolting," in which panic gains complete possession of his soul, are caused, as a rule, by mistakes as to what the horse sees, and not by misinterpretation of what he hears. It is noticed, for instance, that many horses which shy usually start away from the objects on one side more frequently than from objects on the other. This is probably due to defects in the vision of one or other eye.

In nearly all cases of shying the horse takes fright at some unfamiliar object, though this is commonly quite harmless, such as a wheelbarrow upside down, a freshly felled log or a piece of paper rolling before the wind. This instantly becomes an "illusion," is interpreted as something else, and it is a curious question in equine neuropathy to know what it is that the horse figures these harmless objects to be. When Russian ponies first began to be shipped to Harwich they usually objected to pass near a donkey. This reluctance was explained on the hypothesis that the ponies seldom saw donkeys in Russia and mistook them for bears.—Spectator.

SAVED HER HOME.

Mrs. Handerkin Rode Forty Miles and Raised Money to Pay a Mortgage.

West Berkeley, Cal., has a heroine in the person of Mrs. Anna Handerkin—a heroine of a new, but nevertheless admirable, description. She is the wife of a young man formerly well known as a local politician, but who, for several months past, has been bordering upon imbecility and has been unable to work or attend to any kind of business. When Handerkin was a guard at the Midwinter Fair, in full possession of his mental faculties, he made a note to the Berkeley Bank of Savings for $450, giving a mortgage on his home. Some time after this his mind gave way, and since that time he has been unable to provide for his family or make provision for the cancellation of the debt. The time came at last when the mortgagee demanded the money and none was forthcoming. Handerkin was a mental wreck, his wife, overpowered with her cares and her sorrow, could do nothing to avert the blow, and the Berkeley bank brought suit to foreclose. Thursday the case was set for trial.

MRS. HANDERKIN.

Mrs. Handerkin hoped against hope from the day the note matured that she could gain time to raise the money to keep the roof over the heads of her husband and herself. She begged for the one and sought for the other. She had no success in either case, and had almost abandoned herself to absolute despair until Wednesday afternoon, when hope gleamed anew. Something like an inspiration came to her, one of those rifts in the cloud of poverty which let in a promise of sunshine, however so weak. She knew that she must have the money in Oakland before 10 o'clock Thursday or else default would be taken and her home would be another's. Twenty miles away, at San Pablo, she bethought her of a sister who might help her if she would. She resolved to try her. Then she made hasty preparations for her journey. At midnight, having borrowed a team from a neighbor, she started for San Pablo, twenty miles away. Along a lonesome road, in the chill moonlight, she drove as fast as the animals would go.

Good fortune was with her. Without a slip or a mishap she reached the quiet town and aroused her relatives, upon whose charity she was about to throw herself. Her story was soon told, and then came a hearty response. Early next morning, sleepless with excitement, worn and wan with her efforts, Mrs. Handerkin appeared at the office of Attorney W. H. Waste. On his desk she counted out the money. As she got the receipt she told the story of her ride in the silent moonlight. The lawyer dismissed the case.

BERTRAM A. HART.

Young Athlete Who Has Obtained a National Reputation.

Few athletes have attained the prominence of a national reputation in so short a time as Bertram A. Hart, who won the championship of America in the one mile swimming race at Wayne, Pa., near Philadelphia. Before the championship events at Wayne, Hart was little known excepting in certain parts of the West, although those who knew him or had seen him perform in the water realized he had a great aquatic future before him. The best thing he had done up to the time he went east as a representative of the Chicago Athletic Association was a victory at Oconomowoc, Wis., when he swam fast enough to justify the many good opinions that were expressed about him. Hart was born in London, England, in 1870, and took to swimming naturally at an early age. He showed such good form when 10 years old that he was entered in the half-mile race for the championship of England. He was not fast enough to finish better than fourth, however, in a large field. That was considered an excellent performance for so young a man. He tried again the following year, 1890, in the same fixture, but could not improve his position, again finishing fourth after a desperate race, in which the winner came close to record time. His parents then came to America, going first to the South and a year later to Chicago. He uses a long overhand stroke in his races, and during a stroke his entire body and head are submerged. He obtains breath by bringing his head out of the water at the completion of the powerful kick with the legs. His endurance is marvelous and easily accounts for his having American records to his credit.

and has made considerable wealth. He is the father of a handsome Albino child. It was with great difficulty that a photograph of Dick and his child was secured, as the Indians are very superstitious of a camera.

Meanest Man on Earth.

The meanest man has again been discovered, this time by a Syracuse hotel clerk, who relates to a reporter how a recent hunchback guest played a scurvy trick on a waiter and caused the latter to lose faith in the old superstition that to touch a hunchback's hump brings good luck. When the guest first entered the dining-room, after having been assigned to his seat, he took from his pocket a $5 gold piece and told the waiter to look at it carefully, stating that he proposed staying at the hotel for a few days and remarking that if he received good service the waiter would see the coin again. The hunchback man stayed nearly a week and received each morning for breakfast extra choice cuts and various other little attentions from the ambitious waiter. When he had finished his last meal he called the waiter and, showing him the gold piece, asking if he remembered his previous remark. "Oh, yes," replied the waiter. "Well," said the hunchbacked guests, "I always keep my promises. I have had good service and am going away now. Take a good look at the coin, for it is the last time you will ever see it."—Syracuse Post.

Pure Gold.

Gold, when refined from all impurities and alloys of inferior metals, is denominated pure. This means gold of twenty-four carats, and this is the recognized standard by the mint master and dealers in gold. As a matter of fact, however, there is no gold so pure. Gold of twenty-two carats is about as pure as it can be got. It has two parts of silver or one part of silver and one part of copper. The copper darkens the color of gold, while silver lightens it in color. Twenty-three-carat gold is occasionally seen, which means a half carat of silver and of copper. Ordinarily eighteen-carat gold is the best gold that can be had. Certainly it is the best for jewelry, for pure gold, as it is called, is too soft and will wear away much faster than the owners of it desire.

A Sea Hog Captured in Jersey.

A strange animal was captured in Raritan Bay, off Keyport shore, by Capt. A. Walling in a seine net Thursday. The animal is 6 feet long and 3 feet in diameter at the center, tapering to a tail, on the end of which is a bunch of heavy fins. The head is large and resembles that of a huge pug dog. The animal has a coat of fine silky hair and growls like a dog.

It was reported about the country that the sea serpent had been captured and people flocked to see the freak. Capt. Seeley of Way Lake calls the animal a sea hog. It is on exhibition at Keyport.—New Brunswick Home News.

A Billion.

In this country a billion is considered to be one thousand million—1,000,000,000; in England it is considered to be one million million—1,000,000,000,000.

TIRED SALESWOMEN.

EMPLOYERS SHOULD BE MORE CONSIDERATE.

Interesting Statement by a Young Lady in Brooklyn.

In the vast retail establishments of large cities, many women are employed as saleswomen.

Men formerly held the positions that women now hold, and while women's organism is less strong than men's they are expected to do the same work. Their duties compel them to be on their feet from morning to night, and many of them, in a short time, contract these distressing complaints called "female diseases."

Then occur irregularities, suppressed or painful menstruation, weakness, indigestion, leucorrhœa, general debility and nervous prostration.

They are beset with such symptoms as dizziness, faintness, lassitude, excitability, irritability, nervousness, sleeplessness, melancholy, "all-gone" and "want-to-be-left-alone" feelings, blues and hopelessness.

In such cases there is one tried and true remedy. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once removes such troubles. The following is a sample:

"My dear Mrs. Pinkham:—After writing you, and before your answer came, I was too miserable to go to the store, and so lost my position. That was five weeks ago. I am now back again in my old place, and never felt so well in all my life. The bearing-down pains and whites have left me, and I am not a bit nervous or blue. Life looks brighter to me. I don't get tired, my temper is real sweet, and I could scream right out sometimes for joy. Your Vegetable Compound is my standby. You don't know how thankful I am to you for saving me from suffering.

Every woman in my position should know of your wonderful remedy. I never saw you, but I love you for being so good to me."—EDITH ——W. 6th Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills, which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge, that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness without debilitating the organs on which it acts. GENUINE DR. ISAAC THOMPSON'S EYE WATER

TENDERNESS.

Not unto every heart is God's good gift
Of simple tenderness allowed; we meet
With love in many fashions when we lift
First to our life's waters, bitter-sweet.
Love comes upon us with resistless power
Of curbless passion, and with headstrong will;
It plays around like April's breeze and shower,
Or calmly flows, a rapid stream, and still
It comes with the blessedness unto the heart
That welcomes it aright, or—bitter fate!—
It wrings the bosom with so fierce a smart
That love, we cry, is crueler than hate.
And then, ah me! When love has ceased to bless,
Our broken hearts cry out for tenderness!

We long for tenderness like that which hung
About us, lying on our mother's breast;
A selfish feeling, that no pen or tongue
Can praise aright, since silence sings its best;
A love, as far removed from passion's heat
As from the chilliness of its dying fire;
A love to lean on when the failing feet
Begin to totter, and the eyes to tire.
In youth's bright heydey hottest love we seek,
The reddest rose we grasp—but when it dies,
God grant that later blossoms, violets meek,
May spring for us beneath life's autumn skies;
God grant some loving one be near to bless
Our weary way with simple tenderness!

A "SAFE" AFFAIR.

Philip Marsden, senior partner of Marsden & Rylotty, bankers, sat alone one evening in his counting house. The season had been a very prosperous one, for much money had changed hands through the unsettled state of the public mind, occasioned by bank failures and the explosions of public companies, but Marsden & Rylotty's bank had stood unshaken, for it was conducted upon a sound financial basis, with a large capital, and had become quite an old-established institution.

In consequence of the aforesaid failures, the receipts at Marsden's had expanded enormously, and Mr. Philip, whose heart and soul were in the life-long work which his great grandfather founded, frequently drove across and stayed behind for an hour or so of late to glance through the transactions of the day carefully and quietly. It was perhaps a little indiscreet so far as his health was concerned, for Philip was traveling toward the "sundown" of life, having passed his three score years and ten. His medical adviser had frequently enjoined him to avoid mental or physical exertion, but when the banker laughed and pooh-poohed the idea the doctor, with a merry twinkle in his eye, prophesied that Marsden would assuredly die in the harness.

The latter almost believed it, too, while admitting that his intellect was not so keen, his judgment and discriminating faculties not quite so clear, nor his strength what it was some forty years back. He had been a master financier in his early days at the bank, conjuring with monetary problems as boys do with marbles, and giving the strictest attention to the work and to the secure custody of the documents and cash within its walls. Some very ingenious devices in the construction of the building and its rooms were attributable to his foresight, artifice and care. Marsden was a dear old gentleman, genial, happy, and exceedingly kind to the staff in his employ, who, in return, performed their duties to the very letter, knowing the esteem in which their services were held and substantially recognized.

The moments wore on, and Mr. Marsden with a yawn, rose from his seat, and was just about to depart when a knock at the side door of the office demanded his attention. Upon opening the door a police sergeant and two stalwart officers in plain clothes confronted him.

"You are Mr. Marsden, I believe, sir, the head of the bank?" inquired the sergeant in an anxious undertone.

"That is so. I am Mr. Marsden."

"I have some most important evidence to communicate, if you will grant us a few minutes in private, sir."

"Indeed! Certainly. Step inside. And these two gentlemen, who might they be?" asked the banker, turning on his heel.

"Two detective officers engaged upon their duty," replied the sergeant, and the trio were quickly ushered into the private sanctum of the banker.

"I am staying rather later than usual to-night; it is fortunate I had not gone."

"Very fortunate, for our visit concerns you most seriously."

"Indeed!" said Mr. Philip, opening his eyes widely and popping his gold-rimmed spectacles up on his forehead.

"Yes, sir, from information which has come into our possession, and which I must ask you in the interests of public justice not to divulge, but to afford us what assistance you can, I have to inform you that a daring robbery is contemplated upon your bank to-night."

"Never!" said Mr. Marsden, starting aghast. "Why, these premises are proof against anything."

"You may think so, but you don't know these men. To go into the matter, sir, it came about in this way: We were on the scent of a notorious little gang of three expert bank robbers and safe-breakers a short time since, and thorough smart fellows, too. But, unfortunately, we only succeeded in running one to earth—the others eluded us. The prisoner was convicted and sentenced to ten years' penal servitude; but, like similar cases we have known, it subsequently came to his knowledge that his confederates had since his incarceration not acted up to their promise in making provision for his aged mother out of their ill-gotten gains, so he, in a spirit of revenge, peached upon them, and furnished us with full information concerning their whereabouts and future intentions. From this point these two other officers can better explain than I."

"Great heavens! you astound me!" said the aged banker, who became further agitated.

"Do not alarm yourself, sir; they will fall into their own trap, rest assured," continued one of the detectives, taking up the thread of the narrative. "Yes, acting on the statement made by the prisoner, my colleague and I instituted careful and, I might say, cunning inquiries, for these wily fellows are difficult to track. We have been unable to come upon the two individuals themselves, but after indefatigable efforts from a roundabout course—a woman, as usual, being at the bottom of it—we have learned that they intend forcing Marsden & Rylotty's bank to-night, and leaving by the boat express to-morrow for the continent."

"The scoundrels!"

"But they will just be deceived, sir. We have hit upon a plan, and ask you to acquiesce in our carrying it out."

"Most certainly, whatever you think best. What do you suggest?"

"Well, we want to catch them red-handed, as it were, and ask your permission to secrete ourselves upon the premises for the night, so as to fully be prepared and waiting for our men."

"Yes, yes. I presume you have a written authority?"

"Certainly, sir."

And the plain-clothes gentlemen drew from their breast pockets the authorized official document bearing the name of the chief of the department, which was quite satisfactory.

"After consulting with our superiors," continued the officer, "we think that the plan we have suggested, with your permission, the most likely to insure success. We should like you to furnish us with your private address, so as to communicate with you during the night, should your servants be required."

"Yes, of course—The Hollies, 15 Winstanton crescent——"

"Well known, sir. That will be sufficient, thank you."

And the officer jotted it down quickly in his pocketbook.

After pointing out a ponderous iron safe which he hoped the villains would not turn their attention to, Philip Marsden bade them good evening, requesting them to let him know the instant he was wanted.

He departed in a feverish state of anxiety, wondering, naturally, what the night would bring forth.

Now, directly the old gentleman had left the real character of the pseudo-police officers was apparent. It was quite true that a notorious "little" gang of bank robbers contemplated an attack on the bank that night, and those scoundrels were actually none others than themselves! Their warrants were forgeries, and the sergeant's uniform the perfection of imitation to the last button. No time was to be lost. From the coattail pockets of the sergeant came some of the finest tempered steel drills and other implements for forcing and boring iron safes that ever graced the person of the most experienced crib cracker. Deftly manufactured skeleton keys for picking the best and most complicated locks were brought forth; in short, everything needed for a thorough, daring and successful burglary.

"We've got a long night's work, Charlie, I'm afraid," said one. "It's now 9 o'clock, and if we get through this safe under ten hours we're lucky. We must set to work with a will."

Accordingly the "sergeant" speedily turned his attention to the back premises with a view to a hurried escape should they be disturbed, while the two others directed theirs to the huge iron safe spoken of by the banker. Drills were quickly applied behind the hinges of the door, and boring began in real earnest, for these "gentlemen" burglars knew pretty well everything worth knowing as to the construction of most safes in use.

Progress was very slow at first, but the men never ceased. Drill, drill, drill, on went the work almost in silence. Now and then just a short spell for a "breather." Midnight arrived, and a little better progress, for they labored harder than ever. One, 2, 3 o'clock, and now the huge iron door began to yield and crack a little.

"Tough work, Jim. But it'll pay us in the end, old fellow. Keep it up. We must finish it by 6 o'clock, for perhaps some blessed office cleaner may be here, or people be moving outside."

Four o'clock, and a good aperture was made. Five o'clock, and they were perspiring like blacksmiths at a forge in July, and they worked like demons with their drills and levers. Presently, with a united and terrific effort, the outer door was loosened from its sockets.

"Good!" muttered one, as they gradually, yet laboriously, lowered the mighty piece of metal to the ground. "The inner compartment is very short work, chummie."

And so it proved, for with the utmost dexterity one pried the lock as the other, with a thin chisel as hard as adamant, started forcing the door.

"One more wrench, Jim, and then for the spoil!" And he rubbed his hands with glee.

Clang! And open flew the door. But what?

Foiled! Frustrated! Baffled! The safe was empty!

The scoundrels, who had instantly dived their hands into the interior, shrank back aghast, swearing and pouring curses upon the old banker's head.

"Bah! the old blackguard! He has done us, Jim! And who'd have dreamed it?"

"There's no time to lose," blurted his confederate, smashing anything he could lay his hands on, in sheer wantonness. "It's striking 6 o'clock, and work people are about."

Tools were hurriedly collected and pocketed again, and the "sergeant," with a disappointed growl, suggested that they should go out by the door they came in by, as nobody was stirring much, and the back way meant scaling walls and roofs. This they did, but immediately on emerging into the street they were met by Mr. Marsden in company with three constables. The old banker had experienced a sleepless night and risen early, calling at the police station, innocently enough, on his way to ascertain the news, if any, and he was there astonished to learn that they believed it to be a bogus affair, as they knew nothing of it.

There was a desperate effort on the part of the burglars to escape, but one or two passing workmen at the cry of "Help!" rendered assistance and the "police officers" were strongly secured.

Philip Marsden, on stepping into the bank, although greatly unnerved and agitated at the state of affairs, could scarcely suppress his laughter on finding that his "decoy," as he called it, had given so much trouble, and thoroughly done them, although he was quite ignorant of the plot he had unintentionally laid for them.

The "decoy," an old, insecure safe, which was always purposely kept empty, was one of Mr. Marsden's ingenious ideas for throwing burglars off the scent, being fixed in a prominent position to attract notice, while other safes containing the valuables were far away from the rooms in ordinary use.

The pseudo-detective officers are in safe custody now. They have their regular "drills," and instead of picking locks, pick oakum.—Liverpool Mercury.

A RUSH TO GUIANA.

A Californian's Letter Drew Crowds to the Gold-Fields.

Owing to the unsettled state of affairs in Venezuela, I departed for British Guiana, where life and property were secure. On arriving at Georgetown, the beautiful capital of the colony, with about sixty thousand inhabitants, I found a hundred Californio miners stranded and full of indignation. They had been lured to Guiana by a letter which had found wide circulation in the newspapers of the Pacific coast. A man who had served as cook in a California mining camp had gone to Guiana and had found a good position as manager of a placer-mine on the Barima River. Elated by his good fortune, he wrote a glowing account of his prospects to his wife in California. She showed the letter to the editor of the local paper, who published it as an item of important mining news.

This letter within a short time had the effect of starting groups of men from the coast mining fields, some of them even from British Columbia. It was a time of depression in the mining industries of the Pacific coast, and a great many miners were out of employment. Though the writer of the letter had no intention of attracting others to his El Dorado, the Californians, who had assumed that it would be as easy to prospect for gold in Guiana as in California, regarded him as the author of their misadventure, and indulged freely in threats of vengeance. No harm came to him, however, because it is not a light matter to violate the laws in British Guiana. As these stranded miners had no money, they were unable to prospect, which requires a more or less expensive outfit; and they could not find employment in the diggings for the reason that white men are not employed on the placers, except as managers; and in fact nearly all the managers, like the laborers, are colored men.

The Californians had great difficulty in getting away; some of them reached home as stowaways; a very few obtained situations. One of them was engaged for six months as manager of a placer-mine on the Potaro River, owned by a syndicate of colored men, which produced from three hundred to four hundred ounces of gold a month. He fell ill just as his time was up. When he recovered he invested his savings in an outfit, and started up the Cuyuni River, but found nothing. Another man secured a situation partly through the fact of his being a freemason.—Century.

Facts Recorded in Wool.

"The sheep from which that wool was cut," said a wool commission man on Michigan street, "didn't have enough to eat during February and March. How can I tell? Why, there is a weak spot in the wool which was made during those months. Anything which affects the growth of the sheep, whether prolonged dry weather in the summer or disease or want of food in the winter, will show in the wool just as accurately as the heat or cold is shown in a thermometer."

"The wool business," he continued, "is like every other; it is full of little details that are surprising to an outsider. You ask any wool dealer who has ever handled New England wool and he will tell you the clippings of sheep from the same breed on opposite sides of the Connecticut River, one in New Hampshire and the other in Vermont, differ from each other. On one side of the river is a granite soil and on the other a limestone soil, and the difference in grass grown on these two soils makes a difference in the wool. Now, the rich black prairies of Illinois make a wool from the same family of sheep which is quite a little coarser than the wool of the sheep grown on the finer grass of Ohio and Pennsylvania. The fiber of the Illinois wool is not so clear, dense or strong as that produced in Ohio."—Free Press.

A Profitable Bargain.

Mr. Wood, slater, of Laurencekirk, purchased at a sale a bundle of five books, one of which was described by the auctioneer as Burns' Poems. The sum paid for the lot was about five cents. The volumes were stored away until lately, when Mr. Wood noticed that a high price had been paid for a copy of the Kilmarnock edition of Burns, and remembering that his copy was printed at Kilmarnock, he brought it under the notice of Mr. Greig, banker, Laurencekirk, who pronounced the book one of the original Kilmarnock editions, and further, that an inscription was probably in the bard's own handwriting. The volume was sent to Southby's, where a great sale of books had just been concluded, when, for his sd. worth, Mr. Wood has obtained $350.

WOMAN ON POLICE FORCE.

Regularly Appointed Special Officer by Mayor of St. Paul.

The first woman to be made a member of a police force, and the only one in the world authorized to wear a police star, lives in St. Paul, Minn. Her name is Mrs. Edwin T. Root, and she has just been created a full-fledged officer of the law by the mayor of St. Paul. Mrs. Root may not walk a beat, but no representatives of the law in the city has any more authority to arrest people than she. Hers is not a "special" appointment, but the same as that of the man who wears blue and brass and swings a club. The cause of Mrs. Root's ambition is not a desire for notoriety, but to enable her to better aid young girls who have fallen into evil ways. She has long been engaged in this work, but found herself seriously handicapped by lack of authority to investigate. So she applied to the mayor for the appointment she has received.

Mrs. Root is president of the Hamline Woman's Christian Temperance Union, which under her management has doubled its membership since 1894 and become the largest organization of its kind in the country. She made persistent war on a saloon where young girls were in the habit of assembling, and after a great deal of trouble secured the proprietor's conviction. It was in connection with her rescue work that she needed the police star. She is a slight, delicate-looking woman, of medium height and graceful demeanor. Dark brown eyes look out from beneath delicately penciled eyebrows. She wears glasses, but they add to rather than detract from her appearance. Her hair is a golden brown and her age is 46.

QUEEN VICTORIA'S COACHMAN.

Queen Victoria's personal coachman, who drives her at Windsor, Balmoral and Osborne, and who likewise accompanies her during her annual visits to the continent, is an elderly man of the name of Thomas Sands, and is a great favorite of her majesty, in whose service he has been very long indeed. The queen is exceedingly kind and considerate to him and greets him always with a friendly "Good day." Frequently when the drives are long the queen causes the carriage to be stopped and the tea equipage, which she generally carries about with her, to be extracted from the rumble. Tea is thereupon brewed by means of a spirit lamp, and in partaking of this gentle stimulant with her ladies in attendance, the queen does not forget her coachman, but invariably makes a point of pouring out a cup for him, too.

THOMAS SANDS.

On one occasion, when her daughter, the widowed empress of Germany, was with her and attempted to pour out the tea for the coachman, the queen took the cup away from her under the pretext that she did not know "how Thomas liked to have his tea sugared and creamed," and fixed it for him herself. Thomas is very fond of relating this story as an illustration of his mistress' kindness and consideration for her old servants. Both he and the state coachman are decorated with the silver medal conferred upon them by the queen on the occasion of her jubilee, and they wear it on the left breast on the coat of livery.

Costly Trophies.

The head of the musk ox is the most costly of mounted game heads, and next is the head of the bison or buffalo. Fine buffalo heads, well mounted, bring from $150 to $500. A head of $500, however, would be one exceptionally large and choice, and a fine head can be bought for $250. Fifteen years ago a well-mounted buffalo head could be bought for from $50 to $100. The increase in price is accounted for by the growing scarcity of the buffalo, which has now practically disappeared from the United States. The wood bison of the Great Slave lake region of British North America, which inhabit woodland or mountain districts, are rather more numerous than the prairie buffaloes of this country, but their numbers are limited and decreasing. The wood bison is not so large as the prairie buffalo, and its hair is straighter and very black. The musk ox heads are held at $300 and upward. One musk ox head owned by a taxidermist in New York is valued at $750.

Albert Lynch's American Girl.

Albert Lynch, the famous French artist, is said to have given us a new and distinctive type of "American girl," in a picture completed after his return from a visit to this country. His characterization of young womanhood is exceedingly interesting and attractive—the conception of a critical student, and the creation of a skilled painter. Mr. Lynch was commissioned by the Ladies' Home Journal to portray the "American girl" as he saw her, and his picture will be reproduced in the October number of that magazine.

In 1900.

A great problem is soon to occupy the minds of the people of the world. In four years the sweep of time will carry us into a new century, and the figures which indicated the century of 1800 will be exchanged for 1900. When this time comes can we abbreviate the year in writing and printing as we do in 1800? If we may abbreviate, how shall it be done? How will this look, '00? Or this, 19'? When you write at the top of your letter, August 20th, '96, it looks all right, but August 10, 00, will not be at all satisfactory. Did you ever think before what an inconvenient time 1900 is going to be in the matter of writing dates for your letters?

Russian Thistle.

It appears that our people who claim to know the Russian thistle are liable to be mistaken. Since publishing our article on this weed we have shown it to C. W. Kaley, of Nebraska, and he thinks it is a species of "tumble weed." If so, it is different from what we have seen, for it has small spines. And we find now and then about here, what looks to us much more like the common tumble weed, than this does. However, it may be both are varieties, of it. Agent DeLapp of the Lake Shore road sent a specimen like the one in our office, to Prof. Arthur, the botanist at Purdue university, and received the following answer:

MR. E. T. DELAPP,

Auburn, Ind.

Dear Sir:—The specimen of weed which you have sent to the director of this station is not the Russian thistle, although it grows in very much the same form. It is what has long been known as the common tumble weed and is a form of one of the pig weeds. It has always been found throughout the United States and is not likely to become an especially troublesome weed in any one place. It is easily exterminated by ordinaay methods of cultivation, being an annual. The genuine Russian thistle grows to about the same size and rolls around, in the fall, in the same manner, and has in general, much the same look, but it is far more prickly and the branches are more rigid.

We shall be glad to have you send in specimens of weeds that interest you and will give you what information about them we can.

Very truly yours,

J. C. ARTHUR,

Dictated Botanist.

Obituary.

Mary (Lefler) Prosser, wife of Wm. Prosser, was born Sept. 26, 1808, and departed this life Sept. 24, 1896, aged 87 years, 11 months and 29 days. She was united in marriage Sept. 21, 1828, to William Prosser. To this union were born 12 children, 9 of whom still survive. In 1853 they moved from Ashland Co. Ohio, to DeKalb Co. Ind., and settled on a farm near Grove Bethel church, where she lived until her death. When they came to their new home in this county, they found it covered with a dense forest, she, full of ambition, and anxious to succeed, aided her husband in every possible way. About 14 years ago she was left a widow, and spent her remaining days with her youngest daughter, who lived on the farm. In childhood she was baptized, and taken into the Lutheran church, of which she was a member at her death. At a ripe age the Master called her to rest. She leaves to mourn her death, nine children, 27 grandchildren, and a host of friends. Mother Prosser was a good woman, kind to her neighbors, and family. She will ever live green in the memory of all who knew her. The funeral services were conducted from the Grove Bethel, M. E. church, Sunday at 11:00 a. m. Sept. 27. Interment took place in Evergreen cemetery, Auburn. Rev. J. D. Brosy officiating.

Twenty Years....

For more than twenty years we have been telling how Scott's Emulsion overcomes the excessive waste of the system, puts on flesh, nourishes and builds up the body, making it the remedy for all wasting diseases of adults and children, but it isn't possible for us to tell the story in a mere stickful of newspaper type.

We have had prepared for us by a physician a little book, telling in easy words how and why Scott's Emulsion benefits, and a postal card request will be enough to have it sent to you free. To-day would be a good time to send for it.

"WEALTH, CULTURE, BRAINS."

These Three, but the Greatest of Them Is Wealth, and They Form "the Trinity of the Republic's True and Only Hope," Our "Rightful but Beleagured Aristocracy."

FOR "A GENTLEMAN" SAYS SO.

A lively controversy has been waged in the Correspondence column of the New York Journal for several weeks, between an advocate of the gold standard who signs himself "A Gentleman," and several friends of Bryan and Silver Restoration who were quick to take up the lance against the impudent assumptions of the goldite. The dispute, however, is now probably at an end, for upon the publication of the following letter from "A Gentleman" in the Journal of Sept. 24, his opponents doubtless concluded it a waste of lather to devote further attention to him. Here is his remarkable communication:

"A Gentleman's" Remarkable Letter.

To the Editor of the Journal:

Were my mind not matured by study and reflection, and so possessed of that balance which renders one superior to the evanescent gales of popular fury, I should certainly be in some danger of losing my temper at this time. The extremely abusive and unpleasant letters which you are pleased to publish in relation to my communications in your paper—and permit me to say that you might easily be in a more dignified business than pandering to the passions and prejudices of the mob—are but samples of hundreds that have reached me personally through your office.

And what, after all, is my offense? I have said that the lower orders are incapable, without the instruction of their betters in brain and social position, intelligently to use the franchise. I have said it is better for themselves and the country that their votes should be controlled by purchase and gentle coercion, rather than that they should be allowed in their ignorance to go to the ballotbox and vote for Bryan, free silver, repudiation, national dishonor and the despoilment of the upper classes, who represent about all there is of civilization among us. I have said that I cordially approve of the measures taken by that broad minded, resolute and patriotic man, Mark Hanna, to prevent the triumph of anarchy and socialism, which demagogue Bryan's election would be.

One would think from the brutal and scandalous manner in which I am assailed on all hands that I personally am responsible for the following existing facts:

1. The inferior mentality of the average mechanic, farmer and laborer, which inferior mentality unfits him for that citizenship he is almost sure to misuse unless he is guided by those who are his betters in intellect and knowledge.

2. The creation of the public safety fund, amounting to many millions of dollars, which has been contributed by the best and foremost citizens of the United States and intrusted to Mr. Hanna for political use.

3. The action of sensible Republican and gold standard Democratic employers nearly everywhere in giving their employes light on the question of the money standards and causing them to understand that a vote thrown against the common interests will be punished by discharge.

Now, sir, only yokels and clodhoppers, who are no more qualified to vote upon the financial issue than they are to sit down at a gentleman's table and conduct themselves like polished members of polite society, can possibly misunderstand my position. Obviously I did not create the facts which I have enumerated. I have simply given public expression to my approval of Facts 2 and 3.

And I am proud to say that in this attitude of approval I am in the very best of company. In all my friendly intercourse with Mr. Hanna, which has extended over some years, I have never detected in him a trace of that most odious of all characters—the hypocrite. What he does he does with open, manly frankness. Never in his dealings with the labor unions, in his private capacity as a capitalist, has he truckled for an instant that he might receive that poor reward of the coward and trimmer—popularity. When the lower orders invited him to war he ever willingly accepted the challenge, and for their blind temerity crushed them. As he is in business, so is he in politics. The better classes, who have supplied this great and brave man with funds for the election of McKinley and the maintenance of the gold standard and our national honor, know as well as I do the uses to which their generous contributions are to be put. So does our gallant standard bearer, our valiant champion against the hosts of ignorance, poverty and greed—Major William McKinley of Ohio. So does the more enlightened portion of the press, which, splendidly indifferent to party lines, has rallied to the defense of the rightful but beleagured aristocracy of his unhappy country—the aristocracy of wealth, culture and brains; three in one, one in three; the trinity of the republic's true and only hope.

And if the better classes and the patriotic portion of the press utter no demur against the wise employment of money and of guiding coercion for the furtherance of a righteous cause, why should I be made the object of vile and insensate detraction because I join my approval to theirs?

Sir, things have come to a pretty pass indeed when a gentleman who chooses to interest himself in public affairs cannot do so except at the cost of becoming a target for the foul missiles of the insolent and unlettered mob. But let me tell these ruffians of the pen that in spite of their cheap protestations of independence and self-ownership they will do as they are bid on election day or take the consequences. I am not to be deterred from voicing my opinions and doing my duty because the hoots of a crowd of mudsills who are not worthy to brush a gentleman's coat go up against me. Neither will the great hosts of honorable and determined men with whom I am allied in interest and sympathy be balked of their high purpose by the roars that come from the throats of the "many headed monster," as Shakespeare, who was a gentleman at heart, notwithstanding his unfortunate social position, so aptly denominated the rabble.

The wealth of this nation, sir, is in arms. Bryan, the demagogue, may spout his heresies and rhetoric from a thousand stumps, and his followers may cheer his low appeals to their rudimentary brains and lean pockets, but all will be in vain. The wealth of the nation, the nation's natural ruler and guardian, has the power to defeat him and his schemes, and that power will be exerted, never fear. In the language of Mark Hanna, now the patient, silent, scornful but never idle recipient of so much frantic and impotent abuse, "McKinley will be the next president; if we can't elect him one way, we will another."

I am, sir, yours, with a measureless contempt for the hard headed and soft-headed illiterates whose insults have appeared in your columns and rained upon me by mail.

New York, Sept. 23. A GENTLEMAN.

THE COLD FACT

The agricultural population of the United States are compelled to live on an income below that provided for paupers, and receive less for their labor than is paid for convicts.—[From "The Condition of the American Farmer," by H. E. Taubeneck.]

Hope to Get It Back.

The rich boodlers are not going to put $20,000,000 into the present campaign without hope of getting it back. The election of McKinley means the continuance of the skinning process and an increased national debt, that coupon cutters may be further enriched. — Exchange.

The Citizen's Duty.

Employes everywhere are being intimidated in the interest of the gold oppression. There has never been a presidential year in which the American citizen's duty to himself and his country has been plainer than it is now—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

For Honest Money.

"The Republican party stands for honest money," says Mr. McKinley. Just now it is standing to hold up people and get their honest money. This kind of standing for honest money will get it a fall.

Mr. Dana's Idea.

What Charles A. Dana wishes to impress upon the people is that the issue must be discussed calmly and intelligently and that everybody who believes in free silver is a liar and an anarchist. —Detroit News.

Don't Forget the Congressmen.

There must be silver congressmen as well as a silver president if the money of the constitution is to be restored.

McKinley June 24 '90

"I am for the largest use of silver in the currency of the country. I would not dishonor it: I would give it equal credit and honor with gold. I would make no discrimination. I would utilize both metals as money and discredit neither. I want the double standard."

Postal Vote.

The Chicago Record is taking a postal card vote in the twelve central states. They get names of a tenth of the voters, send each a postal card, and the voter is to return this card with the name of his choice for president, and the candidate he voted for in '92. His own name need not appear unless he prefers it. It will require 750,000 postal cards and they alone will cost $7,500. It will be expensive, but it will make the paper sell. But as a test of how people are going to vote it will not be very accurate.

Mr. Colerick.

There was a large attendance at Mr. Colerick's speech last evening, chiefly from town as the unpleasant weather kept away those from a distance. But it was well there were no more, for they could not all get in as it was, part had to stand by the door on the side walk. It was in the ground floor store room next the Freygang harness shop south of the jail, as the Bryan Club have found their former room over Bishop & Lackey's is too small. The first voters were out in force and made a neat appearance in their white hats. On the stand with the speaker, were J. W. Baxter, D. D. Moody and Rev. D. F. Kain, who was for a time pastor of the Lutheran church here. At that time he was a prohibitionist, though he had formerly been a democrat. Now he is a democrat again, being attracted back to his old party by the free silver issue.

The speaker was introduced by Mr. Baxter in a few well chosen words, and at once started in fully on his subject. He has evidently given it a great deal of study and his experience in congress gave him an understanding of the questions now interesting the voters. He brought up a history of the financial legislation of the country beginning with the issue of the greenbacks, and the various issues of bonds, then the changing of the bonds so as to make them payable in gold, then to the law of 1873 demonetizing silver. This he made very pointed by showing how many of the leading republicans looked at it, both at the time and afterwards. He showed how it had been put through by stealth, as recently stated in the COURIER, and followed with the assertion of the various statesemn who claim a they did not know the dollar was being left out when the law was passed. Then he alluded to the first Bland bill to remonetize silver and showed that Carlisle and McKinley both voted it. In other words both then voted for free silver. All through his speech he made telling points and had the documents prove what he said. He read freely from McPherson's Handbook, a work of the highhest authority, written by a republican and printed many years ago. He was heartily cheered at every point. There were many ladies in attendance, and all sat out the long speech and gave the speaker the best attention. Many leading republicans were present, and were also very attentive. Mr. Colerick speaks at Garrett to-morrow, Saturday evening.

Old People.

Old people who require medicine to regulate the bowels and kidneys will find the true remedy in Electric Bitters. This medicine does not stimulate and contains no whisky nor other intoxicant but acts as a tonic and alterative. It acts mild on the stomach and bowels, adding strength and giving tone to the organs thereby aiding Nature in the performance of the functions. Brown, Culbertson & Boland

Dealers in Shelf and Heavy Hardware, Paints, Oils Etc.

This is one of the most prosperous and enterprising firms in the city, and are justly entitled to their popularity. W. B. Brown, H. R. Culberson and M. Boland, constitute the firm, with Frank Draggoo as clerk. All are courteous, obliging gentlemen, with whom it is a pleasure to deal and who have obtained and hold the respect of their fellow citizens. They are always ready to cater to the interests of their patrons.

Their fine store is fully equipped with everything pertaining to their indicated line of trade, including shelf and heavy hardware, stoves, ranges, tin, copper and sheet iron ware, mechanics' tools, cutlery, etc., all of the latest and improved patterns. Their stock of oils, paints, varnishes, etc., is such as might be expected from such an enterprising firm.

In addition to their large trade in the above line they do a large and constantly increasing business in farm implements, and have two branch stores, one at Butler, and the other at Spencerville, in order that they may accommodate the farmers conveniently. The trade they have already acquired is sufficient evidence of their ability in their line of work.

No Danger of "Dumping"

Fort Wayne Sentinel.

The single gold advocates are accustomed to terrify Americans with the threat that if free silver coinage is established all of the silver of the world will be dumped in this country. The word "dumped" is used in order to give an ignominous character to silver and to convey the impression that it is something very nasty and objectionable on all grounds. This idea of silver is of recent origin. For about a century it was the unit of value in our monetary system. It helped us through all our history and no one ever thought of discrediting it until England began teaching the doctrine of a single gold standard which she had adopted for herself after absorbing all of the gold producing land that she could get her hands on. Her view was finally adopted, carried through by stealth and fraud with consequences which have caused suffering, ruin, commercial and domestic distress beyond calculation.

If the silver producing countries of the world are merely looking for a place to "dump" their silver why do they not take it to Mexico?

Silver is the only money used in that country. It is the legal tender for all debts, public and private. It buys food and clothing, pays for labor and is the basis of all Mexican enterprise. Why do not the other silver producing countries carry their silver to Mexico and have it coined into dollars containing 53 cents each, but which will be good in Mexico for 100 cents?

Three-fourths of the world use silver as money and about two thirds of the world use nothing else as money. Is it not absurd to suppose that the demand for silver in these countries would cease as soon as the United States remonetized it? Why should they be expected to give up their silver because the United States had concluded to resume its use as a money metal.

A Friendly Criticism.

We learned early in life that "criticism is necessary to the development of healthy thought" and have ever loved criticism. So we venture this criticism on the address of D. R. Best in Auburn Sept. 24, 1896. Mr. Best said that the 20 years prior to 1892 were the most prosperous years of American history. Let us see: In an agricultural country like the United States all other pursuits and enterprises depend on the prosperity of agriculture. Prosperity, means, successful progress in any business or enterprise. It means increased value of one's possessions. In 1872 the average price of wheat was $1.47 per bushel, in 1892, it was 80 cents per bushel. In 1872 the average price of cotton was 19.3 cents per pound. In 1892 it was 8.7 cents per pound. In 1872 the average price for wool was 56 cents per pound. In 1892 it was 18 cents. Bringing it down to the present date it is, for wheat 60 cents, cotton 6 cents, wool 14 cents. These are sea board prices. The average price of beef cattle in 1872 was 8 3-10 cents gross. In 1892, 4.7 cents. We will not give the averages of horses, suffice it to say that horses were ready sale in 1862 at remunerative prices, while in 1895 they were sold by thousands at the value of their hides and bones. Is this successful progress? Again. In 1872 I refused an offer of $80 per acre for the farm upon which I now live. Since then I have added $25 per acre in improving it and to-day I could not sell it for $40.00 per acre cash. Is this an increased value of one's possessions? This kind of prosperity continued 20 years longer will reduce the farmers of this great nation to serfdom as in Golden Russia or peasantry as in sound money England. But we are told that the cause of all this decline is because we can produce these staples so much cheaper. Let us see: In 1872 the rental charge for farm lands in this state was from $2.50 to $5 per acre. Let us take the average which would be $3.75 per acre. Take wheat as the great staple in this state. 1872 the average yield in this state was 11 bushels per acre. This at the average price of $1.40 per bushel makes it worth $15.40 per acre; cost of production, rent $3.75, labor, seed, implements and taxes $8.50 per acre. Total cost per acre $12.25. Profit $3.15 per acre. In 1892, average rental value of lands $4 per acre. Average yield per acre 13.4 bushels. Average value per bushel 62 cents. So the account stands thus. Rent of land $4, labor, seed, implements and taxes $7.35, Cost per acre, $11.35, value of crop 13.4 bushels per acre at 62 cents per bushel $7.30 leaving a net balance against the farmer of $4.05 per acre. Mr. Best said that the Supreme Being knows no populist. I admire a man who knows and can read the mind of the Supreme Being but I have much more respect for the man who knows the true condition of his country as shown by statistics.

Mr. Best said that there was no silver in circulation between 1840 and 1860. Fortunately I was not old enough to remember the condition of finance at that time but I do know that much of the silver in circulation to-day was coined during the score of years mentioned. Following is the amount of silver coined from the establishment of the U. S. mint up to and including the years given.

1793 to 1835	$39,690,099	small coins $11,919,888.
1835 to 1852	39,523,292
'53 to '72 inclu.	65,928,512

Total coinage 1793 to 1873 silver $157,061,791

These figures are taken from the report of the director of the mints and it seems to prove conclusively that there was considerable silver in circulation.

Taking the population of 1850, 23,067,262, and the total coinage of silver 87,480,091, we find that we had per capita circulation of near $4.00 in silver in 1850. Same circulation for 1890 gives a per capita circulation in silver of about $6.

Silver in circulation in 1890, $413,707,376; population 1890, 61,908,906; gold in circulation 1890 per capita approximately $8.00 viz. Total gold in circulation including gold certificates 1890, $505,330,625; population 1890, 61,908,906.

Again he said, that the subsidiary coins prior to 1834 contained their face value in silver, that since that date they were light in weight. This statement is correct, but he said that this "was a broad and statesman like law," but to coin a full dollar out of less than 100 cents worth of silver is dishonest. That is to say that the small money that circulates among the extremely poor people of this country should be short weight, but the full dollar must be worth 100 cents. This is on the same plane of honesty as his other statement that "if he had a good penny and a bad one he would pay out the bad one and keep the good one." I wonder if the Supreme Being will know such a republican? Mr. Best said that human endeavor is the real measure of values, and says that one hour in 1892 would earn more gold than at any time in the history of this country. He takes as his basis the man who shovels sand. Let us see: In 1880 the average wages paid section men on railroads was $1.75 per day. In 1892 it was $1.10. See Manual of Railway Statistics page 84. The money in 1880 and 1892 was all "sound" money. This article could be made of sufficient length to prove nearly all the statements made by Mr. Best incorrect but I think sufficient is given herein to enable the voters to see what the republican party wants this year is office and they want it bad.

CASTORIA

for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher. That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

The fac-simile signature of Chas. H. Fletcher is on every wrapper.

DARING WORK

Of Bank Robbers in Oregon—Two Meet Their Death.

La Grande (Ore.) special: The First National Bank of Joseph, Walla County, was robbed Friday of $20,000 by three men, one of whom was killed, a second mortally wounded, while the third is being pursued by a posse of citizens. At the time of the holdup there were four customers in the bank. All were lined up against the wall, and while two of the robbers stood guard the third went into the vault, taking all the coin and currency. He then ransacked the silver boxes. By this time the report that the bank was being robbed had reached the streets, and several citizens armed themselves and went to the scene. As the robbers made their way out of the bank Alexander Donnelly opened fire and killed one instantly and mortally wounded another, hitting him twice. The third robber had the sack containing the coin and succeeded in reaching his horse, which was standing near by, and made his escape to the hills. The robber killed was named Brown, while the one who escaped was Cy Fitzhugh.

DARING TRAIN ROBBERY.

Bandits Fire Promiscuously Into the Train Killing Several Passengers.

Albuquerque (N. M.) special: Atlantic and Pacific officials in this city have been advised that the west-bound train No. 2, due here at 8:45 p. m., has been held up by five outlaws near Rio Puerco bridge. United States Marshal Loomis, who was a passenger on board, is reported to have shot and killed Cole Young, one of the robbers, directly after the train was stopped. Young's companions thereupon began shooting indiscriminately and it is said several passengers were either killed or wounded. After terrifying the passengers and train hands into submission the robbers cut the express car and engine from the train and ran them up the track a few hundred yards. An explosion followed and it is supposed that the express car safe was blown open. A special train has been dispatched from this city to the scene of the holdup. No further information is to be had at this hour.

Sixteen Injured.

MURDER AND SUICIDE.

A Terrible Tragedy at Houghton, Michigan.

Houghton (Mich.) special: George E. Sheldon, brother of Hon. Carlos D. Sheldon, Republican nominee for Representative in Congress from the Twelfth District, to succeed the Hon. S. M. Stephenson, was shot by a discharged coachman named Felix Dumontier. Two weeks ago Sheldon had reproved his coachman for some lapse of duty, and the coachman knocked him down. He was arrested for assault and the trial set for Saturday. Friday Dumontier met his former employer on the bridge crossing Portage Lake between this city and Hancock, and emptied every bullet of a five-chamber revolver at short range into his victim, inflicting wounds that are likely to prove fatal. One arm was paralyzed, the jaw broken, the neck pierced and one bullet lodged in the brain. Immediately after the murderous deed Dumontier jumped from the bridge, a height of one hundred feet into the lake, and disappeared. It is believed he drowned, as he was not a good swimmer. He leaves a destitute wife and five children. The Sheldons are pioneers, wealthy and highly respected.

ENERGETIC

Is the Protest Entered by Vice Consul Hyatt in the Case of Peter E. Rivery.

A special from Santiago de Cuba says: Vice Consul Hyatt has entered an energetic protest in the case of Peter E. Rivery, an American planter, maltreated by the Spanish guerillas on his coffee estate, La Esperanza, near St. Luis, on the road to Bayamo. During his protest to the Spanish officer in command of the guerillas against the destruction of his fences and property by the latter's force, Rivery was abused and led out to be summarily shot. The timely intervention of a Spanish scout, who pleaded with the officer and vouched for Rivery's neutrality, alone saved him. Even then the guerillas were so enranged that, in defiance of the officers' orders, they brutally beat Rivery with their machettes and before leaving his plantation, tore down the American flag waiving over his residence, warning him not to display it again.

STOLE EVERYTHING.

Burglars Chloroform the Inmates and Rob a Hotel of All Its Valuables.

Pittsburgh (Pa.) special: Burglars entered the Hotel Norman, near Wilmerding, Pa., and after chloroforming all the inmates, carried off $10,000 in money, jewelry and silverware. A safe containing between $7,000 and $8,000 was blown open and the contents taken. The cash register in the bar-room was likewise opened and robbed, after which every room in the house was searched and stripped of portable valuables. There were seventeen guests in the house at the time, beside Mr. Wymard and his family. Every cent of money belonging to the guests was taken, together with their watches and jewelry. The silverware of the house, Mrs. Wymard's diamonds, and in fact, everything of value that was readily movable was taken. The thieves left no clue.

It is a conservative estimate to say that fifty people have lost their lives from the Florida hurricane, and the number may run much higher. News from the portion of the State where the storm first struck is very slow in coming, for wires are down and railroads are impassable. The huricane struck Florida at Cedar Keys, a village of 1,500 inhabitants, and reports show that it passed in its path of destruction over twenty towns and villages, and that between thirty and forty persons have certainly been killed. Cedar Keys is about 100 miles southwest of Jacksonville. Moving northeasterly, the storm struck Willistown, a small town, where eleven houses were blown down. One person was killed and several so badly hurt that it is expected they will die.

Near Jacksonville is a large turpentine farm, where State convicts are employed. Twenty of these were huddled together in a cabin. A heavy tree was blown across the cabin and six of the convicts were crushed to death. In Alachua County the storm did frightful work. In Gainesville the Methodist church and about twenty residences and business houses were destroyed, and while a number of people were hurt no fatalities are reported. At La Crosse fifteen buildings were destroyed. The Rev. W. A. Barr, Mrs. F. F. McIntosh and her baby are reported killed. Near there four laborers, who were in a cabin at a turpentine farm, were crushed by falling trees. Newberry, in West Aluchua, is totally wrecked. C. J. Eastlin, Mrs. Nancy Moss, Frank Olmstead and David Jones were killed.

At High Springs, Melissa Harden, Jane Morris and Sallie Nobles, colored women, are reported to have been killed. At this place a number of people took refuge in a box car, which was in the path of the cyclone. It was blown along the track, and then off it a distance of fifty feet, and every person in it was badly injured. Steve Mason and Geo. Johnson have since died. At Gracy, a small place, twelve houses were blown down; a woman was killed, but a babe at her breast was unhurt, although it had been carried some distance by the force of the wind. At Lake Butler, Bradford County, Mr. C. H. Harkey, Mrs. J. M. Futch and her infant were fatally hurt. Many buildings were blown down. At this place the wind blew to pieces two cars loaded with bricks, and a negro, Henry Sullivan, who was 300 yards away, was killed by being struck by one of the flying bricks. At Live Oak the destruction is complete, but no loss of life is reported. Near Welborn the house of Amos White was destroyed and two of his children were killed. At Lake City eight business houses and thirteen residences were destroyed. Mrs. Sarah Fletcher and two boys were killed and Dora Jennings, Samuel Hudson and Jonas Mabrey were fatally injured. Six persons are reported killed at Fort White, in Columbia County.

The hurricane passed over Duval County, striking the edges of Jacksonville, but doing very little damage. Just north, however, in Nassau County, considerable destruction is reported. Five children were killed in the wreck of a schoolhouse. Miss Stewart, the teacher, had her arm broken. Lila Rails, a 12-year-old girl, was killed at her home, her mother being fatally injured. Harry Johnson was also killed. At Hillyards, another schoolhouse was wrecked and four children were killed. At Kings Ferry, Andy Johnson, Moses Lasiter, Simon Henderson, May Jones and a child were killed. Mrs. Fisher was nursing a sick child and the infant died as the house fell. The mother was hurt, but will recover. Three sailors were killed on schooners that were loading lumber at Kings Ferry.

There is no way to estimate the property loss in Florida. The losses may seem heavier now than they will when more closely examined, but talk with insurance men is that Florida losses will foot up $2,000,000. This seems, however, an excessive estimate.

Storm Enters Georgia.

Across the line into Georgia the devastation was continued. At Folkston, which is near the Okefinokee swamp, the schoolhouse was wrecked and four children killed. Several casualties are reported in Camden County, Georgia. The storm then continued on its way to Brunswick and Savannah. The hurricane in Savannah cost nearly a dozen lives and entailed a financial loss of nearly $1,000,000. Each report that is received is worse than at first. It was thought only one death would be the result of the hurricane, but the number has increased until there are eleven persons reported dead. Among prominent buildings damaged by the storm are City Exchange, Duffy Street Baptist Church, St. Philip's African Methodist Church, Central Railway warehouses, St. Patrick's school, Georgia hussars' armory, Henley Hall, city market, electric railway power house, Vale Royal mills, Comer, Hull & Co.'s guano factory, Commercial Guano Company's factory, Jones' Marine Railway, Fawcett Bros.' wholesale grocery building, Henry Solomon & Son's wholesale grocery, and M. J. Doyle's retail grocery. Hundreds of residences are damaged and the most beautiful trees in the city are down. The loss to shipping will amount to over $100,000.

Reports from the coast are meager. The sea islands along the coast of Georgia and South Carolina had almost a repetition of the storm of 1893. Almost every cottage and cabin in the wake of the storm was destroyed, but the water was not piled upon them as in 1893, consequently the suffering was not near so severe. The number of fatalities on the sea islands is not known, but it is not believed it will go over 100.

Havoc in Pennsylvania.

The cast house of the Temple furnace, at Temple Station, five miles above Reading, Pa., was blown down by the wind and nearly a dozen workmen were buried in the ruins. Two were killed. Heavy washouts are reported on the Pennsylvania Railroad east of Huntington. The greatest single loss is that of the Pennsylvania Railroad bridge across the Susquehanna at Columbia, nothing being left of it but the piers, the iron span in the middle and the first span at each end. The bridge was a mile and a quarter long, and was said to be the longest covered bridge in the world. It is reported that two men went down with the bridge, but no trace of them can be found. The bridge cost about $1,000,000. Columbia apears to have suffered more than any other section of the county. The damage in the borough is estimated at $500,000. The storm destroyed the coal breaker at Natalie, belonging to the Pennsylvania Anthracite Coal Company. Six tenement houses belonging to the camp were destroyed by fire, and six children, inmates, lost their lives. The fire originated from a stove overturning in one of the summer kitchens from the shaking by the wind. The damage at Shamokin will reach $350,000. The Paterson breaker is almost a total wreck, but the debris was saved from the flames by the downpour of rain that followed the wind. Superintendent Vincent places the damage to the colliery at $40,000. Fourteen of the dwelling houses and twenty board shanties occupied by the mine-workers were also blown down, and five of the former were consumed by flames. Two of the tenants were killed, several injured and eleven cattle were crushed to death beneath the dismantled barn.

The windstorm, though furious in New York City and vicinity, as elsewhere in the East, did but little damage ashore, and thus far no disasters on the Long Island, New Jersey or New England coast have been reported. The greatest damage sustained is by the prostration of telegraph and telephone wires. The storm was severe throughout New Jersey. In Buffalo the wind raged at a velocity of fifty-eight miles an hour, and at Syracuse thousands of dollars' worth of damage was done. The big grand stand at Kirk Driving Park was completely demolished. The Yates Hotel was badly damaged by a falling cornice, and the immense plate glass windows forced outward by the suction of the air

Storm Around Washington.

Reports received from the suburban towns about Washington, D. C., show that great damage was done throughout the surrounding country by the storm. On the outskirts of the city few localities escaped. In Washington the Papal legation was unroofed and the Chinese legation was damaged about $1,500. Communication by telegraph and telephone with the outside world was absolutely stopped. The White House was slightly injured by the storm, a portion of the copper roofing being stripped off and other damage done. The tall flagstaff, from which the signal is given to the city that the President is in town, disappeared completely. In the beautiful grounds surrounding the house twenty-five of the splendid trees, elms, sycamores, walnuts and magnolias, some of great age and of historical associations, were completely leveled, while fully fifty of the surviving trees suffered the loss of their tops and principal branches, and are permanently defaced.

The vast pile occupied by the State, War and Navy Departments was touched on the southern side by the storm, and lost portions of its roofing and many slates, while a structure erected by the signal service for the study of clouds was partially demolished. The new naval observatory building suffered in the same fashion, to the extent of about $1,200. At the Washington navy yard the big ship house was partially unroofed, and the gun shops were damaged slightly by the stripping of the roof. A special bulletin issued by the weather bureau states that for one minute the wind reached eighty miles an hour. The storm's damage is estimated to run from $250,000 to $500,000.

The weather bureau gives this official history of the storm:

"The storm which passed over Washington last night was reported on Sept. 26 as a tropical cyclone moving northwest from the Caribbean Sea, it being then southeast of Cuba. During the 27th it passed northwestward into the southeastern part of the Gulf of Mexico, and on the 28th moved northward west of Florida. On the morning of the 29th it was central over Southern Georgia, and by 8 p. m. of the 29th had advanced to Southwestern Virginia. The center passed over Washington about 11:30 Tuesday night, the lowest barometer reading 29.30. During the first three days the storm appeared to have very little energy, but on the 29th developed force rapidly as it moved northward."

Crew Drowns at Milwaukee.

The barge Sumatra, consort of the B. W. Arnold, bound down from Chicago, foundered off the Government pier at Milwaukee. Four sailors were drowned. The captain, mate and cook were rescued by the life-saving crew. The Sumatra was bound for Milwaukee loaded with railroad iron. The record of the wind's fury in Chicago harbor was that of a storm almost equaling in fury the great hurricane of 1894. Half a dozen vessels were sunk, and as many more badly damaged. The schooner Seaman broke from her moorings and raced back and forth, pounding the docks and smashing the smaller craft on every side, while their crews were helpless. Capt. McCreary, of the Seaman, two of his men and several men on board other boats moored in the slip had narrow escapes. Three or four sailors were thrown into the water, and were forced to battle for their lives.

Drunkards in Turkey.

This reminds us that the Turks, who are mentioned occasionally in the newspapers, have a singular manner of regulating drunkenness. If a Turk, overtaken with wine, falls down in the street and is arrested by the guard, he is sentenced to the bastinado; this punishment is repeated as far as the third offense, after which he is regarded as incorrigible and called "imperial drunkard," or "privileged drunkard." If he is then arrested, he has only to name himself, mention his lodging, say he is a "privileged drunkard;" he is released and sent to sleep upon the hot ashes of the baths. Thus does Pouqueville instruct us. But suppose that the privileged drunkard is suffering from a still or a numb and cannot give his name, address or station? What then? Of what avail his honorary title.—Boston Journal.

The Hand of a Queen.

A delicate piece of sculpture is a model of Queen Victoria's hand, which is still a very handsome one, and is said to have signed more important state papers and been kissed by more important men than the hand of any other queen that ever lived.

*Tie for ninth place.

The season just ended has not been as prosperous with professional baseball as the two or three seasons preceding. This is on account of the hard times. It is in evidenced clearly from the fact that fewer of the minor leagues have pulled through the entire season. As far as the National League is concerned, the attendance in the aggregate has been smaller than last year. The conditions of the race have been responsible for this to a large degree. For instance, the clubs in good baseball towns like New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia and Boston have never been in it, as far as the championship was concerned, for any length of time; while last year nine clubs were fighting it out until near the close of the season.

The business of the Chicago club, said President Hart, has fallen off both at home and abroad this season as compared with last, the greatest falling off being in the away-from-home games, caused by the reasons just stated. The attendance at home has been less than last year because we have had poorer attractions on holidays, Saturdays and Sundays, and also because the team was a greater number of games away from the pennant, although occupying the same relative position in the championship table as last year.

To prognosticate the performance for a coming season is a hard task. It is impossible to foretell what will be the condition of the men when they show up for work in the spring. The best pitchers of one season may be the poorest of the next. The heavy batsmen of 1896 may be the weak batsmen in 1897.

EIGHT DIFFERENT TICKETS.

Multiplicity of Presidential Nominations May Lead to Confusion.

Says a Washington correspondent: There are now eight presidential tickets in the field. Some of the tickets are duplications. Nevertheless they were nominated by separate national conventions, duly called, and in some States, as, for instance, in Ohio and Illinois, where State legislation controls the method of printing the tickets for presidential electors, this multiplicity of tickets is likely to cause confusion. In the order of their nomination the tickets are as follows:

Prohibitionist—Nominated at Pittsburg May 27:

For President—Joshua Levering, of Maryland.

For Vice President—Hale Johnson, of Illinois.

National Party—Free silver woman suffrage off-shoot of the regular prohibitionists, nominated at Pittsburg May 28:

For President—Charles E. Bentley, of Nebraska.

For Vice President—James Haywood Southgate of North Carolina.

Republican—Nominated at St. Louis June 18:

For President—William McKinley, of Ohio.

For Vice President—Garret Augustus Hobart, of New Jersey.

Socialist-Labor—Nominated at New York July 4:

For President—Charles H. Matchett, of New York.

For Vice President—Matthew Maguire, of New Jersey.

Democratic Party—Nominated at Chicago July 10 and 11:

For President—William Jennings Bryan, of Nebraska.

For Vice President—Arthur Sewall, of Maine.

Silverites—Nominated at St. Louis July 24:

For President—William Jennings Bryan, of Nebraska.

For Vice President—Arthur Sewall, of Maine.

People's Party—Nominated at St. Louis July 24 and 25:

National Democratic Party—Nominated at Indianapolis Sept. 3:

For President—John McAuley Palmer, of Illinois.

For Vice President—Simon Bolivar Buckner, of Kentucky.

END OF A LONG LEGAL FIGHT.

Judge Payne Appoints a Receiver for Iowa Farmers' Trust Company.

The bill for the appointment of a receiver for the Farmers' Trust Company of Iowa, which has been the subject of much litigation, was filed with the Superior Court at Chicago Thursday. The claimants were Julia C. Rogers, Caroline M. Hobbs, Frank F. Holmes, Emil Wallber, guardians of the Schoff estate and others who are owners of the bonds and stock of the company. Judge Payne appointed a title guarantee and a trust company receiver.

The company was incorporated in Iowa with a capital stock of $1,000,000, and its principal business has been to loan money on farm lands. The bill of the complainants alleges that Rockwell Sayer has been president of the company since its formation and, the claimants say, he has managed the business mainly for his own profit.

LONGEST IN ENGLISH HISTORY.

Queen Victoria Congratulated on Her Extended Reign.

Queen Victoria on Wednesday received an enormous number of congratulatory telegrams from all parts of the world, it being the day that her reign became the longest in English history. With the dawn Queen Victoria's reign exceeded that of her grandfather, George III., and she has therefore ruled longer than any other British monarch. George III. ruled fifty-nine years three months and two days. Her Majesty, up to Wednesday, has sat on the throne fifty-nine years three months and three days. All public rejoicings, however, have been deferred until July of next year, when, if spared, the Queen will have actually completed a reign of sixty years.

No cause is given for the deed.

The Methodist Church at Hartford City has been remodeled, refurnished and dedicated. The church is valued at $28,000 and the recent improvements cost $7,500. Rev. D. H. Young Maurer was knocked down, and before the current could be turned off at the station life was extinct.

Rev. E. C. Siver, pastor of the Friends' Church at West Middleton, near Kokomo, is singularly afflicted. QUEEREST OF HAILSTONES.

Phenomenal Showers in Various Parts of the Country.

Humboldt, the great scientist and an undisputed authority on atmospheric as well as other natural phenomena, tells of a hailstorm which passed over Tuscany on March 14, 1813, every ice globule of the entire fall being of a beautiful orange color. Five years prior to that extraordinary event, Carpiola, Germany, was treated to a fall of five feet of blood-red snow. This was followed by a fall of blue hail, which is said to have given "the whole face of nature an exceedingly curious aspect."

Red hailstones fell in Amsterdam in 1726, at London in 1663 (during the time of the great plague), and at divers places in Ireland and France during the early part of the present century.

In 1823 a monstrous hailstone fell at Munson, Mass. It is described in the Waltham Register of July 15 of that year as follows: "Extremes, four feet long, three feet wide and two feet thick. After the rough part of the body had been removed there remained a clear, solid block of ice two feet three inches long, one foot and six inches wide and one foot and three inches thick."

The most extraordinary hailstorm of history, as far as the queer shapes of the hailstones were concerned, was that which occurred on the Wadi Oasis in the Desert of Sahara in 1851. The individual ice chunks were of all imaginable forms. There were wheels with four, six and eight spokes, dumb bells large and small, triangles, cylinders, both solid and hollow, some of the solid ones being as much as six inches in length and not larger in diameter than a lead pencil. The common round hailstones congealed together in their descent, forming into fantastic pyramids, like the old pictures of the piled-up cannon balls; some took upon themselves the forms of gigantic bunches of grapes, and other masses "fell in the shape of necklaces, crowns, crosses, etc."

In a hailstorm in Wisconsin in 1886 the individual "stones" were of many odd shapes and forms. Some were shaped like ginger snaps, others like watches, loaves of bread, etc.—St. Louis Republic.

California's Oldest Voter Is 104 Years and Daily Smokes 40 Cigarettes.

Mr. Martin Barra, the oldest voter in California, is 104 years old, and lives in a country home in the beautiful valley of Santa Clara. He earns his living by chopping wood, and in this occupation he is assisted by two partners, the junior of whom is more than 70 years old. He is a native of Quito, Chili, and during his younger years was a merchant in his native country. He has a pretty little garden patch near his cabin and upon it he raises corn, beans, Chili peppers, and melons. When California was absorbed by the United States Mr. Barra became a citizen by the transfer and has voted whenever he remembered it was election day and the polls were not too far off. He is still in rugged health, his eyes are fine, and his teeth all sound and even. He well remembers the stirring times of '49, but he never cared to hunt for gold.

CHAPTER XIII.

It was a week after the scene above described.

"What are you reading, mother?"

"A letter from Russia."

"From Russia?"

"Yes, your fame has spread to Russia, girls. Listen for yourselves:

"'Dear Madam—A mutual friend, Madam Werner, of Ecks, to whom I had written respecting an English governess for my girls, writes to me that you have a young daughter who might like to take the position.

"'She would have nothing to do but talk English in my house. The salary I offer is £70 the first year, with an increase every year after that."

"'We live in the country, in a most healthy place. Your daughter is very young, I am told. I should endeavor to make my home a second home to her. She would be treated like my daughter.

"'Perhaps you will reflect on my proposal, dear madam, which I make as mother to mother.

"'Awaiting your reply,

"'I am, yours very faithfully,

"VERA ANISSIMOFF."

"That, girls, is my letter from Russia."

"How kindly she writes! I always heard the Russians were darlings," cried Dorry impulsively; adding: "Of course you'll let me go, mother."

"Dear child, let you go to a far-off country like that!"

"I'd love to go. Do let me, mother. I want so much to earn; and fancy, mother, £70 a year for doing nothing. Do—do let me go."

"Dorry, child, you are trembling more than ever. I wish I had not told you anything about it."

"Oh, mother, let me go. Promise me you'll let me go. She must be nice, or Madame Werner would not have recommended me to her, and she writes so kindly."

The mother stroked the girl's flushed cheeks.

"Well, we'll think of it. I must talk to Madame Werner and to the doctor. Change of air and scene you want indeed."

The result was that three weeks later Dorry and her mother stood on the platform of the Vienna station, her mother having traveled so far with her.

"Bear up, mother. See, I feel already better for the journey."

She looked better. It was her mother's one consolation. A little color had come to the pale cheeks; the trembling and twitching of lips and hands had greatly ceased.

It was three days after this. Dorry had reached the Russian frontier. She was alone. The old lady had long reached her destination.

"This is your train," said a porter's voice beside the girl. "Which class?"

"Second."

"Here you are then—this carriage."

Dorry looked at him in dismay. The carriage was full of men, smoking.

"Can't I get somewhere else?"

"There's no room anywhere else. You'll not get in at all if you wait much longer."

At this minute another voice spoke.

"Yes, there's room here, if the young lady will get in."

It was a gentleman. The girl looked at him.

"But my ticket is second class," she said.

"If you will allow me I will exchange with you."

"Oh, thank you, I——"

"Allow me"—he had already taken her by the hand and helped her in, and stood looking at her from the platform. She returned his gaze sorrowfully.

"Now you will have to travel with all those smoking men," she said.

"Yes." He smiled. "Unless you will allow me to travel with you."

"Why not? I don't want a whole carriage to myself."

"Don't you?" Again he smiled. "That is very kind of you. I shall be back in a minute."

He left and returned at once with a ticket for himself.

Strange metamorphosis! It had struck Miss Denbigh meanwhile that perhaps she had not been quite discreet in permitting this gentleman to give her his ticket, and letting him travel with her. With the acute comprehension of a young lady of fourteen summers, now that she had leisure to think the matter over, it struck her that the situation was quite romantic; and romantic situations, Dorry told herself, were things to be avoided.

Perhaps he guessed the thought passing in his companion's mind, for his manner become no less cordial, as it became no less polite and deferential, in the course of their further journey; and even Dorry's manner thawed a little at last.

"You are very young," he said, "to be traveling in a foreign country alone."

"I am going on for fifteen," was the reply.

The gentleman did not seem any more impressed by her venerableness than before. A smile even played about his lips and in the corners of his eyes. But it soon vanished, and an almost sad look replaced it, as he contemplated the child-girl with her earnest eyes. He knew so many girls "going on for fifteen" that were still in their nurseries, and here was she going out into the world to fight the hard battle of life, far away from all who loved her. He would have liked to pat her on the shoulder; he would have liked to push back her black curls and kiss her on the forehead.

But Miss Denbigh sat quite erect. Miss Denbigh wore her most proper expression. What would she have said to a gentleman venturing on any such familiarity? She was a severe spinster, "going on for fifteen," and her knight sans peur et sans reproche felt she wished him to bear that in mind.

There was silence for another half-hour. Then Miss Dorry herself began to speak.

"I only just remember," she exclaimed, "we have been talking English all the time. How did you know I was English?"

"How did I know you were English? Do you not know, little lady, an Englishman or Englishwoman is rarely mistaken—an English girl, never. But this is my station. I must leave you now," and he hesitated a moment, then, without leave or license, took the girl's face between his hands and kissed her on the eyes.

"You are a dear little woman. Think of me as a friend who wishes you well wherever you be."

Having said which, he lifted his hat once more, and left the train and the platform, but not the latter before having given the conductor a fee which insured his looking after his young protege for the rest of her journey.

Such was little Dorry's first and last romance.

Here is her own conclusion to her description of the meeting in a letter to "mother":

"A very nice man, I consider. I wonder was he married. He would make a regular kind husband, that I'm sure. The sort I mean to marry, mother, when I marry."

Here was a frank, determined little lady. What is it to be "going on for fifteen!" And this was a letter she wrote one month later:

"Dear Nora—To think I am here in Eldorado. I have grown so strong, and every one is good to me; the Russian mother has kept her promise; they have made their home my home.

"Dear Nora, take the inclosed and use it. What do I want money for? Do not talk of saving it up for me. Did I come to Eldorado to be a miser? I want to know it is spent as quick as earned—I want to be of use. If you save a penny of it for me, I shall never forgive you.

"Kiss my mother and my Bet for me.

"DORRY."

She was a brave little woman; she had gone to Eldorado of her own free will, she was no longer ill, and there was money inclosed in her letter to Nora. She ought to be very happy, yesterday had become to-day, to-day would become to-morrow. She tried to peer into the future—then she would set out home again along that very way that she had come. What way? She could not see it. She could see nothing but the snow, the heavy falling snow that hid the sky, like a great white curtain drawn across the window.

Yes, she ought to be right happy; but the snow was so dazzling. She drew her hand across her eyes. Ah, the burning, burning tears!

What was the matter with the brave child? They call this homesickness.

CHAPTER XIV.

It was the evening of the day on which Dorry left Ecks with her mother on her way to Vienna, thence to proceed alone to Russia.

Elizabeth set out on her walk to Dr. Simon's. It was not her first visit to the great lawyer. For some weeks past she had worked for him, translating documents into English.

It was almost dark when she knocked at his office door.

"Come in! Ah, you! Miss Denbigh. Good evening; take a seat."

The girl did so, and looked about her. The door opposite her was open. It led into a drawing room, superbly furnished.

Dr. Simon was rich, steinreich (literally "stone-rich"), as the good folks of Ecks said.

The girl's eyes lingered for a while on the grandeur of his house, then returned to the lawyer, the little wizened doctor leaning against his desk.

"And now our little account, miss! How much is it?"

Elizabeth flushed. The doctor knew her terms.

"Four columns and a half, at two marks a column, make nine marks," she stammered.

"Eh, what do four columns make, little miss? The half-column is hardly worth counting, I think. Here I have just eight marks. First-rate translation—really excellent. Good evening, Miss Denbigh. Eh, no, I've a letter here you might write for me, as you're on the spot, and such an excellent pen woman. Take a seat."

The girl did so, and wrote a short business letter, such as nothing but careful study of lawyers' language could have enabled her to write.

The doctor glanced over her shoulder.

"What, done already, that's sharp!"

With which remark, accompanied by a smile—and nothing else—he dismissed his translator.

The next minute the girl was in the street. "Stone-rich," she muttered, and her young face grew dark with anger, as she looked up at the house she had just left.

She stopped at Miss Smythe's on her way home, by request.

"Glad to see you, Miss Denbigh," that lady welcomed her by saying. "So you've made up your mind to accept the engagement I spoke of?"

"What is the name of the lady you spoke of to my mother?" asked Elizabeth.

"Mrs. Dosem."

"Should I have much to do?"

"You would have to do what a governess usually has to do."

"I will write to Mrs. Dosem to-night. I might accept the engagement at once. I should go over to London, I suppose?"

"Yes, I have already written to a friend in West Kensington, who will be happy to welcome you at her house. You will need rest before traveling northward."

"How kind of you! Thank you so much!" and the girl leaned forward in her gratitude.

CHAPTER XV.

"My trunk, please."

"Which, miss?"

"Little one—black—addressed 'Denbigh, London.'"

"Isn't here, miss."

"But it must be. It was registered."

"Where do you come from?"

"From Ecks."

"Then you changed at Bruchsal?"

"Yes."

"Your box must have stayed in the train there."

Thus it was that registration proved a useless expense in Miss Elizabeth Denbigh's case. Not registered herself, she arrived all right at the city of the famous dome, whilst as for her trunk, it was at this moment making a tour in the Bavarian Alps, or some other region of the fatherland, equally remote from the spot in which it ought to be.

Meanwhile, having telegraphed to Bruchsal, before betaking herself to the hotel "Zu den drei Koniglen," Miss Denbigh directed her steps toward the cathedral, and there spent a meditative hour.

Not till the next morning did she leave Cologne for London, in the hope that she might find her trunk there, and not until she came within half an hour of that city did the thought flash on her: What if it were not in London? She could not present herself at the house of Miss Smythe-Smythe's friends without a change of dress. She had a foreign girl's notion of English strictness in matters of dress—an unworldly girl's notion of a worldly woman's worldliness. "Write home?" Mother would be so anxious.

She looked out of the window. That must be London—the sea of houses stretching far away, the noise, the fog. In another minute she would be there—alone. Her lips quivered; a tear stole down her face.

"Poor girl!" soliloquized a gentleman opposite her. "I wonder what's the matter with her?"

The next moment he was walking out of the station. He was a kind man, and he pitied the little lady from his heart; but he supposed she had friends, hoped she had—to inquire whether she had or not never entered his head.

That is why, while our English friend was walking slowly into town, a troubled look very now and then crossing his handsome face, as he thought of the woebegone young traveler, and wondered was she in safe hands, another gentleman, who had traveled in the same carriage up to London, now turned to the young lady and, in English unmistakably foreign, said:

"What have you to grieve for, miss? Can one help?"

The girl smiled.

"I am not grieving. I've only lost my luggage."

"Oh, the trouble! How so?"

"It's such a stupid story, you'll hardly believe it."

"No, just for it is stupid, I will believe it. Who does expect cleverness from so little a miss?"

She poured forth her tale of woe, hiding nothing from the loss of her luggage down to her dread of facing the lady in West Kensington in her dusty traveling gear.

The good-natured German at once accompanied her to the luggage room. Alas! the trunk had not arrived. "The young lady must have patience. It would probably turn up soon."

"And you will not go to your grand friends?"

"How could I, like this?"

The gentleman looked at her. She certainly looked very shabby, and he quite entered into her girlish dread of presenting herself at West Kensington in her traveling costume, and without luggage. He had read her story in her frank brown eyes, in the one little ungloved hand, in the shabby dress, and the calm way in which she asserted her equality with the well-dressed gentleman.

"Couldn't you tell me of a nice hotel where if—it wouldn't be too expensive to wait a day or so? I waited at Cologne."

"My dear"—it was nonsense to treat this child like a woman—"my dear"—and he looked down kindly at the flushed, eager face—"I know of a hotel where the charges are very moderate, but—you are not in Cologne. You had better go to Kensington. Your friends would be very vexed to know that you had stayed at a hotel alone."

"They are not my friends, and I shall not tell them. Where is the hotel, please?" in reply. "Is it far from here?"

It was not far. He drove her to the hotel at once, gave her into the care of the landlady, and then bade her farewell.

"They can place a nice room at your disposal, my dear. You can there make any change you like in your dress. Then take my advice, and drive to Kensington."

"I shall drive there in a day or so, when I have my luggage. How kind you are!" and the girl's eyes dimmed. "If every one were only so kind; but no, I could never present myself like this at Kensington—I shall see you again, I suppose?"

"This is my name and my address; if you need anything, write to me. If you are wise, you will go to Kensington. Think over it. Good-by;" and, raising his hat, he went.

CHAPTER XVI.

Wearied out, she threw the card on a table, and, without even pausing to read it, flung herself on the bed, and turning her face to the wall, fell fast asleep. How long she had lain thus she did not know, but it was deep twilight when she woke, or—was she still dreaming? There were voices in the room.

"A few, eh? So I said. Paid for a whole week in advance. Catch a Jew do that for nothing!"

No, she was not dreaming. She was wide, wide awake; and there they stood, reading his card and talking. What could they mean? She passed her hand across her eyes, and then fixed them full on the two women—the big, child-like eyes. What could they mean by their talk? She did not ask them. She only said wearily:

"I do not want you. Why did you come?"

They left the room quietly.

And then—ah, yes, girls are girls—deceived so easily; so easily undeceived. Then a new look came into her eyes; they ceased to be child-like. The world had one more woman, one girl less.

A day alone in London had done it.

Somebody knocked at the door.

"Your supper, miss."

"Thank you; leave it there."

How bright it was outside. All the lamps were lit, and threw their light on the wet pavement. What a throng of people—men and women, hurrying home. No one trespassed on their sleep with cruel words, or, if they did, they were prepared for it. What had she done that she should be treated like the worst of these? that she should have no friend in all London but the Jew? What was his name? She took up the card.

Dr. Simon.

Strange coincidence! So there were Jews and Jews, Dr. Simons and Dr. Simons; and the most foolish thing in all the world was to be bitter against a nation, a sect, a city—no, not a city. There could be nothing good in London, in this city where she had first stood face to face with badness, had learned to know what badness was. In all London there was nothing good but the Jew, and he was not of London. Leave him out, and what was left? A brother of her father, who would not know his brother's working daughter; Kensington, where they would greet her icily; and, beneath the window where she stood, the hurrying, hurrying crowd, the rich jostling with the poor, with not a glance at their poverty, not a shudder at their nakedness.

She opened the window, and, making a parcel of her supper, flung it down to a woman at whose skirts a troop of children were dragging, crying with the wild cry of hunger. She was reminded of what a Frenchman once said: It was as droll as watching monkeys eat, the way they packed it into their mouths, and then stood munching, with a look of monkey pleasure. It was so seldom they could pack their mouths full, and munch.

This then was London.

Somebody knocked at the door again.

"Have you done your supper, miss?"

"Yes."

"Good night, miss."

No answer.

Then, impulsively:

"Stop; what did you mean by—but it doesn't matter. I shall leave here tomorrow at ten o'clock."

(To be continued.)

If a woman hasn't a husband she gets a cat or dog; anything, so it is something she can worry about for staying out nights.

OPENING OF SCHOOL.

MISERIES OF YOUNG AMERICA IN THE FALL.

Mighty Preparations Made by Parents and Children—The Effect Upon Trade—The Woes of Careful Mammas and Much-Tried Teachers.

Getting an Education.

People of mature age do not always treat with proper consideration the woes of children.

It is common for grown persons to exhort their juniors with the words, "You are seeing the happiest days now you will ever know," and, to do them credit, they believe what they say, but there never was a greater mistake, for

LAST YEAR'S BOOKS.

the miseries of childhood are just as real, and, in proportion to the ability to bear, just as heavy, as the woes endured by their fathers and mothers. The little girl who has lost her doll suffers just as much as forty years later she will when she loses her husband, perhaps more; the boy who breaks his wagon is just as much concerned as his father when the latter loses money; these things are all comparative. This matter of going to school, for instance, is to boys and girls a source of real suffering, and, though their elders laugh at it, the approach of the fall term represents to the childhood and youth of the land as much genuine misery as the

THE NEW TEACHER'S ADDRESS.

outbreak of a civil war. According to the statistics furnished by the Bureau of Education, there are in the district schools alone of this country over 13,000,000 children enrolled, while probably enough are entered in all other institutions to bring the number up to

FIRST DEPARTURE FROM HOME.

15,000,000. Fancy the misery endured by 15,000,000 young of the human species at being forced to go to school; the barrels of tears that are shed, the millions of complaints, the trillions of sighs and objections, the quadrillions of wishes that they did not have to go. The fact that the misery endured by the little folks is small misery, and about matters that their elders do not regard as worthy of serious notice, makes no difference, to the children it is real and exceedingly hard to bear.

Theoretically, youthful woes should be in complete harmony with the old copybook maxim, "Knowledge is power." Practically, the average youngster far more heartily coincides with the opinion expressed by the author of the book of Ecclesiastes, "He that increaseth knowledge increaseth sorrow." There is something in the nature of childhood antagonistic to trouble, and very little if any effort is needed to shake it off. When the school term is ended—whether in the lower-grade schools, wrestling with the mysteries of grammar and spelling, od in the academies and universities, where algebra and geometry are dished up in daily doses and Greek and Latin from the piece de resistance—and the youngsters pack their books and start for home, the world is full of brightness and the vacation seems to have no end. So many plans are laid, so much pleasure is anticipated, that the youthful mind entirely loses sight of the fact that time has a habit of flying, and that the autumn term with its pedagogues and books will come as surely and as soon as the season can roll around. About this season the fact becomes emphatically impressed on the juvenile intellect by the preparations in his behalf made by the parents and others interested in his welfare, and the liberal advertisements by wide-awake and enterprising firms of their fresh and stylish supplies of school clothing and shoes for youths and misses. Then it is that the boy begins to realize that the dreaded hour is near at hand, and the miss just emerging from short dresses finds the tears welling up in her eyes as she reflects that no matter what liberty she may have enjoyed during the vacation, the time of permanent release is not yet.

But everything has its humorous side, and the humors of the term opening are just as pronounced as those of a variety show, says the Globe-Democrat. The old-time district school has been the subject of many jests, and not a few writers of marked ability have exercised their talents on the comic phases of school life in the country, but no pen can do anything like justice to the first day of the fall school term in days gone. In the first place, there was generally a new teacher, for the wages were so low that few teachers could afford to stay more than a few months in the same place without risk of starvation. The new pedagogue gathered his flock before him on the first day, and a motley flock it was. He attended "preaching" most likely in the same building the day before, had a preliminary survey of the lambs of his fold in their Sunday raiment, and probably was well pleased with the looks of his future pupils. They were on dress parade and made a creditable showing, the boys a little uncomfortable in their Sunday clothes, but hardly more so than their fathers in the stiff, hot, black broadcloth that had done duty in the house of prayer for half a generation; the girls a little shy, and all critical of the new teacher, but friendly and hospitable as country people are wont to be. On the Monday, however, any illusions he may have cherished were dispelled. The boys were in their everyday clothes, with their pantaloons tucked into the tops of their boots, and each was equipped with a pile of books that were used during the term of the last pedagogue. Of course the new teacher made a speech and in diplomatic language outlined his policy, and equally, of course, he read a long set of rules and regulations for the government of the school, and after reading them he put them carefully away, to be seen and heard of no more. Occasionally there would be a vague reference to rule 1 or 2, a reference that was commonly lost on the flock, but further than this the rules were inoperative, and the teacher, after a few appeals to the sense of propriety of his charges, secured order by moral suasion aided and abetted by a stout switch, which, when not in active use, stood conspicuously in the corner. As a general thing, however, it must be admitted, the switch was used only as a last resort, for when applied vigorously enough to produce the required results it left perceptible marks and contusions on the young rustic exterior, marks that could afterward be exhibited at home with dire complaints and would possibly result in a subsequent visit of an enraged parent to the temple of education. The city pedagogue has now learned a trick in this connection that emphasizes strongly the advance of pedagogic science. When it becomes desirable to rectify the idiosyncrasies of his pupils, he takes half a yard of rubber hose, wherewith he can extract ear-splitting howls and excruciating yells from the young ideas without leaving on their cuticle any outward or visible sign of their having undergone unusual punishment.

But if the country pedagogue was then behind his city brother in the matter of birch, he was a long way ahead of him when it came to classification. In the city schools all this is done by rule and precept, so that the city teacher has nothing to do but follow the principles laid down for his guidance by the board. In the classification of his pupils the country teacher was in the old time a law unto himself, fettered only by the number of pupils and by the variety of text-books. By the exercise of a little ingenuity he could get twenty pupils into forty classes, and hear them all in the course of the day. But the feat demanded thought, for as the school was conducted on the principle that every scholar ought to do both his studying and his reciting within the limits of the school hours, no little calculation was necessary to enable one to find time to study his lesson while another was reciting, and when this problem was multiplied by the number of pupils and of lessons, it must be conceded that the country teacher needed brains in order to solve the difficulties that lay before him. The opening of the term was, for him, a time of mental exertion, and he wasted more phosphorus in the effort to classify his young people than would be needed to organize a campaign.

UP BEFORE THE PRINCIPAL.

A NECESSARY PRELIMINARY.

Great as is the burden of misery brought by the school opening to all grades of youngsters, to none is it productive of more genuine sorrow than the young girl just budding into womanhood. She is just beginning to realize what is meant by growing up—is just leaving dolls and taking to beaux. School in the fall has due horrors for her sensitive mind. She does not see why she should be compelled to attend when other girls, scarcely older than herself, have long dresses and beaux and a good time. Nor is she to be comforted by the suggestion that only two or three years will elapse ere she is at liberty, for two or three years under such circumstances look as long as two or three eternities.

The young man in the case does not take matters quite so hard. To be sure, he hates to go to school, but he recognizes the fact that the "governor" says he must, and is ready to concede that "what the governor says goes." But to the boy at school, or college, there are open many avenues of amusement and sources of instruction that are closed to the girl. He may have an immense amount of fun out of the new students by hazing them; he may stand them upon the floor, and compel them to dance for his edification, or may insist that one shall sing a comic song, while another weeps at the suggested ideas, and in many other ways may oblige them to contribute to his entertainment. He may fight with other boys, and so improve his mind, to say nothing of the mental advantages to be gained from base-ball, foot-ball, rowing and running away from the college watchman. So it is easy to see that so far as solid advantages are concerned, the boy is far ahead of the girl, and has by no means so much reason to dread the advent of September.

GETTING READY FOR SCHOOL.

To the teacher the school opening means work, duty and anxiety. There is dignity to maintain, and many crosses to bear patiently. It is only when the first few weeks have reduced affairs to a system that her nervous fears become somewhat dulled. Then the plump, rosy-cheeked "schoolmarm" treats it all as business. She sees her little world constantly renewing itself, like an ever-flowing stream; every year witnesses the exit of thousands from the school room who will never enter it again, in the pursuit of knowledge. She is the ruler of many destinies, and in the long average pride, success and little joys compensate for the thousand-and-one annoyances that beset her path in the temple of learning.

All from a Shark.

Sharks furnish quite a number of valuable products. The liver of the shark contains an oil of a beautiful color that never becomes turbid and possesses medicinal qualities equal to those of cod liver oil. The skin after being dried takes the polish and hardness of mother-of-pearl. The fins are always highly prized by the Chinese, who pickle them and serve them at dinner as most delicate fish. The Europeans, who do not appreciate fins of a shark as a food product, are content to convert them into fish glue, which competes with the sturgeon glue prepared in Russia. As for the flesh of the shark that, despite its oily taste, is eaten in certain countries. It is employed also along with the bones in the preparation of a fertilizer. The Icelanders, who do a large business in sharks' oil, send out annually a fleet of one hundred vessels for the capture of the great fish.

Li Hung Chang's Curiosity.

Even at the grave of General Grant the curiosity of the Chinese diplomat was not subdued. After placing a wreath on the tomb of the great American, he turned to General Porter and inquired how much the palatial structure cost and when it was to be dedicated. As soon as these questions were answered he inquired:

"How many people made contributions?"

"Eighty thousand," said General Porter.

"Indeed?" For a moment it looked as if Li Hung Chang were really surprised.

"We do not forget that your subscription of $500 was one of the first received," said General Porter.

The viceroy looked immensely pleased at this. "And that structure yonder," he said, "I suppose that is to be a temple in which you will worship the remains of your great general?"

"No," said General Porter, hurriedly. "It is not a temple. It is only a tomb."

"It is very beautiful," said the viceroy. "How many others will be buried in it?"

He asked many other questions—if this was the usual way of burial in America? When told that it was not, he asked for a description of the usual way. How were the grounds to be laid out when the mausoleum was completed, what trees were to be planted, and the like. The tree-planting question may have contained a covert reminder that he did not forget the objection of the Sabbatarian park board to his planting a tree on Sunday.

When he had finished with his questions, Earl Li gave one more look toward the sarcophagus. And then he turned to go, but just before he passed out he stopped and made a low obeisance toward the dead.—Atlanta Journal.

Our Army of Lawyers.

The allowance of lawyers to population in this country is rather more liberal than that of preachers. There are 89,422 men and 208 women engaged in the legal profession, and, supposing each to have an average of ten suits on hand, the litigation going on at one time in the United States would foot up 896,300 cases.

Five Thousand Sermons.

Queen Victoria's chaplain in ordinary, Rev. A. Robins, has just preached his five-thousandth sermon at Windsor.

"Why are you putting such big words in that challenge?" asked the eminent pugilist of his private secretary. "They are jaw-breakers, sir!" The explanation was quite satisfactory.—Puck.

"I am for the largest use of silver in the currency of the country. I would not dishonor it: I would give it equal credit and honor with gold. I would make no discrimination. I would utilize both metals as money and discredit neither. I want the double standard."

Palmer And Silver.

Rufus Magee of Cass county and one or two other gold democrats of Putnam county it is stated, made speeches Wednesday declaring for Palmer and Buckner, Mr. Bryan is not sound enough on the money question to satisfy these gentlemen. They are hard money advocates. We call their attention to the following letter:

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., March 11, 1878.

George Baber, Esq.:

Dear Sir—I have noticed the very kind references made to my name that have been so extensively copied from the Daily Evening News, and have appreciated your good opinion and good will, but at the same time, have felt some curiosity to know what the News would consider to be "soundness" on the "money question."

My financial theories demand the free coinage of gold and silver by the United States. and the divorce of congress and the treasury from the control of the currency; and then, with an honest, economical and orderly administration of public affairs, the proper adjustment of the tariff upon strict revenue principles, a system of free banking upon security for the redemption of its circulation in coin and the restoration of local self-government to all the people of the states, we might expect a return of prosperity to the people.

I know I will not lose your friendship, which I have so long valued, but at the same time I am afraid you will not conside me convalescent on the money question. Respectfully.

JOHN M. PALMER.

McNagny's Speech.

As the DAILY yesterday predicted, Mr. McNagny had a large attendance at the meeting last evening. The club room was packed full, and overflowed onto the streets. His speech was one of the best we ever heard him make, one of the best we have heard this campaign. He made many new points, which will add greatly to the already large stock of arguments our local speakers have.

Ohio Doubtful.

The republicans are frightened at the growth of the free silver sentiment in Ohio and the national committee has arranged to send its best speakers into that state. Among them, chairman Hanna has already selected the following.

Senator Burrows of Michigan will speak twice a day as fellows: Oct. 13, Portsmouth and Ironton; 14th, Logan and Columbus; 15th, Marion and Fostoria; 16th, Paulding and Toledo; 17th, Elyria and Cleveland; 19th, Painesville and Ashtabula; 20th, Clyde and Sandusky. Ex-Senator Warner Miller will speak at Wauseon and Napoleon Oct. 13 and at Mansficid on the 14th. Congressman R. B. Mahoney will speak in Ohio, commencing next Monday.

No 76-Cent Wheat

We said in our answer to the Goodwin article the other day, that there was no 76-cent wheat during the war. We have since, looked the matter up and find that the lowest price of wheat during the year 1862, was $1.30, and the highest, $1.55, or about double the figure named. The price kept going higher during the war, till in April 1866, it reached $3.45 a bushel, the average price for that year, being $2.20 Figures are taken from Reports of the New York Chamber of Commerce and are no doubt correct. It should be stated they are seaboard prices, and are higher than prices paid here, by the cost of transporting a bushel of wheat from here to New York.

Dollars Per Capita

There has always been a good deal of disputing about the amount of money to each person, that is in circulation, and then seems a good chance for future disputes. But we wish to call attention of our readers to a statement made by Hon. Walpole Colerick, when he spoke in Auburn. He said that in 1866, the amount of money per capita was $78. We have had our attention called to this by several republicans, who deny its occuracy, and we have taken pains to get the figures, which are from the reports of U. S. treasury officers at the close of the fiscal year, ending June 1, 1866.

MONEY IN CIRCULATION.

Demand notes	272,162
Greenbacks	400,619,206
Temporary loans	120,176,196
One & 2-year treas. notes	3,454,230
Certificates of indebtedness	26,391,000
Postal currency	7,030,700
Comp. int. treas. notes	159,012,140
Fractional currency	20.040,176
7-30 treasury notes	139,301,700
7-30 " " '64 & '65	806,251,550
State bank circulation	19,996,163
National bank Notes	281,479,608
Total	1,984,024,831
Silver	79, 213,391
Gold	536,791,620
Grand total	2,600,029,842
Population, estimated	36,443,321

The population in 1860, was in round numbers, 31 millions, and in 1870, 38 millions, so it is safe to estimate it at the above figure of over 36 millions for 1866. And dividing the grand total by this, we have $71.37 as the amount per capita, being a little higher than Mr. Colerick had it. He had probably omitted some of the items that go to make up the grand tatal. The amount per capita at present is about $24.

B. & O. Excursions.

On October 11, 12 and 13 the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad will sell excursion tickets to Washington, D. C., at rate of one fare for the round trip account Union Veteran Legion, Annual Encampment. Tickets will be good for return until Oct. 26, 2896.

For further information call on or address any B. & O. Ticket Agent, or L. S. Allen, Ass't Gen'l Pass'r Agent, Chicago, Ill.

Straw Vote.

Straw votes are all the rage now. Charles DuWaun reports the votes taken on the Detroit excursion train Sunday. The first vote showed Bryan 137; McKinley, 102. Then believing the vote did not include all on the train they took another, and the second showed, Bryan, 158; Mckinley, 131. Nearly like this was the "straw vote" Charles Kinsey and wife took the other day when they drove up to South Milford in Lagrange county. They went via Avilla and Kendallville, and Mrs. K. agreed to count the Bryan pictures in the windows they passed, and he the McKinley pictures. At So. Milford each had 54.

This gentleman enjoys the distinct title of being the leader in his line of business and the arbiter of fashion among the young men of the city.

For a number of years Mr. Yesbera has been furnishing the people of Auburn and DeKalb county with ready made and tailor made clothing, gents furnishing goods, etc. He has invariably given satisfaction to his customers, and has by fair dealing and rigid business honor built up a business that he can be justly proud of. The stock carried comprises everything in the line of fine and medium ready-made clothing, men's furnishing goods, all the latest novelties in fine neckwear and haberdashery, underclothing, boys' and children's clothing, etc, etc., and the stock carried is fully equal to the needs of the city. Mr. Yesbera is assisted in his store by Ed Ostrander and George Kuhlman, both popular, liberal-spirited young men, who have largely contributed to the the success of the business. As to the proprietor, Mr. Yesbera, he is known as one of our most worthy citizens and fully entitled to the confidence and esteem of the community.

FUNNY.

A leading republican was around a day or two with a paper and was getting signatures to a petition to send to their state committee to request that speakers of national reputation be sent in DeKalb county, for said he, "If we don't get them, we are gone to h—l in this county, and maybe we are anyhow. And it is too d—d bad." From this it seems our local speakers are getting too much for them.

Another was arguing the money question with some friends and pulled out a silver dollar, and told them it was worth 53 cents, and asked if they could tell him where the 47 cents had gone to. They said they could not. "I can tell you," said he, "It is in the vaults at Washington." And he seemed satisfied with his own great head.

How is It?

Is it true that the company at Garrett kept $3 back from its employes last payday? Such is the report. It is said one man objected, and said he needed the money. It was paid him in full, but next day he got an "indefinite layoff." This is the story, whether true or not, that is going around now. It is claimed the $3 was for car fare on that excursion to Canton.

BUTLER.

A visit to Canton and McKinley. The writer, accompanied by wife and sister, Mrs. M. A. Young, of Van Wert, Ohio, made up a part of the company that filled thirteen B. & O. coaches over that road on the 29th of September to the city of the plains. The day was dark and rainy minimizing the pleasures of the trip to the lowest degree. We reached Chicago Junction about one hour late. From this point our route lay directly east across Richland, Ashland, Medina, Wayne and Summit counties, passing within a half mile of the home of my boyhood. As the train rushed along many an object of absorbing interest was presented to our momentary view. Old Stankertown, gray and somber from age, spread out along its single street, not unlike its appearance forty years ago. Here and there the flickering surface of yellow old Chippewa, shrunken to one-third of its former size, could be seen between the patches of dwarf timber that still clings to its banks. a few familiar landmarks, dotted with farm residences, that were as familiar as household words, flashed into view and were then hidden by intervening obstacles. Warrick at 11:30. When I last visited this place the site of the depot was a tangled mass of hazel brush. A mile more brought us to Clinton, on the Ohio Canal, once a noted grain market before railroads gridironed the country. Then on toward Akron, up the valley of the Tuscarawas, along the channel of the old canal that once bore upon its muddy bosom the commerce of a mighty commonwealth, now dwindled and shrunken, yet doing valiant service to the people of this valley. Many boats were yet seen on their passageway up and down this waterway. We pass Barberton, whose tall chimneys and immense factories cover a wide space; then Portage, then Akron, spread all over its surrounding hills, with more manufacturing plants than any other town of its size in the state. Then on to Canton which we reached at 1 p. m. The rain had now ceased, and we formed a procession and headed by bands marched to the tabernacle and were welcomed by the great McKinley. About 3 p. m. rain again commenced, so we were unable to do the town, and about 7 p. m. were again enroute for home which we reached without incident at 2:30 a. m., on the morning of the 30th, well pleased with our brief visit to places held most dear to our memories.

GOLD FOR THE RICH.

SILVER ALONE PAID OUT TO THE POOR.

Rev. Father Kelley, of Chicago, Who Deposited $500 in Gold with the Illinois Trust and Savings Bank, Cannot Get the Gold Again.

Chicago, Oct. 6.—(Special.)—There was an exciting scene one day last week in the great counting room of the Illinois Trust and Savings bank. Powerful pressure induced the Chicago papers, with a single exception, to suppress the story. The Chicago press is absolutely under the domination of the banks and not a line damaging to the success of the English gold standard is given publication. Here is the story:

The Rev. Father Edward Kelley is one of the best known clergymen in Chicago. He was until last week an ardent gold standard advocate and a supporter of McKinley. Several months ago an aged widow, one of his parishioners, became alarmed over the safety of a sum of gold which was stored in her house. The amount was $500, and she intrusted it to Father Kelley and asked him to deposit it in some bank. He placed it on deposit in the Illinois Trust and Savings bank. Recently the widow became alarmed by the statement of the Chicago press that if Bryan should win bank deposits would be paid in 53 cent dollars, and asked her pastor to withdraw the gold from the bank and place it in a safety deposit vault.

The following day Father Kelley went to the bank and after explaining the circumstances presented the original deposit slip for the $500. The cashier refused to pay in gold. Father Kelley was astounded.

"I deposited this in gold, and I demand gold in return," said the indignant churchman.

The cashier smiled blandly and said it was against the rule of the bank to pay out in gold. He handed out $460 in silver certificates and $40 in currency. He positively refused to give bank notes or any money directly redeemable in gold.

Father Kelley, holding the money in his hand, went to the private office of John J. Mitchell, president of the bank, and being well known, was admitted. He explained what had occurred, supposing, of course, that the wrong would be rectified.

"We are not paying out gold, and I can make no exception to the rule," said President Mitchell, firmly.

"Do you mean to tell me that this woman cannot have back the gold she entrusted in your keeping?" demanded Father Kelley.

"The money you have in your hand is all right," was the evasive reply of the now uneasy millionaire.

"That is not what you and people of your class are telling the country," said Father Kelley, his voice trembling with indignation. "You say that these silver certificates represent coin which has an intrinsic value of but 53 cents to the dollar as compared with gold, and that if Bryan is elected it will take two silver dollars to equal the purchasing power of one gold dollar. You have this woman's gold. You pay her back what you publicly proclaim to be 53-cent dollars. There can be but two possible constructions placed upon your conduct. You are either a liar or a thief!"

Pale with excitement and anger Father Kelley turned his back on the bank president and went away with his silver certificates. He went to other banks but was unable to secure the $500 in gold. Locked in the vaults of the Illinois Trust and Savings bank was not less than $2,000,000 of the yellow gold. It is being hoarded to buy bonds with if McKinley is elected. It is too valuable and scarce for widows and ordinary people.

President Mitchell is quoted by the financial editor of one of the Chicago papers as saying that "the cashier supposed Father Kelley wanted the gold for the purpose of hoarding, and that they did not pay out gold to such persons."

What do you think of that, you gold standard worshipers? If you want to hoard anything, hoard silver. The banks will hoard gold. They will keep on forcing down the price of silver and enhancing the price of gold, until gold goes to a premium. They will then buy bonds with their gold and you will pay the interest on the same—you and your children and grandchildren.

Do you think you can get gold at a bank? Try it. You cannot get a gold dollar unless as a personal favor. And yet Mr. McKinley tells you that today one American dollar is as good as another American dollar, and that if he is elected president it always will be. If Mr. Mc Kinley is elected president gold will go to a premium the next day. The banks and trusts and syndicates have hoarded it in greedy anticipation of such an event.

The Heidelbachs, the Ickleheimers, the Lazards, the Pierpont Morgans, the Kuhns, the Loebs, and all the other gold brokers of Wall street, have recently added $25,000,000 to the gold reserve of the national treasury, and they are now waving the American flag to show how patriotic they are.

What does the United States give these gold gamblers for this $25,000,000?

Greenbacks.

When can Mr. Ickleheimer get back his gold for his greenbacks?

On demand. He can cash in those greenbacks to-morrow if he cares to and bring the reserve below $100,000,000 but Mr. Ickleheimer is generously maintaining the national credit until after the election. No matter who is elected, the gold clique will make a rush on that gold reserve the day after election, and it will melt like a snow drift in August. And then Mr. Cleveland will issue more bonds.

And then President John J. Mitchell of the Illinois Trust and Savings bank will invest the $500, deposited in gold by the aged widow, in interest bearing bonds, and thus protect our national honor. But the aged widow will not draw the interest. President Mitchell will draw the interest and she will help pay for it by increased taxes on her humble home.

New Era.

Mr. Editor. It is laughable to hear the republicans squeal over this campaign. They know their cake is dough It shows a week spot for the Editor of the Dispatch to think he can fool the farmers of this county with the stuff he is publishing. We farmers of Butler township are wide awake this campaign. If McKinley is elected, it will continue to be the old game of the small pigs and large ones eating from the same trough. The small ones will get lean and the large ones fat. I would say to every republican workingman that if free silver was a good year ago when McKinley voted for it, why is it not now? He will have a slim vote in Butler township. We stand for free coinage of both gold and silver. And I advise my democratic and free silver friends to stand by every man on the ticket, county ticket and all. You cannot afford to change one name for another. We have the best men for all the places. Let us give them every vote. Stamp the rooster on each ballot, national, state and local. J. H. B.

How To Mark Your Ballot.

It is about time to commence educating voters on how to stamp their ballots under our present system of voting. At every election since the adoption of the Australian system many ballots have been cast aside and not counted for the reason that they were not properly stamped. It is not a difficult matter at all to vote under the Australian law. If you desire to vote a straight ticket you simply stamp in the large square at the head of the ticket you wish to vote. That will count one for each of the candidates beneath that square.

If you wish to vote a scratched or split ticket, do not stamp within the large square, but stamp the small square to the left of the name of every man for whom you wish to vote. By following these instructions you can make no mistake.

There will be two tickets this year. One will contain the names of presidential electors and state officers. This will be on red colored paper. The other ticket will contain names of candidates from congressman down to county commissioner. It will be printed on white paper.

When you go into the election room to vote, you will be handed two ballots. You will take these tickets with you into the booth, there stamp them and fold them up separately. You will then return with them and hand them to the inspector who will deposit them in the proper ballot boxes.

If you do not fully understand how to mark your ballot you have a right to call upon the clerk to assist you. Should there be anything that you do not fully understand it would be well for you to make some inquiry of your neighbor or some other person who can give you the information desired.

IF YOU COULD ENTER THE HOMES OF THIS NATION AND SEE HOW HOPE DEFERRED HAS MADE THE HEART SICK, IF YOU COULD SEE THE PARENTS, WHO, IN HOPES OF BETTER DAYS, HAVE PLANNED FOR THE HIGHER EDUCATION OF THEIR CHILDREN, IN ORDER THAT THE CHILDREN MIGHT BEGIN THE BATTLE OF LIFE WITH GREATER ADVANTAGES THAN THEIR PARENTS, BUT WHO HAVE BEEN COMPELLED TO KEEP THEIR CHILDREN AT HOME IN ORDER TO KEEP THE WOLF FROM THE DOOR, YOU WOULD UNDERSTAND WHAT THE GOLD STANDARD MEANS. IT MEANS A LOWER ORDER OF CIVILIZATION, AND, IF CONTINUED, WE WILL SINK DOWN WHERE THE FEW OWN ALL THE WEALTH, AND THE MANY ARE SIMPLY DEPENDENT TENANTS.—MR. BRYAN AT CHARLOTTE, N. C.

A Chance to Make Money.

I have made $1,640 clear money in 87 days and attended to my household duties besides, and I think this is doing splendid for a woman inexperienced in business. Anyone can sell what everyone wants to buy, and every family wants a Dish Washer I don't canvass at all; people come or send for the washer, and every washer that goes out sells two or three more, as they do the work to per minutes. I am going to devote my whole time to this business now and I am sure that I can clear $5,000 a year. My sister and brother have started in the business and are doing splendid. You can get complete instructions and hundreds of testimonials by addressing the Iron City Dish Washer Co., Station A. Pittsburg, Pa., and if you don't make lots of money it's your own fault. MRS. W. H. tf

A Dandy Thing to Sell!

I have been doing so well this summer selling combination dippers that I think it is my duty to tell others about it. I have not made as much money as some I read about, but I never made less than $3 and often $5 a day; the dipper can be used as a fruit jar filler; a plain dipper; a fine strainer; a funnel; a strainer funnel; a sick room warming pan, and a pint measure. These eight different uses makes the dipper such a necessary article that it sells at nearly every house, as it is so cheap. You can get a sample by sending, as I did, 18 two-cent stamps to pay postage, etc., to W. H. Baird & Co., Station A, Pittsburg. Pa., and they will mail you a dipper, and you can go right to work. Any one can make $3 or $4 a day anywhere. A READER. tf

We would not rest easy over night without it in the house." The remedy undoubtedly saves more pain and suffering than any other medicine in the world. Ever family should keep it in the house, for it is sure to be needed sooner or later. For sale by Davenport the druggist. 44

The New Hook Spoon Free to All.

I read in the Christian Standard that Miss A M. Fritz, Station A., St. Louis, M., would give an elegant plated hook spoon to anyone sending her ten 2-cent stamps. I sent for one and found it so useful that I showed it to my friends, and made $13,000 in two hours, taking orders for the spoon; it is a household necessity. It cannot slip into the dish or cooking vessel, being held in the place by a hook on the back. The spoon is something that housekeepers have needed ever since spoons were first invented. Anyone can get a sample spoon by sending ten 2-cent stamps to Miss Fritz. This is a splendid way to make money around home. Very truly,

I saw in your paper that a 13 year old boy made $1.25 the first hour he worked selling the Perfection Metal Tip Lampwick. I ordered a sample and went to work and the first week I cleared $10, the second week I cleared $15. I expect to run it up to $25 a week in the near future, as the Perfection Metal Tip Lampwick makes such a beautiful white light and does away with smoky chimneys and bad odor and saves oil. it is easy to sell. If you wish to try it send 13 cent stamps to Miss A. M. Fritz, Station A. St. Louis, Mo, and she will send you sample outfit, this is a good way to make money around home.

Chronic constipation is a painful, disagreeable and life shortening difficulty. It deranges the system, causes sick headache, bad breath, and poisons the blood. It can be readily overcome by DeWitt's Little Early Risers. These little pills are great regulators. Davenport the Druggist.

—Elder Croy returned last evening from the conference of the Church of God, which was held at Blue River church near Churubusco. It began last Saturday and closed yesterday. All report an excellent meeting. Rev. Mr. Gloyd was assigned to be pastor of the church at Auburn, and will probably come here soon.

The Kendallville fair which closes to-day was only fairly attended, the crowds being only about half as large as usual. The exhibits were good, especially in horses and agricultural products. There was an abundance of fine needlework, too. Only a few went over from Auburn, as the weather was too unpleasant. The races were good.

—The following invitations are out, one of which has been received by the COURIER.

—The COURIER receives every little while requests to send the republican national platform. The last request was from Wm. Tritch in Fairfield, who says it seems difficult to get a copy. We sent him the only one we could find. The platform does not seem to have been published much, whether they were ashamed of it, or afraid to let people see what they adopted, we don't know. We found this copy in the Waterloo Press, but we believe it was not in the other county papers.

Tetter, eczema and all similar skin trubles are cured by the use of DeWitt's Wich Hazel Salve. It soothes at once and restores the tissues to their natural condition, and never fails to cure piles. Davenport the Druggist.

—Read McKinley on free silver. The law he refers to as "utilizing every dollar's worth of the silver product of the United States" is the Sherman bill a part of which was repealed in '93. The law proved a bad failure and did not "enhance the value of silver" as long as he thought it would, for after the first month's purchase, silver began falling and has been going down ever since.

—Culver military institute at Lake Maxenkuckee, is to have a big addition to its students and faculty. The Missouri Military Academy, at Mexico, Mo., which was destroyed by fire a few days ago, will be moved to Maxenkuckee, and the two schools combined into one. This will add several hundred students and make it one of the largest military schools in this country.

But if they get 100 cents when they sell it, they wont have it any longer, and so can't coin it. If they don't sell their bullion it will not be made into money. In either case it will be impossible for the workman to get a 50-cent dollar. The Dispatch is in a hole. How will it get out?

—Several of our merchants are finding fault with the price list of dry goods, etc. that we published in the Weekly of Oct. 1 and the DAILY of Sept. 29. The lists were not ours, but were copied from the Goshen Daily Times, which is one of two most prominent republican papers on the Lake Shore road across Indiana. We did not pass our opinion on their correctness, but said we "presumed" the Times had made its list correct. And in both issues we distinctly said it was the Times' own figures.

To Subscribers.

Subscribers to the Weekly COURIER are getting careless and allowing their dues to get way behind. This is not wisdom nor justice. But we have several hundred who are able to pay and they should see to it without delay. They could attend to this when they come to pay taxes. Let us hear from you.

How the Dipper Saved the Farm.

Father was sick and the mortgage on the farm was coming due, I saw in the Christian Advocate where Miss A. M. Fritz, of Station A, St. Louis, Mo., would send a sample combination Dipper could be used as a fruit jar filler; a plain dipper a fine strainer; a funnel; a strainer funnel; a sick room warming pan, and a pint measure. These eight different uses makes the dipper such a necessary article that I went to work with it and it sells at very near every house. And in four months I paid off the mortgage. I can clear as much as $200 a month. If you need work you can do well by giving this a trial. Miss A. M. Fritz, Station A, St. Louis, Mo., will send you a sample for 14 two cent stamps—write at one. POLITICS OF THE DAY

GREAT CORRUPTION FUND.

It is certain that a sum of money will be spent by the Republican party managers in this campaign, which is to close on the 3d of November, the equal of which has never before been forthcoming in political struggles, and surely never in any degree attempted. It may be affirmed with confidence that if the mere expenditure of money will carry a presidential election in these United States, it will be done in the present year.

It would be perfectly hopeless for the Democratic regular organization to attempt to compete in the raising and expending of these enormous amounts. The whole money dealing, speculating, stock-jobbing and franchise-grabbing world has contributed. The common peril and apprehension that justice will be done, in case of Bryan's election, and that the thousand sources of corruption will be stopped, has aroused what might well be called the dangerous classes and excited their liberal contributions.

A Republican daily paper gives a little idea of how the fund of the Republican party is swelled in the city of Philadelphia alone. According to this authority, the Philadelphia Savings Fund Institution has paid over $25,000 of its depositors' moneys, held in trust, to Boss Hanna's treasury. Each other bank in Philadelphia has been assessed $10,000, and very few, it is stated, have failed to make full payment. Altogether, it is reported the McKinley money chest in that State is full to repletion, with probably a large overflow to influence other States.

In Pittsburg, the same authority states the contributions at $70,000, raised in one week from the moneyed institutions. Every railroad has been put under tribute. All the gigantic trusts, combinations and syndicates have been assessed and have responded. The State of Pennsylvania has furnished or will furnish to the Hanna-bossed party at least one million of dollars towards the election of McKinley!

The danger is that the presidency may be not fairly voted, but foully bought with money. But we believe that our people will resist temptation and repudiate unworthy inducements. We can triumph in spite of this shameless millions of money.

McKinley Fakery.

The two Fakes most in use by McKinleyites in their "campaign of education"—which is really a campaign of misinformation and sophistry—are the "fifty-cent dollar" and the "deposits in savings banks."

No Hannaite orator or newspaper has yet explained how a coin with value marked on it by our governmental impress can ever pass in this country for less than such value; nor has even the astute Carlisle yet explained how a savings bank can swindle a depositor by paying him through a Treasury or a national bank note or a silver certificate or duly stamped silver coin, the precise number of statutory cents which he desires to withdraw.

Recently a Boston new bureau, controlled by gold fanatics, sent out for publication in the McKinley press a statement that since the Chicago nomination, deposits to the aggregated amount of six millions of dollars had been drawn out of savings banks in the Union and put on deposit with savings banks in Toronto, Canada—the conclusion being emphasized by the McKinley press that such original home deposits were transferred to exclusively gold-paying English banks for safety.

The story, of course, is a roorback take, intended for campaign circulation among voters who use savings banks. It is preposterous on its face; for six millions of dollars would represent the deposits of from twenty to thirty millions of people willing to buy exchange on Canada, and perhaps to lose accruing interest by the change.

And so proceeds the current Hannaite campaign of scare—encouraged by the scared Indianapolis convention, whose delegates have taken such a sudden guardianship over the welfare and votes of the farmer and laborer.—New York News.

The McKinley Pilgrimages.

It is stated that the visits of workingmen to Canton, O., to be received by Major McKinley and to assist in offering him the incense of their adoration have, up to date, cost a sum exceeding five hundred thousand dollars. The way it is managed is interesting to relate.

In some large factory announcement is made that on such a day a special train will leave that place for Canton to visit the Republican Presidential candidate, and all voters who desire to accompany the expedition are invited to hand in their names. Then a meeting is held and each workman willing to go is charged half a dollar for expenses, so that it could not be said he was absolutely carried free, and it is announced that the day off will be a holiday, without deduction of wages. That sweeps in most of the men, and away go the whole crowd, have a good time, with plenty to eat and drink, hear the Napoleonic candidate make a speech from his balcony, and come home happy. Then they take a vote of the employes and print it in the papers; it is about as reliable as the "secret ballot" which one of the New York goldbug papers prints day after day, and by which it expects to elect McKinley by a grand majority.

Sanguine Republicans, who read of excursion after excursion calling on McKinley, are greatly encouraged thereby, but shrewd and experienced ones suspect that the men are likely to accept the rides offered them and do as they choose as to voting for the Canton man in November.

Afraid to Face the People.

The Republican candidate has announced that he will not take the stump. Posing as the leader of a great party, he recognizes his inability to meet the leading issue of the present campaign, and therefore he dares not face the country.

McKinley's attitude is a pitiable spectacle. In a campaign in which the lines are so closely drawn and with an issue which is breaking party ties in every direction, the people naturally look to the Republican nominee to act as a leader and to outline frankly the policy he intends to pursue if elected. But instead of meeting the issue, McKinley evades it. Knowing that tariff changes are impossible if the Senators from the silver States remain firm in their promise to block it until the demands of their section are acceded to, he promises a revised tariff and great prosperity.

McKinley's attitude, his unwillingness to face the people, and his reversal of the McKinley, who in 1891 denounced Grover Cleveland for opposing the coinage of silver, reveal that he is simply the figurehead for Mark Hanna, the man whose money bought his nomination. The American people want a President who owns himself, and it is hardly probable that they will elect to that high office one who, while asking for their votes, is afraid to face them.

Mr. Hanna in Journalism.

As the financial manager of a political canvass Mr. Mark Hanna is an imposing sight, but as managing editor he has not as yet exhibited the smallest ability. The gold-standard press of the East is being conducted with a stupidity that amazes, and necessity must soon compel a change in the plan of campaign, if the fight is not to be given up. Bawling cannot be sustained at concert pitch with good results for months at a stretch, and so far Mr. Hanna's newspapers have given their whole strength to bawling. Unmistakable hoarseness has ensued, as a matter of course. Everybody who can read has been long aware that the single-standard press wishes it to be understood that any man who offers an argument in favor of bimetallism is a fool, a lunatic, a repudiator, a rogue and a foe of the national honor, of which Mr. Hanna and the contributing trusts and syndicates are for this occasion only the special guardians. If the gold-standard press has anything else to say on the subject of finance, the time has certainly arrived when it should utter itself with some effort at coherency.—San Francisco Examiner.

Takes the People for Fools.

Secretary Carlisle is out in another long letter. This time it is in answer to a question he says was asked him: "Why does the silver dollar remain on a par with a gold dollar when it is not exchangeable into the gold dollar?"

The Secretary makes a lengthy reply which may be summed up in the words, "beating about the bush." The only direct answer he gives is: "The public has been satisfied that, so long as our present monetary system is preserved, the government will do whatever its moral obligations and express declarations require it to do, and very largely in consequence of this confidence in the good faith of the executive authorities, the silver coins have not depreciated in value."

That is a childish answer, and betrays either grave ignorance, incapacity, or downright intent to deceive. To say that it is largely due to public confidence in the executive officers, that is, in Cleveland, Carlisle & Co., is an insult to the good sense of the general public. Because that confidence is so decidedly wanting, that the question is often enough mooted that both these officers deserve impeachment for direct infringement of the law on this very issue.

The only reason why silver is on a par with gold is that it is a legal tender. But Mr. Carlisle evidently does not think it altogether accords with the gold bug policy to say that, for that would be an admission that fiat makes money; so he attributes it all to "confidence in Secretary Carlisle." Evidently he takes the public for fools, as do most other gold bugs.—Philadelphia Item.

Snakes.

Snakes are altogether absent from Ireland, and the whole class of reptiles is represented by only a single species—viz., the common viviparous lizard. Even the frog, which is abundant enough in Ireland, is by many Irish naturalists denied the right to be considered a true native, and among the newts only one kind has hitherto been observed.

PANTALET HAS COME BACK.

A Fashion of Our Grandmother's Is the Latest Novelty for Women.

Pantalets are again to be at the height of fashion. Pantalets of precisely the size and cut that were worn two and three generations ago, when our grandmothers had not learned to wear rainbow-hued silk petticoats and thought that an occasional glimpse, judiciously revealed, of a pantalet flounce answered the same purpose, are now being made up as fast as busy hands can cut, sew and wondrously bedeck them. In vain they have been protested against as an incongruity. To no purpose has it been urged that the revival of the pantalet means the renaissance of the hoopskirt, with all its untold wealth of circumference, indeed, almost the entire rehabilitation of the feminine form. Nevertheless, the unwelcome garments are thrusting themselves into vogue, and the only reply to objections is that if the present styles in underwear do not conform to the pantalet, new styles must be adopted, and that speedily. In short, the pantalet has come to stay, if only for a season.

Observing persons will note that the bloomer has paved the way. If the bloomer sensation had not been so loud and so enduring the pantalet might never have been heard from again. As it is, the pantalet, being an elaboration and extension of the bloomer, is making a sensation correspondingly large. Now, it is safe to say that the bloomer will not be heard from for some time. Women who make a point of keeping abreast of the fashions are already wearing pantalets. In a month they will have become established as a fad. In length the pantalet extends to the boot top. Its fullness is considerably less than that of the bloomer. Thus it will be only with very short gowns, chiefly worn by young girls and children, that these novel garments will be noticeable. The first young misses to appear with gayly trimmed pantalet flounces will doubtless attract some attention, but they are leading the fashions.

THE ARMENIAN OUTRAGES.

A Company of Drunken Kurds Stirred Up the Trouble.

The massacre of Armenians, which has been carried on in Turkey for over a year with atrocious brutality, was begun by the Kurds. It has been stated upon authority that two Kurds, who had engaged in a drunken quarrel with their companions, were killed in a small interior town. The comrades, to shift the offense from their shoulders, carried the bodies to an Armenian church. Early the following day the two dead Kurds were found on the doorstep of the Christian Church. An alarm was at once given. The cry went forth:

"The Armenian dogs have killed our brethren! Let us rise against them!"

How well they did the rising the civilized world already knows. The pages of history have no blacker spots, if as black, as the ones that have recorded the inhuman and brutal murder of defenseless men, women, and children.

The Kurds have always hated the Christians. From time immemorial they have ravaged and murdered the Armenians, and in nearly every instance the Sultan of Turkey has looked upon their murderous assaults with favor.

A general massacre of the Armenians took place after the finding of the Kurds' bodies. The men who had killed them joined in the general slaughter. Women were compelled to look on while their babes were decapitated and cut in two by this brutal tribe. Many of the Armenians of both sexes sought their churches for safety, but everywhere the bloody carnage went on. A few of the Christian young men made a stand for their lives. Word was at once sent, on this account, to the ruler of the province that the Armenians were up in arms. Re-enforcements were needed, or else they (the Kurds) would be swept off the earth by the Armenians. Like the spreading of a prairie fire the inhuman butchery spread from one end of the Turkish empire to the other.

It will never be known how many Armenians have been killed since the general massacres began, but the number has been estimated conservatively at over a quarter of a million.

It will be interesting at this time, now that the eyes of the civilized world are upon Turkey, to know something of the Kurdish tribe. This race of people inhabit that section of Turkey near the Persian frontier, though they are now to be found in all parts of the empire. The Persians claim the right to govern a part of Kurdistan, while the greater part is supposed to be under the rule of the Sultan. While these two powers say they rule them, the Kurds look with scorn upon any effort of government. No one ever saw a Kurd in his own territory that would acknowledge the sovereignty of any power besides their own chiefs, whom they adore.

To see the Kurd in anything which resembles his original character, the traveler, if he desires to risk his life, must seek those ranges which form a natural barrier between Persia and Turkey in Asia, extending from Mt. Ararat to the region of Bagdad. There the Kurds enjoy the wild freedom which has been a real part of their existence from the earliest period of the race. It may be the good fortune of the visitor to be courteously received by this tribe. If so, he will never regret having made an effort to reach such a region that seemingly from its strangeness belongs to another planet. They will entertain him, place all the goods of their humble shelters at his disposal, but woe be it if they look upon him with disfavor.

But it is not the real Kurd, the Kurd in the home of his ancestors, who has been guilty of countless atrocities against Christians. It is the Kurd who has degenerated into a Turkish soldier. The type has altered and instead of the singing and gaudily dressed mountain Kurd, he is a shallow type of a fanatic, whose face denotes that the owner possesses the vices and cruelties of his rulers. He is the specimen of the old-time Kurd who may be found in the vanguard of Turkish soldiery butchering his fellow men. The Sultan of Turkey could not have found a better class of people to carry on the slaughter of Christians than these Kurds, who have degenerated from the ways and homes of their ancestors.

The whole sum of their characters may be summed up as religious fanatics and human brutes.

It Wasn't Fido.

A lady, leading a Skye-terrier by a chain, entered the lady's cabin of a Gloucester ferryboat the other day (says the Philadelphia Inquirer). The dog crawled under the seat and went Fido." Presently she turned pale, and, rying a market basket, took the vacant place beside her, and stowed his basket under the seat. Soon after the boat started, the woman began to wriggle. She shook out her skirts, and, in an audible whisper, said: "Don't be rude, Fido." Presently she turned pale, and, jerking the chain, cried: "Lie down, Fido. Behave yourself, sir." A moment later she jumped up with a shriek, and began to execute a war dance, striking her skirts the while. The stout citizen stared at her in amazement, and then an idea struck him. Reaching under the seat for his basket, he looked inside it, and then a great light of intelligence came over him. "Madam," said he, without moving an eyelash, "when you are through with my lobster, will you kindly return it to me?" The jaws of the lobster were wrenched apart before the lady had recovered from her faint.

It is the recollection of the money he has spent that develops a man's cynicism when recovering from a love affair.

PALMER'S NEW HOME.

World's Fair President Has a Handsome Residence Near Detroit.

Ex-Senator Thomas W. Palmer, who was the president of the Columbian Exposition Commission, is building a new house on his wonderful farm near Detroit. The house will be a thing of beauty, and will be the only perfectly fireproof dwelling in the country round about it. The architecture is to be of the colonial type, the material of red pressed brick and buff stone trimmings. The Chicago steel skeleton of framework system of construction will be used. There will be hollow tile floors and ceilings and a roof of sheet copper. The cornices are to be ornamental stucco in colonial style. The interior will be very fine. Marble bathroom, hardwood floors, apparatus for steam heating, electric lighting and gasoline gas will go to make a very comfortable and ornate home. The site is a pretty one. The house will stand between the old orchard and the new orchard which Mr. Palmer planted not long ago. This finishing touch to Log Cabin Farm makes that property much more desirable than ever. Its 657 acres are laid like an English parterre. Senator Palmer is fond of nice houses. When he went to Washington he did not rent, as most statesmen do, but bought a lot and put up his own brownstone palace on McPherson Square.

TEXAN REVOLUTION.

It Is to Be Commemorated in a Bronze Monument.

A magnificent bronze monument is to be erected in Galveston, Tex., in commemoration of the Texan revolution of 1836. George J. Zolnay, a Hungarian sculptor, made the design. The monument will be constructed on four huge granite blocks, each one of which is smaller than the one below, thus forming four steps around its base. Surmounting the granite platform blocks is an irregular base of dark granite, on which rests a tall and graceful shaft. This shaft is surmounted by a bronze ball, on which is perched a figure of Victory with outspread wings, holding in one hand an olive branch and in the other an olive wreath. She extends the wreath over the heads of the heroes sculptured below. On the four long panels of the base are bas-reliefs in bronze of the four principal events of the decisive battles of the revolution. On the four cartouches are portraits in bronze of heroes of the revolution, while standing on the base in the picturesque uniform of the Texan soldier are life-size figures in bronze of Sam Houston, Davy Crockett, Milam, Sidney Sherman, and other heroes of the revolution. On one side of the shaft is inscribed: "Moriamor Pro Patria Nostro."

THE COMMEMORATIVE MONUMENT.

Gallantry in the Rough.

It was just after a severe rain. The gutters were flooded. She was tired after her shopping expedition and anxious to get the first car for home, but there was a small ocean between her and the center of the street, says a New York paper. "What shall I do?" she thought to herself, looking anxiously around. "Just step on my foot, madam," said an audible voice, answering her mental question. In front of her stood a rough-looking workman, his foot in the middle of the gutter stream and his hand outstretched. She took the hand, and, with the utmost courtesy, almost with an air of chivalry, she was handed carefully across.

From the Register, Dublin Ind.

Situated about fifty miles east of Indianapolis, on the National road, one of the main lines of the Pennsylvania Railroad system, in Wayne County, Indiana, may be found the quiet little city of Dublin. It is one of the pleasantest places of its size in all this portion of country.

Mr. H. D. Mendenhall, a prominent citizen, now about 50 years old, made the following statement to a reporter:

"Some four years or more ago I suffered from a nervous debility which almost entirely prostrated me. I soon commenced medical treatment from a physician and otherwise, but found no relief in anything that I did or was done.

"In the course of a year, while attending to some duties one morning, my foot struck an obstruction in such a way as to cause me to fall heavily upon the frozen ground, and I strained the nerve centers in the back of my head and neck which at once so prostrated me that for four months I was entirely confined to the house and my bed. At length I told the doctor that he was doing me no good, and on the strength of this he ceased coming, and I was left free to manage the case myself.

"Having heard of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, I sent to the drug store for some, and at once commenced taking them. In a very short time I began to get relief and was soon an entirely different man.

"Some of the features of my deranged system may not be uninteresting: My hearing became very imperfect and my eyes were so distorted that I saw double. A general confusion of everything seemed to take possession of me. By a judicious use of the pills, however, I gradually grew better and better, and I must say I am now fast gaining my former health—all of which I ascribe to the judicious use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People.

"H. D. MENDENHALL."

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 29th day of June, A. D. 1896.

Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent postpaid on receipt of price, 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 (they are never sold in bulk or by the 100), by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Larger than a State.

The largest ranch now running in the United States is situated in the State of Wyoming. The dimensions of this immense farm are of such mammoth proportions that figures of it appear almost fabulous and beyond belief. An idea of its dimensions may be gained from the fact that the State of Rhode Island could be dropped into the middle of it, and yet leave a margin of some twenty miles all around it—and it is stocked with upwards of 500,000 animals of various kinds, including horses, cattle, sheep, goats, hogs and half-bred buffalo. The inventory shows that 400 horses, 20,000 cattle and over 150,000 sheep daily graze on its broad acres.

ME AN' JIM.

Me an' Jim jes' kinder agree;
I stick by him and' he sticks by me.

Never was much thet I could do,
But somehow'r other he sees me through.

Never did talk much, afore or sence,
'Bout it, but there's a coincidence.

Somehow'r other—can't jes' make out—
That brings him 'roun' when there's trouble about.

Lots o' others thet like me, too,
Hard to say what they wouldn't do;

Hard to say what they wouldn't share
When there was plenty, and some to spare.

But, somehow'r other, when you're hard hit,
Seems they don't happen to hear of it.

An' there was a woman once, an' she
Kinder believed that she keered for me;

'Lowed thet she loved me becoz we'd ben
Goin' together so long; but when

Plans were a-makin' to go through life
Settled an' easy as man and wife.

Suddenly foun' thet she'd rather go
'Long with another she didn't know.

So, it set me to studyin': Love is meant
For them as don't meet with no accident.

Or mebbe them as ken pick an' choose
In the crowd where they've got no friend to lose.

While the feelin' a man has for a man
Don't fool itself with a better plan

Or come to grief through a thinkin' spell
Thet we're too much alike to match right well.

An' thet's the reason thet I perpose
To tie to Jim to the very close.

Fact o' the matter, we're fond o' him,
'Coz you know you can always count on Jim.

A FAIRY OMNIBUS.

I think everybody gets a touch of romance some time in their lives. The green glade of olden days is probably replaced by a busy street, your armor-clad knight by a city man in a frock coat and silk hat, your distressed damsel is a practical, level-headed, energetic little typewriter, perhaps; the actors are changed, the scene is changed, but, believe me, the element of romance is just the same as it was in the days of chivalry.

Now, I dare say you would scarcely believe that a bald-headed, middle-aged, stout old solicitor like me—getting every day more engrossed in business, and more and more apt to be a tiresome liver—was ever sufficiently "interesting" to play the part of a modern knight-errant.

Let me tell you all about it and how it ended. It's commonplace enough, I know, and I dare say most of you have gone through something similar, but it it does nothing else it may, perhaps, serve to stir up pleasant memories.

I had nearly completed my articles, and was reading hard my "final," when one morning the firm told me to go to a client who was ill and take instructions for her will.

She was an old maiden lady living in Paddington, and our people had transacted all her business for her something like forty years.

It was a wet day; one of those days that we get from time to time in London, when you feel as if you would like to go to bed and not get up again until things have changed.

Holborn was like a little river, and the traffic slopped and splashed along in a way that made you feel damp even to watch.

I stood on the curbstone waiting for a chance to cross without being smothered with mud, when I noticed a girl standing near me. She, too, was trying to cross.

It was very funny to see her. She was evidently from the country, and didn't at all understand the London traffic. Three times she started, and three times she turned back in despair.

I watched her with interest. There was an amusing expression of good-tempered misery on her face; she was pretty—very pretty, and daintily dressed, and—well, I seized my opportunity like an articled clerk who is worth his salt is bound to do.

"Excuse me," I said, raising my hat, "but I think you want to cross the road?"

She looked rather startled.

"I think I shall get on all right," she answered, "if you would kindly tell me where to start."

"Suppose we try together? Give me your arm."

She did not give me her arm. I took it and we started on our pilgrimage. In and out of cabs and omnibuses I guided her safely, until we got to about the middle of the road, which, as you know, is very wide opposite Furnival's inn.

Suddenly she limped and gave a funny little hop.

"I'm very sorry, sir," she said, laughing, "but—I'm afraid my shoe has come off. It stuck in the mud."

I looked around. Sure enough, a few yards behind us was a shoe lying in the mud, looking very lonely and getting terribly wet.

"Can you stand here for a moment," I said, "while I fetch it?"

I left her there, standing on one foot, with the tip of a little stockinged toe just touching the ground to steady her.

A cab driver who happened to pass found the situation amusing and said so candidly, but I'm proud to say I managed to keep a grave face. The shoe was such a small one that I marveled how a human being could ever get it on, much less get it off again.

Now, a saint from heaven can't put a lady's shoe on her without seeing her ankle. I didn't try to. I thoroughly enjoyed that little ankle and lingered over the task with becoming solemnity in spite of the weather.

At last we were ready to start again.

"It was very kind of you not to laugh at me," she said, with a little blush; "I must have looked very silly, standing there on one foot."

"You looked very charming," I said, with a young man's bluntness.

I landed her safely on the path and she thanked me.

I asked her if I could be of any further service. She thought not. She only wanted to get into a Paddington bus, and then she would be quite safe.

Now, I wanted a Paddington bus, but I didn't say so. As soon as one came up I stopped it, put her inside, and went on top myself.

Perhaps you will think me quixotic for going outside in such miserable weather? Well, I believe you would have done the same thing after all. You see, I was afraid she might think I was pestering her if I followed her inside. It looked rather like taking advantage of a trifling service, and I was at that age when a man would rather have rheumatic fever than sacrifice the good opinion of a pretty girl.

Things are different now—I'm a married man.

But, bless your heart, you can't escape destiny by getting outside an omnibus. I hadn't been up there three minutes, the rain had only just begun to soak through the knees of my trousers and trickle down my legs, when the conductor came up with a significant grin on his face.

"If you please, sir," he said, "there's a young lady inside wants to speak to you."

I climbed down the ladder with which buses in those days were furnished.

There she sat in the corner, half smiling, half blushing. There was nobody else inside.

"Won't you get wet if you go outside?" she said.

"I was afraid you might think I was a nuisance," I answered.

"I guessed as much," she said frankly. "But it would be a very poor return for your kindness if I drove you into consumption."

I think that upon the whole that was the most delightful bus drive in my experience. The conversation flowed in a torrent, and I believe we exchanged as many confidences and opinions in half an hour as some people do in a lifetime. It was wonderful. It was like touching by accident the hidden spring of some secret door, which opened into a new atmosphere, a new fairyland.

She had only been in London a week, and had not visited any place of amusement. I wondered if I could find a chance here of pushing my advantage, and approached the subject with delicacy and caution.

But at this point it seemed that the mutual confidence stopped, for she declined to understand my tactics, and remarked that her time was too fully occupied to go about much.

Only too soon we had reached the place where I had decided to alight. We shook hands warmly, and thanked each other rather vaguely and nervously, and then I found myself once more on a nasty, wet London pavement.

I had had a glimpse of fairyland, but it was only a glimpse. I was back again in the practical, uncomfortable world, with a living to be earned and a will to make.

The gates of fairyland were closed, for, like a donkey, I had omitted to find out the fairy's name and where she lived.

It seemed impossible to bring one's mind back to the legal subtleties of will making, but it had to be done, and I trudged heavily on my way to our client's house, finding to my infinite disgust that I had got out of the omnibus much sooner than I need have done.

Imagine my surprise when, on reaching the house, and being shown into the dining room, I found there the heroine of the lost shoe.

That settled it.

I felt that heaven had decided I was to marry that young lady, and I formed the pious intention then and there of giving heaven every possible assistance, and made such a delightful hash of her aunt's will that it required some six or seven visits to put matters straight.

Curiously enough, though, from the moment we met in the house, her friendliness ceased. Every time I came she was more cold and distant, and I was almost in despair. The conversation, which had flowed so merrily in an uncomfortable omnibus, seemed impossible over the dining room fire, and she refused to go beyond the most commonplace civilities.

She calmly ignored that drive, which I had found so delightful, and treated me with ordinary politeness, due to the representative of her aunt's solicitors.

The position grew desperate, because I couldn't continue to make blunders over the old lady's will forever. Already the firm had reprimanded me for stupidity, though, to be sure, the old lady herself bore with me with wonderful patience and good temper.

The crisis came.

It was my last visit about the will, which was now ready—absolutely correct—and the dear old creature had approved of every word of it.

It only required to be executed. She said she would like her niece and me to be witnesses, and as she was much better and able to get up we assembled solemnly in the library. But she was a funny old character and scouted the idea of solemnity, ringing the bell for the servant to bring up some champagne so that we might drink "success to her will!"

I'm thankful to say that, though I was by this time helplessly in love with the niece, I had sufficient presence of mind to say: "Success to the will and may it never have to be approved!" which pleased her immensely and before I left I was invited to dinner the following Sunday.

From that moment things went pretty smoothly, though it was only last evening that, in talking over our courting days in the far away past, my wife explained the meaning of her extraordinary coolness to me.

It seems that when, after the drive in what she is pleased to call the "fairy omnibus," I walked into her aunt's dining room, she quite recognized that I must be her destiny, and so with feminine perversity she felt called upon to struggle against fate as much as possible.

"But you ought to be very thankful to me for one thing," she added; "it was I who—but never mind."

"Nonsense," I said. "Go on; we are too old-fashioned to be romantic any longer."

"Well," she said, "it was I who suggested you should be invited to dinner."

Which just shows what contradictory creatures women are.—Household Words.

WASTEFULNESS OF AMERICANS.

Food Thrown Away that Would Sustain Millions of People.

"The most conspicuous thing in all of my travels?" remarked the globe trotter. "Well, I've been pretty much over the world in my time, and I've seen quite a bit, but I know I shall astonish you when I say that the thing which has impressed me most is the economy of food abroad and the waste of food at home.

"Understand all this statement implies. Absolutely nothing is thrown away or wasted in continental Europe. And the economy of food is more marked in China, Japan and the Asiatic countries. There is no doubt in my mind but that we in the United States waste more food in a year than is consumed in France in the same time. What a single New York servant girl slams into the garbage barrel every week would support a dozen Chinese families. And yet our people are always complaining of hard times, and are making wry faces about getting along in the world.

"This waste begins at the very foundations of our society and business, and runs all the way up. The American farmer is a man who has burned off great tracts of valuable timber, worth five times the land on which it grew, to raise grain to burn for firewood. That land to-day is but half tilled, taking the fields of Germany and other European countries into the comparison. Until very recently all the refuse about mills and manufactories was destroyed; now many of them turn their slabs into furniture and their sawdust into fuel. Again, as to food. Anybody who has traveled much and knows what sort of food one gets in the South and West—anywhere outside of the big Eastern cities—will appreciate it when I say that at least one-half the food is wasted. This is partly through bad cookery and partly through mere wasteful management. All food not assimilated is wasted—worse than wasted, for it wears the system out to no purpose. The common hotel and family cookery makes assimilation practically impossible. So much for what is eaten. That which is actually thrown away would feed millions. If it could be diverted into the proper channels it would make human suffering from want of food impossible in this country. More—the waste would feed the indigent hungry of the whole world! There is something actually criminal in all this. But I presume it can't be helped until the American nature shall have undergone a change."—New York Herald.

In Due Form.

A man was arraigned in an Arkansas court many years ago for stealing a young pig out of his neighbor's pen; said pig, or shoat, being alleged to be worth a dollar and a half.

The evidence was conclusive, and the jury, after a brief retirement, brought in their verdict, "Guilty of hog-stealing in the first degree."

The judge remarked that the finding was proper enough, except that it failed to assess the value of the pig; and, further, that there were no degrees in hog stealing. He must ask the jury to retire again, and bring in a verdict in due form.

The jury went out, with pen, ink and paper, but were badly nonplused over that word "form." Finally one of them, who had formerly been a justice of the peace, drew up a document to which the other eleven assented, and with which all hands returned to the courtroom. This was the verdict: "We, the jeurey, pusilanimously find the defendant gilty in the sum of 1 dollar and a ½ in favor of the hog."

Like a Boy.

The son of a down-town merchant was found crying when his father returned home the other night, as that gentleman told a Washington Star reporter this morning.

"What's the matter, Tommy?" asked the merchant.

"I had a fight with Charlie," was the tearful reply.

"Well, you ought not to fight. It served you right to get whipped, I guess," said the father.

"But I didn't get licked. I licked him," sobbed the boy.

"Well, what are you crying about, then?"

"Why, if I had let him lick me he couldn't hurt. And I never thought about that, so now I have to fight his big brother, about my size, and I can lick him, and I'm going to, because I'm mad at him; then I've got to fight the biggest brother, and he's three sizes bigger than me, and won't I catch it." And Tommy refused to be comforted.

Best to Postpone It.

"When we are married, dear Lucy," said the poor man's son to the rich man's daughter, "our honeymoon shall be passed abroad. We will drive in the Bois, promenade the Prada, gaze down into the blue waters of the Adriatic from the Rialto and enjoy the Neapolitan sunsets, strolling along the Chiaja."

"How delicious!" she murmured. "But, John dear, have you money enough to do all this? For pa says I mustn't expect anything until he dies."

John's countenance underwent such a change that she could not help asking him if he felt ill.

"No, darling," he answered, faintly; "I am not ill; I was only thinking we had better postpone our marriage until after the funeral."

Just Like Women.

"If that ain't just like the women," said the cornfed philosopher.

"If what ain't?" asked the grocer.

"Why, when we want to show that a man's independent we say he wears no man's collar. But woman must go and show her independence by puttin' on a man's collar."—Indianapolis Journal.

Obituary.

Mary E. Donaldson was born in Wayne Co. Ohio, August 16, 1837, and died at her home in Troy township, September 20, 1896.

She and Samuel Harpster were married in 1859. Her husband and two sons survive to mourn the loss of a kind and loving wife and mother.

When the good and the kind pass to the beyond it seems fitting that we who remain behind should pay a tribute of respect to their memory. The writer having known Mrs. Harpster for the last 30 years can truly say that she was a woman who was highly esteemed by all who knew her. Being kind and of a cheerful and pleasant disposition, she readily won the hearts of all who became acquainted with her. She was an ideal housewife, her home being a model of comfort and good cheer. She was remarkable for her energy and industry, and her affection and life seemed to center in her family and she spared no pains to make the home pleasant and comfortable for the members of her household. She united with the church in early life and lived a consistent practical christian devoted to the work of the church and its interests and proving her practical christianity by many charitable acts and numerous deeds of kindness. But she is gone the way of all the earth and we are left to mourn and wait till "summons comes for us to join the innumerable throng that has taken up its abode in the silent halls of death. She was laid to rest in the beautiful cemetery at Edgertown, her pastor the Rev. J. M. Dustman of Butler, officiating at the funeral service.

D. W. W.

Surprised Him.

One of the most enjoyable gatherings, that we have had the pleasure of participating in occurred at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. Beams, at Spencerville, Sept. 30, 1896, being the 50th birthday of Mr. Beams. The surprise was so well planned and executed by his wife and daughter, that he was entirely unaware of it. Imagine his astonishment when coming home for dinner to find his house filled with fifty or more friends and neighbors waiting to greet him and extend the hand of friendship. The tables already spread and groaning under their loads. The attention of the guests was soon called in that direction and no second invitation was required to make a general stampede in that direction. After doing justice to the viands, all returned to the parlors to listen to speech making by Rev. Dunlop, Rev. Oberholtz and a few talented ladies, also instrumental and vocal music by Mrs. Morrison and others. Exercises concluded with the presentating of a very fine rocker, in a speech by Rev. Dunlop, to which Mr. Beams very modestly responded. After which the guests prepared for their departure, all wishing Mr. and Mrs. Beams and family a long and happy life. The following named persons were in attendance:

Rev. Oberholtz, Pennsylvania; Mrs. J. L. Morrison, Chicago; Mr. and Mrs. I. M. Johnson, Mrs. R. H. Askew, Mrs. Simp Johnson and children and Mrs. Bent. Shilling from Auburn; Mrs. Kate Walker, Hicksville; Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Johnson, of Concord.

From Spencerville, were Dr. Carey, Miss Nettie Beams, Mrs. Rebecca Parker, Mrs. E. Beams, Miss G. Shutt and the following gentlemen and their wives, of Spencerville: Rev. Dunlop, F. Horn, Peter. Bishop, Mr. Carns, N. Steward, W. Steward, E. A. Fales, J. Beams, W. Fairfield, Thos. Phillips, E. Horn, John Steward, F. Horn and J Beams.

50-Cent Farms.

Friday's Daily.

EDITOR COURIER:

In the last week's COURIER you speak about 50-cent farmers, you say in 1869, farms were worth 100 cents on a dollar and now but 50 cents. You ask for some republican to arise and tell what it is and how to cure it. As for the cure, I don't know, that there is any, for the reason that in 1869, the farmer had a better outlet for his wheat. Liverpool was his market same as it is to-day, but the world's supply was far short of what it has been of late years. Forty-seven countries in 1891 raised 2,432,322,000 nearly double the amount raised in '69, and the crop of 1891 could not be consumed within the year. Therefore it left us with a surplus or hand. In 1892 we followed with a larger crop 2,481,805,000. In 1893 when the American farmer only raised 396,132,000, or 215,648,000 less bushels then he raised in 1891. Still the price only advanced a little because the world's supply was 2,562,936,000, a larger crop then ever was known in the history of the world. Still we come in 1894 with 2,672,341,000, and in 1895, 2,552,677,000, and for further proof from 1860 to 1870, we had in from 5,000,000 to 10,000,000; but from 1870 to 1880, from 10,000,000 to 20,000,000; from 1880 to 1890 from 20,000,000 to 40,000,000, and since 1890 never less than 40,000,000, and reached many times as high as 80,000,000. The American farmer must pay American wages for labor, and compete with India, wheat that is raised with India labor which is only 8 cents per day and a man boards himself. India is not the only cheap labor country. As for the farms being worth 100 cents on the dollar in '69, and now only worth 50 cents on the dollar, I know of none such farms, neither have I ever heard of any, but I have heard of farms that 100 cents in '69 and the same farms are worth 100 cents on the dollar to-day, but the land is from 20 to 30 per cent cheaper, but the dollar is worth 100 cents and will continue to be worth the same as long as we have our present gold standard.

I have given you facts on the supply of wheat and believe that any reasonable farmer that will investigate will know it is the supply and demand has caused the decline, not the great crime as it is called of '73. Now let us see as honest men should and let us go back to our silver standard when we got high prices and had the good old times we hear so much about, under free silver January 1862. Eleven years before the great crime wheat in Chicago was quoted 76 to 77 cents, and it never struck so low again until 1892, nineteen years after the great crime. In Jan. 1861, under free silver oats in Chicago was quoted 17 cents, and here we are 23 years after the great crime, the same grade has not struck so low a quotation in the Chicago market. In Jan. 1862, corn was quoted in Chicago 23 cents, and here 26 years have passed and the price has never struck so low again in January. A few days ago corn was quoted 21½ the lowest on record. The corn crop of 1894 sold on your streets of Auburn for 55 and 60 cents, and this price was paid only 15 months ago. Three months later corn on your streets was only worth 25 cents, now think what casued this. In 1894 we raised in the United States 1,212,770,052 this being rather a small crop the price advanced in the early part of '95, but in 1895 when we faced the enormous crop of 2,151,138,580 bushels, the crop was so great it dropped to 25 cents, and here we are facing another crop the largest ever raised in this country unless it is the crop of '95.

L. S. GOODWIN.

THE ANSWER

Saturday's Daily.

We published yesterday a letter from L. S. Goodwin of Waterloo, which was intended by him as an answer to our recent article on 50-cent farms. We had not space to notice his letter yesterday. We had asked for some republican to arise and tell what was the matter and how to cure it. Mr. Goodwin gives up one-half of it as a bad bargain, and says he don't know how to cure the trouble. Then he tackles the other half and tries to explain "what the trouble is."

1. He says "the farmer had a better outlet for his wheat in 1869," but adds it was "the same as to-day, Liverpool." This frank statement gives away the other half of the question.

2. But instead of letting the matter rest, he goes on to argue that the supply of "wheat, corn and oats has increased faster than the demand." The figures he gives are partly wrong, but it makes no difference, as the reason he gives would not be good anyway. If the supply of these articles has increased, so has the population of the world which is to consume them. So the supply of these articlet would still remain at so much per capita, and the price should remain the same if no other element entered into the problem. But prices have steadily gone down and every farmer knows it. Something else is wrong, and people are studying the effect of the gold standard and are asking how it is that $1 now buys as much wheat as $3 would buy in 1869. They believe that with a single gold standard, that the purcasing power of the dollar has raised. So it takes less of it to buy a bushel of wheat or an acre of land.

3. He says he "knows of no 50-cent farms," but knows of "farms worth 100 cents in 1869 that are worth 100 cents on the dollar" to-day and at once adds the "farms are 20 to 30 per cent cheaper now than in 1869. That gives him away again, and leaves the farm where we left it, very much lower to-day than in 1869. He also says the dollar will remain at 100 cents as long as we keep the present gold standard. As there is no man on earth of any party, tribe or nation in favor of a dollar that is worth less than 100 cents, we think the dollar will remain at that figure indefinitely. And that is again, just what silver men are claiming.

4. Then he says that in 1862 wheat was only 70 cents. This is incorrect. His figures are wrong. There was no 70-cent wheat during the war. He then gives a long list of the prices of corn and oats. But these are of no value in view of the statement he makes with it, that corn has never been so low as it is now. The table also disproves what he is seeking to prove, namely, that prices go down when we have a big crop and go up when we have a small one. Half his figures show it just the other way. What we want in this country is a wider market, for one thing. But republican legislation has sought only to build up the "home market" although any one can see we cannot consume at home a half as much of anything as we can produce. Give us more places in which to sell, and more money to handle our crops with and farmers and manufacturers will be able to produce and to sell double what they do now. I and get better prices for it, too. Then there will be demand for more labor, and that will make the number of idle men smaller, and times better for all. We have tried the republican plan of high protection, of favoring bond holders, of keeping up a gold standard, of making foreign countries so disgusted with our narrow and illiberal treatment of them till they refuse to buy our products and seek a market elsewhere. We have tried this for thirty years and things have kept getting worse. It is time to try a new deal. And the people propose to try it.

ADDITIONAL.

—We said in the above article, that there was no 76-cent wheat during the war. We have since, looked the matter up and find that the lowest price of wheat during the year 1862, was $1.30, and the highest, $1.55, or about double the figure named. The price kept going higher during the war, till in April 1866, it reached $3.45 a bushel, the average price for that year, being $2.20 Figures are taken from Reports of the New York Chamber of Commerce and are no doubt correct. It should be stated they are seaboard prices, and are higher than prices paid here, by the cost of transporting a bushel of wheat from here to New York.

Churning Done in One Minute.

I have tried the Lightning Churn, you recently described in your paper, and it is certainly a wonder. I can churn in less than one minute, and the butter is elegant, and you get considerably more butter than when you use a common churn. I took the agency for the churn here and every butter maker that sees it buys one I have sold three dozen and they give the best of satisfaction. I know I can sell 100 in this township, as they churn so quickly, make so much more butter than common churns and are so cheap. Some one in every township can make two or three hundred dollars selling these churns. By addressing J F. Casey & Co, St. Louis, you can get circulars and full information so you can make big money right at home. I have made $80 the past two weeks and I have never sold anything in my life before.

Did You Ever Make Money Easy.

MR. EDITOR.—I have read how Mr. C. E. B. made so much money in the Dish Washer business and think I have beat him. I am very young yet and have had little experience in selling goods, but have made over eight hundred dollars in ten weeks selling Dish Washers. It is simply wonderful how easy it is to sell them. All you have to do is to show the ladies how they work and they cannot help but buy one. For the benefit of others I will state that I got my start from the Mound City Dish Washer Co., St. Louis, Mo. Write to them and they will send you full particulars.

I think I can clear over $3,000 the coming year, and I am not going to let the opportunity pass. Try it and publish your success for the benefit of others.

A Wife Equal to a Gold Mine!

Will some of your readers give me a good receipt for making a cold starch? I am selling self-heating flat irons and iron a little at every house and have to use some starch every place and want to know how to make a good cold starch. My husband was in debt and I being anxious to help him thought I would sell self-heating flat irons and I am doing splendidly. A cent's worth of fuel will even heat. You can iron in half the time and no danger of scorching the clothes as with the old iron, and you can get the most beautiful gloss. I sell at nearly every house, as the iron saves so much fuel, everybody wants one. I make $1.50 on each iron and have not sold less than ten any day I worked. My brother is doing well and I think anyone can make lots of money anywhere selling irons. J. F. CASEY & Co. McKINLEY FOR SILVER DECLARED HIS BELIEF IN A LETTER TO AN OHIO MAN SIX YEARS AGO.

Said He Was Always in Favor of Free Coinage and Voted Twice for it—His Position, He Added, Shows by His Voting for the Silver Bill Over Hayes' Veto—Candidate Is Silent Now—When He Was Asked at His Canton Home to Explain the Document He Refused to Make Any Statement on the Subject

AKRON, O., Sept 29.—During the meeting addressed by Senator-elect Teller here a sensation was caused by a letter read by Gen. E. B. Finley, of Bucyrus, which had been written by Maj. McKinley to E. S. Perkins, of Weimouth, Medina county, in the fall of 1890.

Mr. Perkins was at that time a representative in the Ohio legislature. He had written to Maj. McKinley regarding his position on the silver question. The major's letter in reply was as follows:

"Committee on Ways and Means,
"House of Representatives,
"WASHINGTON, Sept. 27, 1890.

"The Hon. E.S. Perkins. Weimouth, O.:

"Dear Sir—I have been so busy for the past three weeks that it has been impossible for me to give any attention to the matter in the district, fact, which I believe, my friends will appreciate. I have been waiting for a moment's time that I might answer two or three letters heretofore received from gentlemen in Medina county in relation to my position on the silver and other questions.

"I have always been in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of the silver product of the United States and have so voted on at least two occasions, during the time I have been in public life. I was not willing to extend this coinage to the silver of the world and open our mints to foreign countries without charge, as proposed by gentlemen on the floor of the house. My purpose was to secure immediately legislation that would credit and dignify our silver coin.

"I believe the law which we enacted this session will accomplish that result. It utilizes every dollar's worth of the silver product of the United States, and even more. The value of that legislation has already been apparent in the enhanced value given to silver.

"You may remember, as indicating my position on this subject, that I voted to pass the silver bill in the Fort-fifth and Forty-sixth congresses over the veto of President Hayes.

"I shall be very glad to write you at any time upon any subject you may wish. Economic questions are a conviction, and while I may not always be right, I am always willing to let those whose suffrage I seek know exactly where they are,

Very truly,
"WILLIAM M'KINLEY, JR."

Epilepsy 20 Years.

Cured by Dr. Miles' Nervine.

A few years ago, Mr. L. W. Gallaher, was an extensive, successful expert manufacturer of lumber products. Attacked with epilepsy, he was obliged to give up his business. The attacks came upon him most inopportunely. One time falling from a carriage, at another down stairs, and often in the street. Once he fell down a shaft in the mill, his injuries nearly proving fatal. Mr. Gallaher writes from Milwaukee, Feb. 16, '95.

"There are none more miserable than epileptics. For 20 years I suffered with epileptic fits, having as high as five in one night. I tried any number of physicians, paying to one alone, a fee of $500.00 and have done little for years but search for something to help me, and have taken all the leading remedies, but received no benefit. A year ago my son, Chas. S. Gallaher, druggist at 191 Reed St., Milwaukee, gave me Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, and I tried it with gratifying results. Have had but two fits since I began taking it. I am better now in every way than I have been in 20 years."

SAD SUICIDE OF RICHARD SHOBER

Mental Derangement From Overwork Causes His Death.

CHICAGO, Oct. 9 Crazed by overstudy and ill health, Richard Shober, 12 Belden place, committed suicide yesterday morning in Lincoln Park by shooting himself. Shober recently returned from Europe, where he had been studying art, and it is believed that he became mentally deranged by overwork. The following letter was in his pocket:

In this trying time I cannot think; my nerves are shattered from sleeplessness; insanity stares me in the face. O God, O my parents, forgive this deed.

This was all that was found about the body which gave any explanation for his act.

ARKADELPHIA, ARK., Oct. 8.—H. C. McCarroll, a prominent business man, well known throughout Arkansas, who served during the war with distinction as a member of General Heinman's Brigade, and who suffered intensely from nervous prostration caused from overwork and heart trouble has been completely restored to health by Dr. Miles, Restorative Nervine and New Heart Cure.

JONESVILLE, MICH., Oct. 9.—Dr. C. E. Speer, prominent here as an expert dentist, who broke down completely two years ago from extreme nervousness, caused by overwork and sleeplessness, used Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine some months since. It restored him to health and he has had no return of the trouble.

Lost and Found.

Cal. Grube's Team Supposed To Have Run Away.

Saturday evening Cal. Grube and wife drove to town to do their shopping and he tied his team south of the square. After numerous good things had been bought for the Sunday dinner Mr. Grube went after his team to go home, but to his great surprise could not find them. Work began at once searching for his fine team, drawing a two seated carriage. He first inquired of his son John, but he had not seen the team. Thinking perhaps that they had broken loose and gone home John and another man secured a rig and drove out to the farm, but they were not there. Then Marshal West was notified and with a lantern they could see where the buggy had been properly backed away from the hitching rack, and then it was thought some one had stolen the outfit. Sheriff Stroh was also notified and the search continued, and finally he found the team, but not till after Geo. Clark and some other gentleman who were at John Kruger's store had found the team and tied them to the hitching post, south of the store. When first discovered by Mr. Clark they were tangled up with another rig. One horse was over the buggy tongue, the lines were dragging, and no hitchen straps were on the harness at all.

DOLLIVER.

Friday's Daily.

Congressman V. P. Dolliver and wife of Iowa arrived in the city on the south bound Lake Shore train this morning from Angola, where he made a republican address at the fair yesterday. The Fort Wayne Journal this morning contained a special from Angola in which it was stated that Mr. Dolliver is a fake. It said:

When the speaker arose to address the splendid audience assembled to hear him, he was confronted with the record of Congressman Dolliver on the money question. The speaker deferred to Committeeman Sol. Wood for permission to explain. Mr. Wood told the orator to uncover, which he did. He created a tremendous sensation by confessing that he was not Congressman Dolliver, of Iowa, but declined to say who he was, where he was from and why he was playing horse with the public.

The whole affair was a fake. The disgust of the assembled thousands was deep and their indignation violent. The crowd all left but about two thousand. The central committee knew this man was a fake, yet permitted the public to be so grossly impossed upon. Chairman Gowdy is advertising the man all over the state as Congressman Dolliver.

The register at the Swineford House showed that he had registered as follows: "V. D. Dolliver and wife, Ft. Dodge, Iowa." He was shown a copy of the Journal by Mr. Garwood but nothing further was learned by the COURIER as to which was the fake, the Journal's article or Mr. Dolliver. He made a speech in the opera house this afternoon to which there were quite an audience listened. The Trumpet Note band and drum corps furnished music.

Dudley Foulke.

Friday's Daily.

Wm. Dudley Foulke spoke for the gold standard at the opera house last evening to a large audience. Mr. Foulke is a man of world wide reputation, just such a man as republicans have been asking for. He is one of the 'big four of civil service reformers,' the other three being Lucius B. Swift of Indianapolis, Charles J. Bonaparte of New Jersey and the late Geo. W. Curtis of Harpers Weekly, N. Y. These four have preached civil service reform to all the world at all times and places except at the polls once in two or four years, when they go up regularly and vote for the ticket nearest a standard monoply that they can find. That is what all are doing this year, except Mr. Curtis who is dead. But his paper is doing it for him. In his speech last night, Mr. Foulke was earnest, scholarly and often sarcastic. But his reasoning was defective and his knowledge of the facts very limited. He would be better posted, if he would keep in closer touch with the common people. A man cannot learn much of the wants of the masses by consulting mainly with a scion of the old Bonaparte family. Mr. Foulke could take lessons of several hundred DeKalb farmers and be profited thereby. But as it is he continually makes the same old mistakes, claiming in one breath that the democrats want a 50-cent dollar, and that the mine owners will be rich by selling their 50-cent silver for 100 cents. This ridiculous contradiction ran all through his speech. It is a wonder that so able a man as Mr. Foulke can not see this. He insisted that free silver democrats favor repudiation. That is the way republicans talked at the time democrats opposed making payable in coin the bonds that were bought with 40-cent greenbacks. But he knows that no man nor any party is advocating a depreciated currency. And it was really pathetic when he advocated paying $200 dollars in deer skins or wheat to the miner who had loaned the farmer or hunter $100 in gold dust a few years before. His reason was that hunting and farming would now by improved methods produce a dollar's worth of hides or wheat at a half what it had cost when the gold dust was borrowed. But he forgot to state what is a fact, that an ounce of gold can now be secured at less than half the cost under the same conditions a few years ago. He is also way off when he says nothing has value till labor is expended on it. Wild lands, wild animals and all natural products have a value and labor simply adds to it. There are scores of points we might make, had we time and space. As we said at first, he has much to learn yet.

A GRAND SCENE

Was That Presented to the People's Candidate,

HON. WILLIAM BRYAN,

No city, except Boston, has ever given William Jennings Bryan, a more enthusiastic reception than was given him at Indianapolis Tuesday. From the hour of his arrival at 1 p. m. until his retirement at night, it was estimated that he spoke within hearing of 150,000 people. And it was not a crowd of those who had gone there through curiosity, but they took advantage of the opportunity of seeing and hearing the next president of the United States. When the COURIER reporter left the Union depot, he was soon confronted by a solid mass of humanity and in less time than it would take to tell it we were surrounded on every side, and there we remained until Mr. Bryan left the Grand hotel for the capitol ground. From a stand erected at the north-east corner of the state house he made his first address to an audience estimated at from 60,000 to 70,000 people. The continued rain of Tuesday morning had softened the ground, and when the crowd left it could be seen where people had stood in mud shoe top deep. The state house and every inch of available space including house tops, tree tops and al near by buildings, including Monument Place, were crowded with people.

At the close of Mr. Bryan's speech at the state house he was escorted to the veranda of Tomlinson Hall which is just opposite the court hourse. Here he made his second address to almost as large audience as before. At 5:30 o'clock people began to congregate in front of Tomlinson hall and in the court house yard waiting for the speeches which were to be delivered at 7:30 and 8:30. By 7 o'clock the streets and walks extending back into the court house yard were another solid mass of people. They were all waiting patiently for the doors to be opened to the hall. So tight were the people squeezed that many woman fainted and small boys were passed over head out of the jam. The meeting at the hall was advertised for the loboring people especially, and it was estimated that 4,000 or 5,000 had been admitted at the rear door, before the front doors were opened, which was at 8:15 and then the rush for seats was on. Every inch of spach in the mammoth hall was utilized. So crowded was the stage that even the chairman had to stand up. Over 10,000 people heard Mr. Bryan's last speech at the hall. When he entered the stage he was cheered to the echo, and after several attempts by the chairman, Gov. Matthews and others, order could not be restored. After fifteen minutes of ovation Mayor Taggart succeeded in quieting the vast audience. In introducing Mr. Bryan the chairman presented him with a cane made from the tips of Buffalo horns. Mr. Bryan thanked the people for the cane and then continued with his speech for more than an hour.

At a little after eight o'clock Wednesday morning, Mr. Bryan left over the L. E. & W. by special, making stops at Noblesville, Tipton, Kokomo, Logansport, etc. The COURIER reporter left Indianapolis on the next regular L. E. & W. train and when we passed through Noblesville we were informed that the crowd there was estimated at 5,000, notwithstanding she is the banner republican town in a republican county. Tipton came next and here the people thronged the streets. From various estimates we judge that there were about 7,000 people at Tipton. At Kokomo there was a still larger crowd. The court house yard and streets were massed with people. In every direction as we passed through the country could be seen wagon loads of people returning to their homes, and in some instances whole delegations could be seen. A large force of men were at work just opposite the court house on the L. E. & W. track and nearly all of them wore badges, which read "William J. Bryan, 16 to 1." Republican friends tell us that all railroad employes are for McKinley, but fortunately those men were not under Mark Hanna's control. They also tell us that the traveling men are all shouting for McKinley. A poll of the train was taken and stood Bryan, 26; McKinley, 16; Palmer, 1; Doubtful, 1.

At Peru we were joined by S. J. Brandon, Fred Funk and a large crowd of others who had been to Logansport and heard Mr. Bryan. They report a very large crowd there, estimated at from 15,000 to 20,000. Many delegations came in from the country. There were numerous wagons drawn by 17 horses, 16 greys and 1 sorrel.

Jake Raut was also among the crowd at Logansport yesterday and as he visited Canton recently can no doubt tell you how much the COURIER has exaggerated its report. You know, the "truthful" Dispatch says we are unreliable.

Who are They?

Two democrats and some republicans were talking over the political situation the other day, in Auburn. The democrats asserted their faith in the election of Bryan. The republicans were equally certain McKinley would succeed. When asked why they thought Bryan would be defeated, they said that one reason they had was, that Bryan's relatives here in Auburn were working against him. And now comes the momentous question: Who are Bryan's relatives in Auburn? If any are found, we shall insist on their being made members of the cabinet at least.

Choosing a Jury.

An astonishing number of men are glad to get on a jury, and this weakness is often used by designing politicians to secure the favor of some voter The facts are, that selecting and drawing juries, is a matter far removed from politics, as it should be. And when an applicant for an office tries to make a man believe he has secured the voter a place among the twelve chairs that grace the northeast corner of the court room, you can tell him he is deceiving you. The following is the way juries are provided for and drawn:

At the December term each year, the Judge appoints two "jury commissioners" one democrat and one republican. At present they are Mike Boland and Joseph Rainier. These two men look over the total vote of each township for the last general election, and then divide the men selected for jury service among those townships, giving them jurors according to the number of votes, and giving all political parties a fair chance. Of course none but good, representative men are chosen. They pick out in this way, 144 names, each choosing 72. These are to do for the regular juries of the coming year. Then, these names are locked in the box and the key held by the commissioner whose politics is opposite that of the clerk. On the Monday of the week previous to the beginning of each term of court, these two men meet in the clerk's office, unlock the box and in their presence the clerk draws out 18 names, one at a time. The six drawn first, are used as grand jurors; the other twelve are the trial, or petit jurors. In case there is need for a "struck" jury. The commissioners, must furnish, each a list of 18 names, not of those in the box, and these will be used instead of the regular jury in that particular case. The attorneys in this case can look over these 36 names and each may strike off 10, without being obliged to assign a reason. Then from the 16 remaining they must select the 12 men for the jury. It will be seen that the sheriff has no more to do in the matter than the man in the moon, except in case a man is taken off from the regular jury for some cause, and a man has to be picked up on the streets or somewhere, to take his place. In that case the sheriff or a deputy goes out and yanks in the first man he can find. But when a man comes and says you ought to vote for a certain man for sheriff because he got you a place on the jury, tell him he is way off. A sheriff does nothing of the kind and has no right, whatever to interfere with the work of the jury commissioners in selecting the year's jurors. A sheriff knows no more what names the jury commissioners have put in the box, than anyone else, and neither he nor any other man has a right even to suggest a name to go in the box.

Another Smart Woman.

My husband is poor but proud and he does not want me to work, as I have nothing to do I get restless, and after reading in your paper Mrs. Russell's experience selling self-heating flatirons I concluded I would try it. I wrote to J. F. Casey & Co., St Louis Mo., and they treated me so nicely that I felt very much encouraged. As soon as I got my sample iron I started out, and sold 8 irons the first day clearing $12. I have not sold less than 8 any day since, and one day I sold 17. I now have $226 clear money, and my husband does not know I have been working at all, but I am afraid he will be mad when I tell him. Have I done right or should I quit work and leave him to struggle alone.

AN ANXIOUS WIFE.

You are doing just right, your husband should be proud of you, go ahead and show the world what an energetic woman can do. That self-heating iron must be a wonderful seller, as we hear of so many that are succeeding selling it. 2

HORRIBLE CRIME!

A Farmer Kills His Family—Wife, Son and Daughter Slaughtered.

Albert Bray, aged 39, a prosperous farmer and a very religious man, cut the throats of his wife, his 9-year-old son, Carl, and his 2-year-old daughter, Edna, and himself. The crimes were committed between midnight and daylight the other morning five miles north of Noblesville, Ind. The wife and children died without a struggle, but Bray, with a gaping wound in his throat, two inches deep and six inches in length, lived until noon, without regaining consciousness. The work was done with a razor which he used to do his own shaving. Both Bray and his wife have been in poor health. Bray procured a large hand ax, and crushed the skulls of his victims after he had used the razor upon them. The murderer walked upon the porch and slashed his own throat in a horrible manner, and was found lying in a pool of blood. Owing to sickness in his family for the past few months and some financial embarrassment, Mr. Bray's reason was effected.

Chicago's Day.

Chicago special: The anniversary of the great fire was taken advantage of by local managers of the presidential campaign to make a demonstration in advocacy of the continuance of the present national financial system, both Republicans and gold Democrats joining forces under the direction of the Business Men's Sound Money Association in organizing a parade, the equal of which has never been seen in this or probably any other American city. As a counter demonstration the combined free silver forces at night gave a torch light parade, which was quite as n ble as the day parade of the gold men.

Were Five Deaths.

Three additional deaths, making five in all, have resulted from the boiler explosion in the Mont Our rolling mill at Danville, Pa. These are Thomas Cromwell, Oliver Cromwell and John Mullin, Sr., who died soon after being removed to their homes. It is likely that Robert Reed, Rush Yerrick and Clinton Major, who were terribly scalded by escaping steam, will not recover. In all about sixty persons were more or less seriously hurt. The cause of the explosion is not known, but is supposed to have been due to low water in the boiler.

Armenians Must Not Leave Turkey.

The Sultan has issued another irade declaring that Armenians that shall hereafter flee from Turkey shall lose their citizenship and will not be permitted to return. Those who have already left the country are warned that if they do not return within two months they will be forever afterward debarred from returning, even though they may be provided with foreign passports which will not be accepted. All fugitive Armenians returning to Turkey in defiance of these conditions will be arrested.

Mobbed the Revivalist.

Men and women joined in the little town of Seward, seven miles south of Guthrie, Okla., to mob a preacher the other evening. A traveling preacher, whose name nobody seems to be sure about, started a revival, and in the course of his remarks said that any woman who attended dances was not virtuous. He was followed by an irate crowd of women and men, and at the depot two men assaulted him, striking him in the face until he had two black eyes and a bleeding nose, while the women vigorously applauded.

Ohio Man Killed.

The dead body of a man supposed to be Edward Mitchell, was found Thursday night by the side of the track of the Missouri Pacific at Centertown, 45 miles east of Sedalia. On the person of the deceased was an American Railway Union card and a letter of introduction from James E. Seiferd, of Lima, Ohio. The body was horribly mangled, and it is supposed Mitchell fell off a west-bound train and was run over. The remains were buried at California, Mo.

Important Decision.

The Indiana State Board of Elections by a vote of two to one decided to deny the petition of the national Democrats to go on the ballot under that name. Governor Matthews had the deciding vote and cast it against the petition. If the national Democrats fail to select a name the board will choose one. No objection was made to the device.

Four Boys Burned to Death.

A few nights ago, Spencer Academy, located ten miles west of Antlers, I. T., burned to ashes, together with all furniture, and four Choctaw boys. Their names are John Smith, Daniel James, Thomas Kuniotubble and William Wilson. Those injured were Alfred Bryan, bruised and burned about head; Harris Fisher, sprained foot; Colton Bacon, leg sprained; Edward Clark, jawbone broken; Sam Spring, burned in face, head and shoulders, and wrist sprained. The origin of the fire is supposed to be incendiary. The academy was built by the Choctaw Nation and 102 boys were there when it burned. Everything is a total loss, as the Nation did not carry any insurance.

Mail Coaches Robbed.

Santa Fe (N. M.) special: Information has just reached this point that the San Antonio-White Oak stage has been held up by masked robbers, forty miles from San Antonio. The hold-up occurred in a lonely gorge in the Oscura Mountains, the driver being compelled to dismount, the mail pouches were rifled and the robbers stole the stage horses, compelling the driver to walk to San Antonio. Three hours later the White Oaks mail coach passed the same point and little doubt is entertained that it met the same fate. The men are probably members of the gang who held up the Atlantic and Pacific Express at Albuquerque a few days ago, in which the leader was killed.

Brothers' Duel to Death.

Guthrie (Okla.) special: In the Indian country, near Cushing, Sam and Wash Shonstone, brothers, quarreled over an Indian girl to whom both were paying attention. Wash was armed with a gun, while Sam wielded a bowie knife. The latter forced the fight, rushing upon his brother so that the latter could not use his gun to advantage, and stabbed Wash half a dozen times before he could break away. In a moment Wash threw the gun to his shoulder, pulled the trigger and sent a bullet through the heart of Sam. Wash was so badly cut by his brother that he cannot live.

The inmates of the home recently secured an injunction restraining the Commission from touching the pensions. The Supreme Court reverses the decision.

Telegraphers' Strike Off.

The telegraphers' strike on the Canadian Pacific Railway was declared off Thursday morning. It is understood that all of those operators who have not performed criminal acts will be reinstated. PROUD DAY FOR KNOX

GREAT LINCOLN-DOUGLAS DEBATE COMMEMORATED.

Monument Unveiled in Honor of the Historic Event—Palmer and Depew the Principal Orators—Exercises Held Under Auspices of the College.

Tributes to Noted Men.

The entire population of Galesburg, Ill., united Wednesday to commemorate history and exalt education. Thousands came from the surrounding country and assisted in making it a day of enthusiastic, noble-spirited celebration. These were the features of this most noteworthy day in the history of Galesburg: Celebration of the thirty-eighth anniversary of the famous debate between Abraham Lincoln and Stephen A. Douglas. Unveiling of a bronze tablet, built into the walls of Knox College, to commemorate that event. Formal announcement of the establishment of the Abraham Lincoln School of Arts and Sciences in Knox College. Dedication of a monument to the soldier dead of Knox County. Finally, lest the day should seem too one-sided,

C. M. DEPEW.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

too much given to the things that live mostly in the recollections of the old, the day closed in genuine college style with a football game.

This manifold, many-sided occasion sprang from the desire of old Knox College to emphasize its adherence to the doctrine that true education combines care for citizenship and patriotism. The veteran soldiers who had poured out their blood in expression of their patriotic creed joined hands in the endeavor. Men who lived in the days when the deeds commemorated were wrought and who knew, with the knowledge that comes from personal contact, the emotions that ruled men's souls at that time, came to read the lesson of the past, and apply them to the future. Other men, whose part it is to apply in the present the lessons of the past, joined their voices in the chorus.

J. M. PALMER.

There was Chauncey M. Depew, strong in the knowledge of what has made his country great and superb in ability, to tell the story of that greatness. There was Senator John M. Palmer, soldier and statesman, best qualified of all men in Illinois to throw the flashlight of personal experience upon the mighty struggle of forty years ago, when two Illinoisans were the champions, the American people were the spectators, and the unity of the nation, the fate of the nation, was the ground of battle. There was Robert T. Lincoln, famous son of a world famous father, and there were the dozens who cheered on the fight in the old days, and the other dozens and scores who have given their lives since that time to putting into enduring form the decision then rendered. Nature smiled on the efforts of her children and gave a perfect day, and a gorgeous setting for their undertaking.

R. T. LINCOLN.

Galesburg, clothed for a holiday, received a holiday crowd. Every railroad brought in special train loads. Long lines of vehicles—carriages, buggies, family carryalls and plain springless farm wagons—rolled over the country roads in seemingly endless streams. Each was piled high with old people, young people, babies and lunch baskets. Galesburg houses were opened early, and emptied before 10 o'clock in the morning. Thirty thousand people thronged the streets, making progress on sidewalks well-nigh impossible, blocking street cars and possessing the roadways for pedestrianism. Every single individual was in holiday attire and in holiday humor—a combination of barbecue, circus day, county fair and graduation day spirit. The seller of official souvenirs, tin horns and campaign badges found a ready market.

The crowd found the first outlet for its enthusiasm in the morning parade preceding the soldiers' monument dedication, and kept the supply steadily on tap until after the Knox boys had trounced the young football players from Parsons, Kan., in the afternoon.

The ceremonies on the campus of Knox College, were, of course, the event of the day. The crowd commenced to gather at noon on the historic spot where "Honest Abe" and the "Little Giant" wrestled in debate thirty-eight years ago. Old Knox had put on festal garb. The college colors, purple and gold, were everywhere. Three significant dates were displayed on big banners—1837, the date Knox College was founded; 1858, the year of the debates, and 1896. The history of Illinois could have been written from the personal recollections of the men in the crowd.

John H. Finley, president of Knox College, presided. He is the youngest college president in America. Addresses were made by Dr. Nash, president of Lombard University; Chauncey Depew, Senator Palmer and Robert T. Lincoln.

MURDER BY BANK ROBBERS.

Minnesota Bandits Kill Two Men and Make Their Escape.

The deliberate murder of two men was committed at Sherburne, Minn., Wednesday by highwaymen who robbed the Bank of Sherburne of $1,000. The affair was a terrible reminder of the great bank robbery at Northfield in 1876, in which the James and Younger boys were participants. About noon two strangers, one of whom looked like a mere boy, rode along the main street on bicycles. They were both well dressed but were unshaven and travel-stained. No particular attention was paid to them, as Sherburne is a town of but 300 persons, most of them workingmen, and at that hour they were hurrying home to dinner.

The strangers loitered around the outskirts until nearly 1 o'clock. At that time they sauntered lazily down the street and stopped immediately in front of the bank of Sherburne. After a moment's talk they went into the bank, and the elder of the men engaged Assistant Cashier George Thorburn in conversation. One of the desperadoes secured possession of a roll of bills containing about $1,000. Thorburn tried to prevent the men from getting away with the money, when they whipped out their revolvers and began firing and at the same time retreating. One of the bullets struck Thorburn, causing almost instant death. The shooting within the bank aroused the town, and the citizens began running in that direction. The first man to reach the place was Olaf Oestern, a traveling salesman for the Wood Harvester Company of St. Paul. The desperadoes, fearing they would be captured, quickly turned their weapons upon Oestern. He made a dash to grapple with them, but was not quick enough, as he was struck in the head and fell dead at their feet.

They ran down the street firing at random, while persons in the street hurried to places of shelter. They ran about three blocks to some bushes where they had left their wheels. These they mounted and rode rapidly away toward the Iowa line, six miles to the south. Mayor C. E. Everett and the town marshal at once did all in their power to capture the bandits. Sheriff Hill, of Marion County, organized a large posse of determined Sherburne men, which moved southward on horseback late in the afternoon. It is declared that if the men are captured they will be strung up to a limb of the first tree big enough to bear them. The men got away with the roll of money, about $1,000, which they snatched from the counter of the bank. Gov. Clough issued a proclamation offering a reward of $500 for the capture of the robers.

KITE FOR WEATHER BUREAU.

Experiments Being Made by Signal Service Officer Hulbert.

Edward F. Hulbert, of Detroit, connected with the United States weather bureau, who has been making experiments in kite flying for the purpose of getting wind variations at great elevations, has succeeded in producing a kite twelve feet high, having 132 square feet of sail. The frame is so shaped and placed that it bends readily in one direction and is braced rigidly in the other, so that a slightly concave shape is obtained. The weight of the kite is three pounds and eight ounces, so distributed that it is balanced equally from a common center. The apparatus, resembling two diamond-shaped cambric boxes joined by slender rods, with no tail, has been given its first test. A breeze of six miles an hour was blowing, but it flew the kite nearly overhead, the angle being between 75 and 50 degrees and carrying only two feet of slack in 600 feet of line. The strain on the cord was between 50 and 100 pounds, too great to be held in the hands. It is Mr Hulbert's intention to fly the kite with piano wire, and it will then be used in any kind of wind, and recording instruments will be sent up.

Sparks from the Wires.

Miss Helene Scott, a young comic opera singer, who was with the "Princess Bonnie" company, died at Pittsburg.

The big Edgar Thomson steel works at Braddock, Pa., have resumed work after a short stoppage. They employ 3,000 men.

Whitecaps at Holland Station, Ohio, buried a farmer named Huntsman alive and then dug him up and whipped him unmercifully.

Col. Pattie Watkins, of Ballington Booth's American Volunteers, has been married to Fred Lindsay, staff captain of the same organization in New York.

The young man who committed suicide in Toronto at the Queen's Hotel has been positively identified as Jacob Dehaan, a Cornell student. He took cyanide of potassium.

Thomas Cullen, a trolley repairer of the street railroad company at Cleveland, met a horrible death. He was up on a ladder when he was caught by a live wire, drawn up and instantly killed. A large crowd witnessed his death as he was hanging in the wires.

The United States Minister, Mr. Taylor, has declared to the Spanish Government that the United States is most favorably disposed towards Spain, but that, owing to the extent of the United States coast line, she is unable to prevent the departure of filibusters for the island of Cuba.

John Daly, who was recently released from Portland prison, after serving several years on conviction of complicity in a dynamite plot, together with his brother, has arrived at Queenstown. In reply to an address Daly declared that he was not a dynamiter, and that he never believed in dynamite to terrorize the English Government. The dream of his life, he said, was to fight for Ireland like a soldier and a patriot.

ILL-ASSORTED MARRIAGE.

Coming Union of Princess Helene and Crown Prince of Naples.

An ill-assorted marriage will be that between Princess Helene of Montenegro and the Crown Prince of Naples, heir to the throne of Italy. The Princess is a stalwart brunette, nearly six feet high, and one of the handsomest women in Europe while the Prince is almost a dwarf, being less than five feet in height, and so poor in health that his life has often been despaired of. There are other royal pairs who are disproportionate in size, the Princess of Wales being taller than her husband, but none so incongruous as this will be. Princess Helene is ambitious; she tried to marry the young Czar of Russia, but was jilted by him. The Crown Prince's hand was rejected by every marriageable princess in Europe, and so in this respect they are well matched. She is handsome and poor; he is ugly and rich, and they are well content to strike a bargain. Her only fault is her poverty, the revenues from her father's little kingdom being sufficient to support him and her in no better style than thousands of Americans live. His subjects number less than 200,000, his country is tiny, and his capital town of Cettinje has only one hotel, no bank or theater, and no houses of decent appearance except the shabby old villa in which he lives. The only virtue of the Crown Prince of Naples is that he will some day be King of Italy. He is bad-tempered, dissolute in habits, and fond of gambling and drink. He is a hypochondriac, and when not really ill imagines that he is so. If his bride is a dutiful wife she will spend most of her time nursing him. In Montenegro there is some disapproval of the marriage, because the beautiful Princess Helene is thought by the mountaineers to be worthy of a better fate. In Italy everyone is well content. They expected that the Prince would never be able to find a bride.

GIANT PRINCESS AND HER DWARF FIANCE.

SMALL VOTE IN FLORIDA.

Democrats Say They Will Win in November, but Others Dispute Them.

A general election for State and county officials was held throughout Florida Tuesday. There were three tickets in the field for State officers, Democratic, Republican and Populist, and also for county officers in nearly all the counties. The gold Democrats supported the Democratic ticket, and there is no doubt of its success by a good majority. Several important amendments to the State Constitution were voted on, the most important being one to abolish October elections. Democratic managers have claimed that they would elect their State ticket by a majority of 20,000 or more, while Republican leaders have asserted the Democratic majority would not exceed 15,000, and might fall below 12,000. The meager returns based on estimates received at the time this is written indicate that the Democratic ticket will not receive the majority hoped for by its sponsors. The vote seems to have been a light one and the Democrats are the principal losers by the falling off. In the storm-stricken counties, which have heretofore given large Democratic majorities, practically no interest was taken in the election, the people having no heart for politics with wrecked homes about them. There is a difference of opinion as to the bearing on the November result. Regular Democrats claim the State is safe for Bryan, but Republicans and gold Democrats assert that they believe Bryan will be beaten.

KILLED FOR STEALING RIDES.

New Haven Police Accuse Brakemen of Wholesale Tramp Murders.

The police of New Haven, Conn., assert that brakemen of the Consolidated Railroad have been murdering tramps caught stealing rides on cars of that line. It is said that ten bodies, all mangled by being ran over by trains, have been found on the tracks of the Consolidated within the last six months. A man named Molony from Brooklyn was shot twice and thrown from a train by the train hands, but survived his injuries. He has given information to the authorities which has led to the arrest of a brakeman named Bean. The latter, according to the police, confessed that trainmen made it a practice to kill tramps found on their cars.

INDIANA INCIDENTS.

RECORD OF EVENTS OF THE PAST WEEK.

Indiana Divine Charges a Clerical Brother with Horse-Stealing—Marion Grand Jury Returns a True Bill Against a Real Estate Dealer.

Indiana Minister in Jail.

Rev. Henry Morlan, a well-known Methodist clergyman, is in jail at Corydon on a charge of horse stealing. The warrant upon which he was arrested was sworn out by Rev. M. A. Rowe, also a Methodist clergyman. Rev. Mr. Rowe's horse and buggy were taken from his stable a few nights ago and were afterward found in the immediate neighborhood of Rev. Mr. Morlan's house. Rowe suspected his brother minister of taking the rig, and after investigation swore out the warrant for Morlan's arrest. The latter says he was passing the stable of his brother in the church a few nights ago and, being very tired, entered the stable, hitched the horse to a buggy and drove home, turning the horse loose to find its way back to its master's crib. He had no intention of stealing the horse and buggy, he says, and did not think of the act being wrong when he did it.

Indict Hinshaw for Embezzlement.

Amos P. Hinshaw, formerly principal in the Marion public schools and later a real estate dealer, was arrested charged with embezzlement. In 1893 Hinshaw was appointed trustee for an addition to Marion owned by Messrs. Thomas Jones and Benjamin Wilcox, of Auburn, N. Y., and Mayor L. A. Von Behren and J. Willard Clark, of Marion. Hinshaw as trustee, it is alleged, sold the lots and collected the money for the same. A great deal of the land was sold, but when a settlement was demanded the money was not forthcoming, and a deficit of $2,500 was shown. The Grand Jury found a true bill for embezzlement. He was arrested and bound over to the Common Pleas Court, his bond being fixed at $2,000, which he has been unable to give.

All Over the State.

A carriage team driven by the wife of County Treasurer Mayfield and Mrs. Robert H. Wood and daughter ran away at Madison. Miss Nellie Wood was instantly killed and her sister's thigh was broken.

At Elkhart fire Wednesday morning damaged the machinery and stock of the Garden City Tablet factory to the extent of $20,000. The loss is partially covered by insurance. The flames originated at J. C. Puterbaugh's implement store, which was completely destroyed, with its contents.

Frank Schumacker, a tailor of Decatur, was thrown into the river Tuesday night by a mob and kept there until almost dead. He went home in the evening in a state of intoxication, it is alleged, and drove his family from the house with an ax. His neighbors went to the house, placed a rope around his neck, dragged him to the river and threw him in. Officers arrived in time to save his life.

Schmidt's brewery at Indianapolis was the scene of a peculiar acident Wednesday night, which resulted in the painful injury of twelve men. A panic followed the accident, and it is remarkable that many more men were not seriously injured. A tank of ammonia exploded while a crowd was standing at the door of the brewery, and the concussion burst the glass doors from their hinges, and flung them full in the faces of the spectators. Many people were cut or burned by the flames which leaped from the room.

An Indianapolis dispatch says: John Kinney, of Vincennes, went to the polls to vote in 1892, but when Charles Thompson offered him $50 to refrain from the act he accepted it and went home. Later Kinney brought suit to recover the penalty for bribing an elector not to vote and the Court decided in his favor. In an opinion Tuesday the Appellate Court sustains the finding of the lower court and says that "It is to be regretted that the necessities of the law require, in order to compel an observance of its provisions, that one of the parties to such an infamous contract should be made a beneficiary, but if it were not so it would be impossible to detect and punish the real criminal." The Court refused to review the evidence before the trial court, which the counsel for the appellant argued was meager. It is enough, the Court says, that the jury chose to disbelieve the appellant and believe the relator.

The quail shooting season, now open in Illinois, and which opens in Indiana on Nov. 10, promises well for the sportsmen. Reports from every section of the States indicate that quail are more plentiful this season than for many years. This is due to several causes, the chief of which is the better respect shown in the past two years for the game laws. The Illinois State Sportsmen's Association, with its members scattered all over the State, has been able to keep in close touch with the pot hunter, who has no regard for the rights of others nor respect for the laws made for the protection and preservation of game. The association, by its persistent prosecution of offenders, has made the laws of value, and there is no longer the promiscuous killing of game birds in and out of season. The farmer, too, has of recent years been glad to assist the associations in the protection of game. Last winter was favorable for the birds, and the springtime found "Bob White" piping out his merry song in every field. The hatching season was generally favorable and the rank growth of weeds has given protection to the young birds from his arch enemy, the hawk. The southern portions of the State furnish the most favorable resorts for the sportsmen. The northern counties are not so well suited to quail as those of the south. In many sections birds are too scarce to warrant a trip afield. In others good sport may be had so long as the season is open.

Arthur Gambell, of Aurora, was thrown from a train at Greensburg, breaking his right leg in two places. This is the seventh time he has had his leg broken by the same cause in the last five years.

Highwaymen in Anderson shot Fred D. Trout, a young man, and robbed Walter Sparks, J. F. Delapne and Frank Tinter of watches and money. Trout was held up by a gun being thrust in his face. He defied them and knocked the gun down with an umbrella. As he did so the fellow pulled the trigger and the ball passed through his leg. No arrests have been made.

The nude body of an unknown woman was found on the highway near Eden.

Christian Baker, a convict, sent up from La Grange County in 1895 to serve ten years for arson, and who escaped, but was recaptured, has received an additional sentence of three years by Judge Hubbard. Baker pleaded not guilty, but on the advice of his attorney withdrew that plea and acknowledged his guilt. Baker was indicted under an ancient statute that prescribes a sentence for escaping from confinement, and the indictment and conviction is said to be the first case on record in the Indiana courts where the statute has been brought into execution.

AGAIN MR. BRYAN ACCEPTS

Sends Out a Letter Regarding the Populist Nomination.

Presidential Candidate William J. Bryan has given out for publication the following letter of acceptance of the Populist nomination for President:

William V. Allen, Chairman, and Others of the Notification Committee of the People's Party: Gentlemen—The nomination of the People's party for the Presidency of the United States has been tendered me in such a generous spirit and upon such honorable terms that I am able to accept the same without departing from the platform adopted by the Democratic national convention at Chicago.

I fully appreciate the breadth of patriotism which has actuated the members of the People's party, who, in order to consolidate the sentiment in favor of bimetallism, have been willing to go outside of party lines and support as their candidate one already nominated by the Democratic party and also by the Free Silver party.

I also appreciate the fact that while, during all the years since 1873, a large majority of the Democratic party and a considerable minority of the Republican party have been consistent advocates of free coinage of silver at the present ratio, yet ever since the organization of the People's party its members have unanimously supported such coinage as the only means of restoring bimetallism. By persistently pointing out the disastrous effects of a gold standard and protesting against each successive step toward financial bondage the Populists have exerted an important influence in awakening the public to a realization of the nation's present peril.

In a time like this, when a great political party is attempting to surrender the right to legislate for our views upon the financial question and is seeking to bind the American people to a foreign monetary system, it behooves us as lovers of our country and friends of American institutions to lay aside for the present such differences as may exist among us on minor questions in order that our struggle may be united in a supreme effort to wrest the government from the hands of those who imagine that the nation's finances are only secure when controlled by servile acquiescence in any policy, however destructive to the interests of the people of the United States, which foreign creditors, present or prospective, may desire to force upon us.

It is a cause of congratulation that we have in this campaign not only the support of Democrats, Populists and Republicans who have all along believed in independent bimetallism, but also the active co-operation of those Democrats and Republicans who, having heretofore waited for international bimetallism, now join with us rather than trust the destiny of the nation to those who are holding out the delusive hope of foreign aid while they labor secretly for the permanent establishment of the single gold standard.

While difficulties always arise in the settlement of the details of any plan of co-operation between distinct political organizations, I am sure that the advocates of bimetallism are so intensely in earnest that they will be able to devise some means by which the free silver vote may be concentrated upon one electoral ticket in each State. To secure this result charity toward the opinions of others and liberality on the part of all is necessary. But honest and sincere friends who are working toward a common result find it possible to agree upon just and equitable terms. The American people have proven equal to every emergency which has arisen in the past, and I am confident that in the present emergency there will be no antagonism between the various regiments of the one great army which is marching to repel an invasion more dangerous to our welfare than an army with banners.

Acknowledging with gratitude your expression of confidence and good will, I am, yours very truly,

W. J. BRYAN.

Removing Half the Foundation.

For a minute let us imagine the Washington monument to be standing on a foundation built half of gold and half of silver. The blocks that support this magnificent structure are equally distributed, so as to bear up the column of marble above. The winds and the storms beat against the structure, but it swerves not, because the foundation is equal to the weight and broad enough to hold the great monument erect. By and by thieves find out that the foundations are made of the precious metals, and they go quietly to work to take out one-half the foundation. People stand after a while looking at that great white column, built in honor of George Washington, the Father of His Country, and they see that cracks are appearing, that on one side there are chips out of the marble. They look again, and see that the great tall, substantial structure is settling, and they see that it is out of plumb, that something has been undermining the foundation. A committee is appointed, men are brought, excavations are made, and all the people stand aghast as they behold one-half of the foundation gone. Then they say: "See the ruin; who has done this? Why is this magnificent structure to totter down and be deprived forever of marking a nation's respect and love for the first President and the first man of the republic?"—Cleveland (Ohio) Plain Dealer.

Gold Prices a Disadvantage.

The demonetization of silver led to a general fall of prices through the appreciation of gold. But at the same time, by breaking the international par of exchange between gold and silver, it gave silver-using nations an advantage in the markets of Europe over countries producing and selling the same commodities on a gold basis. As a result, our great export staples have fallen considerably more than the general average, greatly to the injury, more especially, of the agricultural classes.

Prices of manufactured goods have been better sustained during the last two or three years, but it has been largely by means of combines, and prices have been held up (so far as they have been at all by limiting production, which is itself an evil of no small magnitude. Besides, the keeping up of manufacturers' prices a little above the silver level, is operating to the disadvantage of that class, by stimulating the manufactures of silver standard countries, so that in the end the American manufacturer may be injured even worse than the agriculturist.—The National Bimetallist.

"The American people, from tradition and interest, are in favor of bimetallism and demand the use of both gold and silver as standard money," said the Republican platform of eight years ago. "We condemn the Democratic party in its efforts to demonetize silver," it said four years ago.

CHAPTER XVII.

It was the next morning.

"A lady for you, miss; Mrs. Flouncet," and a servant of the hotel ushered in Miss Smythe's friend.

"My dear girl, what made you come here? I have only just learned of your whereabouts from that terrible German Jew——"

"Terrible, Mrs. Flouncet?"

"Fancy, he was at my house at break of day. Meant well, I dare say, but it would never do to have a Jew seen about the place. I treated him as coldly as possible——"

"Oh, Mrs. Flouncet, how could you?"

"Dear child, West Kensington has its prejudices, to which one must conform. Put on your hat and let us drive home quickly. I received Miss Smythe's letter, telling me of you, a week ago. Odd creature, isn't she? Stay, I can't possibly take you back like that. Unlucky about your trunk, is it not? Tell me, does Russian green become you?"

"And he was so kind——"

"Whom are you talking of? Ah, that German Jew. Well, he was kind, no doubt. But we are not stony-hearted, either. You should never have accepted his kindness, dear. Why did you not drive straight to me? But, come, no more sarcasm. We're going to welcome you very warmly at Kensington, to cure you of all your prejudices, even in favor of German Jews. I positively shudder when I remember that man—his pronunciation; his nose. This is my shop. I'm sure Russian green will become you; but choose just as if you were my daughter."

So, laughing and chatting, the lady of West Kensington preceded the girl into a large, handsome shop, and before long they were driving away with a large, well-filled box.

One week later Elizabeth wrote a long letter home:

"Dear Mother and Nora—So here I am in Stonemar. You got my letter telling you of my arrival, I suppose. Well, now I will tell you as much of the Stonemarians as I well can after eight days spent in their midst. To begin at the beginning: Mrs. Flouncet put me in the train and wished me every happiness.

"Now to the Dosems. He is a cipher, and acknowledges her superiority, which is, of course, as it ought to be. She is exceedingly clever, but there's one thing about her I don't like, she has crazes.

"One of these is homeopathy. Almost the first thing on my arriving, she asked me: 'Did I believe in homeopathy?'

"I believe, mother, when I put this Mrs. Dosem into one of my novels, there will not be a reviewer in England but will say she is that impossible thing—an impossible Englishwoman; and to think she is this minute sitting opposite me, with 'Stuart Mill' on her lap, and a box of what Tom would call 'weeny' pills beside her—a real live production of the English town of Stonemar.

"You need not be surprised if my letters by degrees assume a homeopathic, philosophical coloring. Metaphysics, altruism and pills form the themes of our conversations.

"Now, good-by. It's fun studying 'types.' Your own old

"BET."

So much for first impressions.

Here is a letter written nine months afterward:

"Family—I am weary. Darlings, I am homesick. Comedy, comedy, comedy, and no love. Whilst I write my letters I am dying of homesickness. Whilst I laugh at them, the tears are burning behind my eyes.

"They are not bad. Folks tell me they are very kind. People are never more than 'kind' in England, I believe. Is one so old at eighteen that one should need nothing but 'kindness'? that one should need no love?

"My darlings, when——"

Here the letter stopped. It was never sent to Ecks.

Three months afterward the writer, Elizabeth, was in her home again.

CHAPTER XVIII.

"My child!"

"My own dear Elizabeth!"

"Dear ones, yes; crush me. It's lovely to feel your arms about me. Another kiss, my mother! Where's your hand, Nora? Home again! home! home!" and in sheer joy the tears ran down the girl's face. "My dear ones, how do you look? I cannot see you. My happiness blinds me. Home! home!"

Great joy is pitiful to see; as pitiful as great sadness.

"Home! home!" and the tears poured down the girl's face.

Why was she so glad to be home?

"And there's work for me, my mother?"

"Yes, dear."

"And I shall be no drag on you?"

"Drag, child? No, never."

"Mother."

"What, dear?"

"It's dark. Bend down to me."

The mother bent and the girl kissed her passionately on her forehead and cheeks, again and again.

"Three hundred and sixty-five nights, mother, and no one to kiss one and say good night. Three hundred and sixty-five mornings, and no one to kiss one and say good morning. Oh, I'm so, so happy! I think my happiness will kill me!"

They had reached their hall door—

"What's that—a letter from Dorry, Nora?"

"Yes."

It was Dorry's remittance, addressed to Nora. Dorry never addressed money to her mother. She begged Nora to spend it.

To "mother" there was only a loving letter:

"Dearest—To think I shall be home in two short months. Perhaps Bet is home now. Never mind! Her happiness will be stale when mine is fresh.

"I kiss my mother on her hand and cheeks, as do the Russians. Good-by.

"DORRY."

"So you passed the examination all right, Bet?" asked Nora two weeks later.

"Yes, and went straight to the court and got sworn, and now the embassy work will be mine, and—I've another idea, family. Listen," and she produced a slip of paper from her pocket, and read its contents aloud, in German and English.

"The English is mine, family. I see German songs are published with English words. I mean to offer mine, mother."

"It can do no harm."

"Harm, mother! It's a magnificent speculation! Stamps in the house?"

The mother smiled.

"I don't think there are."

"Then I'll go straight and buy some, and send off my letters at once."

The speculation answered; and, what with teaching, translating for the embassy and for music firms, the second Miss Denbigh was fairly set afloat, when, in the temporary absence of the editor of Liebrecht's "Continental English Weekly," she was appointed editress of that magazine.

"Wasn't it only a few days ago we received Dorry's last remittance?" asked Nora one day.

The words were said lightly. Dorry's remittances were always welcome, but had not been so needed of late that her mother was not able to rejoice in this one being her "last."

"Here's Tom," she added, "coming upstairs with a letter, and shouting 'from Russia! from Russia! from Russia!' Perhaps it's to say she has set out. Fetch it, Lizbeth."

CHAPTER XIX.

"Mother, dear mother, speak! If only a word; oh, mother, speak!"

"Hush, Lizbeth, you'll kill her!"

But the girl, thoughtless of all except her terror, still bent over the pale mother.

"Speak, darling, speak one word. We are here, Nora and I. Mother, you have two children still. Oh, mother, look up!"

But her words fell unheeded. The fatal letter still tightly clasped in her hands, the mother sat, her eyes gazing far away. Was she in thought once more by her child—her last born, as it had lain in its cradle some seventeen summers before? Little Dorry, who had never known an earthly father's love, had seemed to belong more to her mother than either of the other girls. She had been named Theodora, "Gift of God." But God's gifts are loans; and He had but lent the child Dorry for a time to cheer her widowed mother. Short indeed had been her life; short as that of a flower, which, springing up in the morning, gladdens the heart during the burden and heat of the day, but which ere close of evening folds its bright petals.

And as her life had been, her death was—one of self-sacrifice. Her pupil had gone beyond her depth while bathing in the river, and Dorry seeing her danger, though she could not swim, had followed her to try and save her. She reached the child, and caught her in her arms, but the waters would have their prey, and clutched them both. Some hours later the two were found, locked in each other's arms.

The letter which bore the tidings was written by the father. It breathed in every line the affection felt for the brave girl; it dwelt upon her gentle, loving ways, and that noble unselfishness and high sense of honor, by which she had awakened feelings of respect seldom inspired by one so young. It concluded with the words: "My wife and I have lost two children; for your Dorry was as dear to us as our own child." And inclosed in it was little Dorry's own last letter, full of fun and merriment.

"Dear wee Parent—Did I not always say we were a jolly family? Nora giving concerts, Lizbeth editress, and I packing up to go home; and so well and strong—prettier, too, they tell me, than I used to be. How do you like to hear that, Nora? Two belles in the family, not counting Bet, who would scorn the name of belle, of course—unless we called her Belles-Lettres. (A little touching up might make a really good pun of this.)

"Dearies, how happy I am!—too happy, I sometimes think. I ought to be a little sad, for they are so good to me here. Mother, you're not jealous, are you, that, after you and the girls, I love this Russian mother, this Russian father? They have treated me like their own daughter. But I am eldest here, and at home I'm youngest. I've been playing grown-up so long that I want to be a child again, my mother's youngest.

"Dear ones, how I've looked forward to this month, this week; and now I'm, oh, so happy. If you knew how the sun is shining, and the river is shining. Here I must stop writing, for I am off to bathe in the Dnieper, where I shall think of the Danube, and that in a week I shall be sailing up it to my home.

"Darlings, be a jolly family!

"Your own happy, happy

"DORRY."

"Why don't you read it, Nora?"

"I can't, mother."

The mother took it, dried her tears and read it, the merry letter with the girlish laughter running through it. And the child was never more to see the Danube. Buried by the Dnieper, in the far-off steppes, she was never more to see her home. The little worker was laid to rest forever, when her task was just done. Had any one kissed the brave little woman before they laid her to rest? Had any one thought how she came to be so far from home, the young, bright girl—that she had worked when others play, had nobly sacrificed the sweetest part of life? Had any one stroked the soft, dark curls, and kissed the girl for her mother? Surely; for she had met with love in Russia.

A white marble cross, surmounting a block of rose granite, marks Dorry's resting place—a tribute erected to her memory by the parents of her pupil.

It is very silent in the Russian churchyard, but sometimes a peasant pauses by the grave of the young English girl, and in his simple language mutters a prayer for her, because of her loving ways toward him and his when she used to roam the village, and, in broken Russian, speak to the villagers; and because he pities the child laid to rest in his home, so far from the home of her people; though the "little father" has said that the dead have all one home, and are equally near to their people, wherever their last earthly resting place may be.

And the "little father" in Russia is the village priest, and what he says is wise and good.

CHAPTER XX.

"It is a miserable condition of human nature, this need of distraction, and even though Providence willed that so man should be, that he might bear death; how often amid these same distractions do we not feel ourselves seized by remorse that we are capable of them, whilst a touching and resigned voice seems to say to us: You whom I loved, have you then forgotten me?"

Those are beautiful words, by a woman. None but a woman could, perhaps, write so.

Who are the dead that are so cruel?

"Great and pure affections," says another French writer—not a woman, "have always that good, that, after the happiness of having experienced them, there remains the happiness of remembering them."

There is more of poetry in Madame de Stael's words, but more of truth in Alexandre Dumas'.

A year had passed since that terrible day that brought the news of Dorry's death. Her sisters had not changed perceptibly. They were dressing, and had laid aside their mourning for the first time.

Whilst they dressed they talked—as girls talk.

"I wonder is Dorry looking at us now, Nora, and reproaching us?" Elizabeth said, and her lips quivered.

"Dorry?" Nora smiled. "Why, dearie, I can never think of her but as bidding us not mourn. Don't you remember her great word in all our times of sorrow: 'Cheer up, dearies, and be a jolly family?' Why imagine her changed now? Do you not think from her grave in the far-off steppes she cries to us every day: 'Cheer up, dearies, and be a jolly family?' And we are often jolly, Lizbeth" (with girlish truthfulness); "we have often laughed since she died, and sometimes I think she laughs with us. I could never think of Dorry turned selfish, and reproaching us in our moments of happiness with forgetting her—she whom we can never, never forget, though we shall often laugh again, I'm sure. Don't you think she would like to see us in pretty, bright dresses again? I think she would, and would have found our tarnished crape look 'poor,' dear, funny little Dorry!"—and a big tear rolled down the speaker's cheek, despite her smile; but the tear was dried, and the smile remained, as she heard her mother approach, and Nora kissed her gayly.

Some women can smile when the heart is bleeding; such are born comforters. Nora was one of these. Tears are for the most part selfish; there is always some one to be gay for. No stern voice whispered here: "You whom I loved, have you then forgotten me?"

The girl in the steppes was not forgotten. The dead must not needs be forgotten because the living are remembered.

"Sometimes I think she laughs with us," Nora had said.

Perhaps she did. It is sad to think of our dear ones turning into grim, reproachful specters—sweeter to think of them as we knew them in life, a little idealized, perhaps; better still, not idealized at all.

To Nora, Dorry remained the droll, droll child, with her aversion to things looking "poor," with her pet speech that might have been more elegantly worded, had Dorry been in the least an "elegant" young lady, which Dorry was not:

Cheer up, dearies, and be a jolly family.

CHAPTER XXI.

"I have no objection to our leaving Dublin for the Continent, Mrs. O'Brien. All I say is, pay for trunks I will not—not one farthing."

Mr. O'Brien was evidently in earnest. Mrs. O'Brien's trunks on her last trip to the Continent had cost—well, more than Mr. O'Brien was prepared to pay.

"I never meant to take trunks with us," said that lady now; "the expense they were to us last year was terrible."

"Yes, me dear" (softening a little).

"More than terrible, it was scandalous!"

"It really was, Maria" (seating himself).

"I mean to say, it was infamous—perfectly infamous!"

"When were you thinking we should go, me dear?" By this time Mr. O'Brien's mood had become quite placid. He was a passionate man, but Mrs. O'Brien knew how to avoid a storm. After an act of extravagance her custom was to outdo him in the matter of inveighing. It is not a bad system.

"As soon as ever you are ready, Mr. O'Brien. As we are to take no trunks with us, there will be no packing."

Four days afterward an Irish family, consisting of Mr. O'Brien, their three daughters and their son, stood on the Flushing platform, each member of the party, excepting Mr. O'Brien, senior, being equipped with two large carpet bags, or, as an Irish porter had called them, "carpet trunks."

"Morgoret, me dear," said Mrs. O'Brien, addressing her eldest daughter, a tall, angular girl, who was literally bowed beneath the weight suspended from her arms: "You corry them as if they were heavy. Shorlot, you are not giggling, I hope."

Shorlot, otherwise Charlotte, was the second Miss O'Brien. Something in her mother's remark to her sister had evidently tickled her sense of the comical. She was giggling.

"Where's Gurldine?" continued Mrs. O'Brien. "Gurldine! Gurldine!"

Alas, Geraldine had found her burden more than she could bear, and, dropping a bag on each side of her, had herself dropped between them, and there remained a pitiful representation of sorrow, aged eight.

"Horry, go and rouse ner up!"

In another minute the young man was beside her.

"But, Horry, you can't carry four!" said Geraldine.

"Yes, I can, Gerry; come along."

Meanwhile a porter had walked up to the ladies, and asked in German:

"What class?"
